THE STORM AT PENSACOLA.

Wind Moving at the Velocity of 100 Miles an Hour.

A severe wind storm from the gulf passed between Pensacola and Mobile Tuesday.

The wind at Pensacola at 11;30 a. m. reached seventy-two miles an hour, then lulled and shifted to the northwest, and raised to 100 miles an hour. Nearly every business house in Pensacola was unroofed and the contents damaged. The Merchants' hotel on Palafox street and the Methodist church were unroofed. Some small houses were blown down and trees uprooted everywhere, so that the streets are impassable and last night were in darkness.

In the harbor vessels dragged their anchors, and were driven hither and thither against wharves and other crafts. The steamers kept away by using their steam. The Swedish bark Svea, the Norwegian bark Johan Ludwig and the Italian brig Deadoni are ashore hard and fast. The yacht Annie M. lies one mile from shore in 18 feet of water. The tug Nellie Keyser is sunk near her wharf.

The damage in the city is about $200,000, but no life was lost. The Louisville & Nashville road east to Jacksonville is washed up in places. The nearest telegraph office reached by train is Flomaton.

Cholera in Egypt.

Since Saturday cholera has made its appearance among the British troops at Wady Halfa, in Egypt. Four new cases and four deaths from the disease are reported.

The health authorities at Dantzig on Tuesday made an official certification to a case of genuine Asiatic cholera in that city.

LATE TELEGRAPH NEWS.

M. Bookman Craig, a young gentleman who moved from Columbia, S. C., to Jacksonville, Fla., about a year ago, returned Thursday from his native city, bringing with him his bride, having been secretly married last Christmas and kept the affair from family and friends until he was ready to bring his bride to their new home.

A negro named Johnson broke into the section-house at Boca Ratones, the other day, and almost stole it bare. He was apprehended, and received a jail sentence of ninety days.

Fire broke out at 11 o'clock Wednesday night in the rear of Cohen & Peyren's paint shop, on Main street, San Luis Obispo, Cal. The water supply was inadequate. The Central hotel, adjoining the paint shop, was burned to the ground. The Hutchins block, occupied by Puig Bros for a liquor store, a large frame building abutting the Hutchins block, the Bell photograph gallery, the Henderson block and the Brooks block were also burned. The loss is estimated at $250,000.

The latest estimate of damage in and near Pensacola, Fla., by the great storm on the Gulf, including shipping, city losses and losses of timber, fruit and farm products in the county, is from $600,000 to $800,000. The fruit and farm products in the county are a total loss and it is estimated that 30 per cent of the best timber in the county is down.

Its destination wa Logan, Ia., which was reached abou 10 a. m, and the day had been pleas antly spent. About 7 o'clock the jour ney homeward was commenced. Th train had hardly passed the limits o the city and was rounding a curv when "down brakes" was whistled an then came a crash. The excursio train had been run into by a fast freight known as No. 38 and all the coaches were ditched. The engineers and firemen of bo h engines jumped and both crews escaped without injury. The conductor of the freight train says he was running on orders and that the excursion was not. The engineer and fireman of the excursion train disappeared after the collision, and this lends color to the story as told by the freight conductor.

Alabama Iron Market.

The iron market is still very dull. No. 1 founday is selling at less than $8.50, which is the basis of the miners contract in the Birmingham district. There are few calls for quotations, and orders are not coming in. Iron is stagnant with no upward turn in sight. The yards are still full of the product and demand is far behind the supply.

Fine Crops—Superfine Hogs.

Fayette county crops are fine. Corn is earing well and cotton has a good weed, and in some parts of the county is the best ever grown in Fayette. Bud Cannon has imported from Ohio a pair of the finest hogs ever seen in West Alabama. They are the O. I. C. stock, about one year old and weigh over 400 pounds each.

She Remembered the Poor.

Mrs. Mitchell, who died recently near Birmingham left a will in which she made several gifts, and among them was $100 for the Charity hospital of this city. The total amount of property left did not come up to the amount of the gifts and they had to be prorated. The Charity hospital will receive $87, which amount the ladies of the Hillman hospital will receive on application.

Ambush and Slaughter.

Fannie Browning shot and fatally wounded James Partlow of Sheffield in Florence Friday. The shooting was done at the Browning woman's house. Partlow was entering the house when the woman, who was concealed under the steps, shot him. He ran several hundred yards after being shot three times. The woman claims the shooting was a mistake and that she took Partlow for another man. Partlow was taken to Sheffield today and will die. The woman is under arrest.

Unfortunate Accident.

News reached Huntsville Wednesday night of a very sad and unfortunate accident to the little 5-year-old son of John M. Hampton, near Meridianville Tuesday afternoon, cutting off his right leg by a mowing machine. Mr Hampton was mowing tall weeds near his house and his little son followed him, without his knowledge, and was concealed by the high weeds. A messenger for medicine reported the little fellow doing as well as could be expected under the circumstances.

Mehaffey's Fatal Fall.

Mr. W. H. Mehaffey, a carpenter employed at the car wheel works on Seventh street, Birmingham, died Saturday morning at the Hillman infirmary from the effect of a fall from a scaffold Friday afternoon. He, with some others, were erecting an overhead trolley when he fell, striking on his head and back. Drs. Copeland and Berry attended the injured man, but pronounced the wounds fatal. All that was possible to alleviate his sufferings was done, but to no effect and death relieved him of his sufferings. He lived at 2416 Avenue C and leaves a wife and daughter.

Florence Water Works.

The water works deal, by which the city of Florence is to purchase from the bondholders the water works plant for $125,000, is settled, so far as the city is concerned. The city council and the owners of the water works have reached an agreement which is satisfactory to both, and the papers for the formal transfer are being prepared. The deal now hinges upon the action of the legislature, which will have to authorize the issue of bonds by the city to purchase the plant. The matter will be presented to the legislature at its next session, and it is thought the issue will be authorized.

Coal Market Encouraging.

The mines are putting out a fair amount of coal for the usually dull season. The coal market is in comparatively good shape. There is demand for the supply. The turn at the mines this week was about the same as last. Orders are coming in for domestic and steam coal for delivery during the last of the month and later on. There is quite a tendency to improve. By the end of the month coal will be much more active and the miners, who are getting an advance of 2½ cents a ton by the new contract, will begin to enjoy the advance.

Mobile as a Coaling Port.

At a meeting of the Quarantine Board of Mobile bay Wednesday Captain Danner brought to the attention of the board that there are three coaling ports on the Atlantic coast where vessels from Galveston and other ports touch for bunker coals en route to Europe, and that inducements should be offered to such vessels to call at Mobile for their bunker coals, which could be gotten there more cheaply than at the coaling ports referred to. In order to do this it would be necessary to reduce the port charges somewhat. He had been to see the pilots and they all had agreed to remit one-half of their fees to such vessels. The only other charge was the fee for quarantine inspection, and he asked the board if such vessels could not be put on the same footing as the vessels in the fruit trade, and charge them $7.50 for inspection.

After some discussion of the matter, Commissioner Sage moved, and it was adopted, that all steamers calling at Mobile port for their bunker coals only shall be charged an inspection fee of $7.50, and that this is not to apply to steamers coming there for any kind of cargo.

One to Ten.

Deputy United States Marshal Peter Kroger arrived at Jacksonville, Fla., Saturday morning from Ocala with George N. Thompson, a poung white man from Gainesville. Thompson was arrested in Gainesville on a charge of altering, raising and passing a bill issued by the United States as currency. He raised a $1 bill to make it appear to be $10. After being arrested he was taken before United States Commissioner David S. Williams at Ocala, and there pleaded guilty. In default of bail in the sum of $1,000 he was committed to the Duval county jail to await the action of the grand jury next December. Thompson acknowledges that he did wrong, and says he believes that he ought to be punished for his violation of the law. He will no doubt ask permission to come before the court at the present term and plead guilty and be sentenced.

Though Baron Maurice de Hirsch was of distinguished ancestry and the inheritor of great wealth, his memory will be revered for what he was and what he did. The world cannot but admire the genius of a man who had his phenomenal grasp of great affairs who could seize opportunities before they were conceived by the ordinary mind, and who could go unerringly to the accomplishment of stupendous undertakings in which millions were involved. But it was not this rare power that insures the lasting fame of Baron Hirsch. The true nobility of the man appeared in his intense sympathy for the poor, the unfortunate and the oppressed, which found eloquent expression in the gift of millions for their relief. He was a munificent giver, but without ostentation and without thought less worthy than that of ameliorating the condition of his afflicted race. His philanthropy was on the same magnificent scale as his operations in the business world and the ability that guided the one was only outshone by the unselfish charity that prompted the other. The death of his son may have been the chastening affliction that stirred the heart of the father to deeds of mercy and humanity; but the man who could be so moved possessed all the innate virtues so admired in the career of the dead baron. The man who would give forty millions to one good cause and make two continents the beneficiaries of his bounty, deserved all the prosperity that came to him, and left a lesson for the rich men of the world should take to themselves. There could be no greater worldly happiness than he enjoyed in the consciousness of duty done and the blessings his charity invoked.

PUBLIC SCHOOL SYSTEM.

Third Paper by Prof. Edward L. Patton, of Eutaw.

RECAPITULATION OF ITS NEEDS.

Reasons for Compulsory Education. There Should be a Fixed Curriculum—Teachers Over-worked and Under-paid—Higher Standard of Teachers—Teachers' Institutes.

In order that the thread of the context of my second paper may be understood in the continuance of this one it is necessary to recapitulate the needs as has been before stated.

1. Our people need arousing in educational interest.
2. We need more money.
3. Our public school laws need a thorough revision.
4. We need less politics in school districts.
5. We need more professional teachers.
6. We need less three months schools, more longer terms.
7. We need a compulsory educational law.
8. We need a law that will permit taxation for educational purposes.
9. We need a common school curriculum, with the following studies: Reading, writing, spelling, arithmetic, geography, history, physiology, grammar, including language lessons, elementary algebra and elementary science.
10. We need a better financial system of payment for our teachers.
11. We need better pay for our teachers.
12. We need better protection for our teachers.
13. We need for our teachers to obligate themselves to teach two years for a second grade certificate and four years for a first grade.
14. We need a regular grade established for all of our common schools.
15. Our laws should be obligatory upon teachers to attend institutes and our state association, unless a reason exist that could conscientiously and honestly be rendered for non-attendance.

Most of the sections previously given have already been explained, but I wish to enlarge just a little upon the seventh, why we need a compulsory law. It is an actual fact that we have people in our state who have not common sense enough to send their children to school. They do not realize that God gave them children to care for, protect, love and educate. They seem to think that their children were given them to support and work for them while they, the parents, remain in idleness. There are many parents in different avocations of life who compel their children to support or help support them at an age entirely too early. I have known of farmers that compelled their boys from 13 years up to work, when their place should have been in school. While the father did no work at all, or very little anyway. I have known of parents compelling their little girls and boys from 6 years of age up to work in a mill to support them while their lazy, able-bodied fathers loafed. We certainly need a compulsory educational law. For if parents won't realize that their children are not given them to earn a support for parents there should be a law that would compel them to know what their duty is toward their children. Os course I do not mean that a child, when of the proper age, should not be taught to work, or should be raised in idleness, but it should not be done at the expense of its education—of its God-given rights.

Now for the ninth section. We need a curriculum; there is a great need for a regular commen school course to be established. In many places you will find one or perhaps two pupils who wish and may be prepared to study either algebra, latin, Greek or geometry. It is frequently the case that a teacher has to devote a part of his or her time to the teaching of one, two and sometimes three of these studies. It is just so much time taken from other pupils who need and should have the teacher's attention. But by the laws of the state the teacher must use the time to teach whatever is desired. In many instances the teacher is perfectly capable, in others not. Sometimes inexperienced, or unqualified teachers will essay to teach these branches and bring diiscredit to the profession, does himself or herself no good and results in injury to the pupil and dissatisfaction to the parents. Then again in this time and day when men and women make a specialty of studies mentioned how can the teacher of the public school be up in all of them. There are many small country places that want a college president and all the faculty combined in one man. Yet they are dissatisfied because the teacher fails to fulfill the position and teach all branches desired. The state laws permit such. Requirements of the people desire it. One evil resulting is too many teachers are smattering in their attainments and not thorough enough in the branches necessary for a common school education. Another evil is the teacher, in many instances, if entirely capable to teach a few studies well, cannot give satisfaction to patrons or do full justice to pupils with so much to do. The consequence is the frequent changing of teachers is frequently to the discredit of the capable teacher's ability. It is also hurtful to the pupils. I firmly believe this is one cause of so many teachers changing place every year. Still another evil exists from not having a curriculum. Many will essay to teach who know nothing about algebra, latin, geometry or Greek, still to obtain the position they will attempt it.

10th section. We need a better system of payment for our teachers. This has been referred to before, but just a little more. Our teachers should be paid monthly and not be compelled to wait three months and in many instances longer. Many states pay teachers of the common schools monthly. Why not Alabama?

11th section. One of our great needs is better pay for our teachers. Why do people want to send their children to ill paid teachers, paid so little that they can hardly live. They have no money to spend in improvement. Want to pay teachers some pitiful sum that is not as much as a day laborer earns. Yet so many people want to employ cheap teachers, then expect good work.

12th section. We need better protection for our teachers. That is a better way for their money to made more secure. In many cases a suppleiment fee is charged in addition to the public money. It is quite frequent that the teacher loses a part of this through no fault of his own. Many teachers enter into a contract or rather an agreement with sincerity, and honesty of purpose. Yet so many times the teacher is compelled to lose a portion of the salary simply because he has no recourse to appeal to, there is no law that gives the teacher protection In many cases they are deprived of the money due. I know this to be true for I have money due me for a school taught four years ago, though I held a waive note I found nothing to waive. I know others who have met the same treatment.

13th section. We need for our teacherf to obligate themselves to teach two years for a fourth grade certificate and four years for a first grade.

This should be done for many reasons. One is that it will give us a better standard of teachers. Another it will cause teachers to better prepare themselves for teaching. It will be beneficial in many ways.

14th section. A regular grade of study should be established.

15th section. Our laws should be obligatory upon teachers to attendance of institutes and the state association. We have about 4,000 white teachers in the state, yet the attendance is only 100 to 150 teachers. We certainly should have a large attendance with that number of teachers. I shall deal more at length upon some sections given in another article.

At the recent Teacher's association held in Talladega, the enrollment was about 200, one of the largest ever had. Yet, notwithstanding this, that is hardly one-half of 1 per cent of all the white teachers in the state. We most assuredly should have a larger attendance. There should be some basis upon which more teachers should attend this association. Some of the causes for non-attendance may be found in the list of needs for Alabama Articles five and eleven for instance.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE IN NASHVILLE

An Entire Square in Ashes—Colored Fireman Fatally Injured.

A destructive fire visited Nashville at 12:30 Saturday, originating on the fourth floor of Rosenheim's retail dry goods store. It spread so rapidly that the interior of the establishment was gutted before the entire department was in operation. It quickly communicated to adjacent buildings, and, favored by the wind, the entire square, bounded by College, Deadrick, Church and Cedar streets, was soon in flames, and the efforts of the department were bent to confining the fire within the square. In this they were successful, but not until many handsome structures, including the Duncan and Commercial hotels on opposite sides of the streets, had been scorched and blistered and plate glass windows shattered. Not less than thirty-five business houses were destroyed, entailing a loss which conservative insurance adjusters say will approximate $300,000.

There were several casualties and numerous hair breadth escapes incident to the heroic fight of the firemen. Capt. W. M. Demoss, a brave colored fireman, and W. M. Silver, a member of his company, were cut off by a falling wall and borne down under a pile of debris. A shudder went through the crowd. They were thought to have perished. A few moments later they issued from the smoking ruins, Silver with no further injuries than a few bruises and cuts, Demoss is thought to be fatally hurt. Capt. Reuben Richard, colored, was seriously cut by fragment of plate glass. Several firemen fainted from over exertion and heat.

Mysterious Jail Delivery.

It is said that a negro accused of rape, and another accused of murder, escaped from the jail at Cusetta, in Chattahoochee county, Ga., on Wednesday night. Anyway, their cells were found empty, and no one appears to know how the two prisoners happened to turn up missing.

OUR COUNTRY'S COMMERCE.

As Observed and Reported by R. G. Dun & Co.

NOT MANY FAILURES REPORTED.

The Action of the Chicago Convention Fails to Excite Wall Street, But Stocks Still Have a Downward Trend—The Cotton Crop, Prints, Iron.

Failures of the week have been 215 in the United States, against 253 last year and 39 in Canada, against 35 last year. With a political convention in progress directly antagonistic the position taken on the money question by the convention of last month, it is natural that there has been with many uncertainty about the future to intensify the dullness expected at this season. Wall street exhibited no excitement, though stocks were weaker on Thursday and closed lower for the week, 25 cents per share for railways and trusts, 18 points; nor were there signs of alarm in the speculative market or money circles. But in stocks and other business the week was one of waiting, with a somewhat prevalent feeling of insecurity.

Serious apprehension regarding injury by drouth to cotton in Texas seemed justified by some dispatches published last week, so that telegraphic advice of a somewhat general rain in the state is welcome. Whether it is in season or sufficient to insure a satisfactory yield cannot be definitely known, nor the extent of injury said to have been done by excessive rains in some Atlantic states. But with the large increase acreage a yield of at least fair proportions seems to be probable, and in view of heavy stocks carried on mills and markets here and abroad, mills closing quite extensively to permit lightening of accumated stocks of goods, a large yield could hardly prove beneficial to the producers.

Large sales of print cloth are reported at 2 1/8 cents, slightly above the bottom price. but other goods have not yet been strengthened. Nor have woolen goods improved, but the tone is rather less hopeful and the demand for goods is even more slack than was expected.

Not much can be said of a market so flat as that of iron and steel products, but part of the inactivity is strictly seasonable, part is due to still unsettled questions about wages and much more to a general disposition to defer orders until the future is clearer. Whether prices for finished products are too high or not they average, relatively at least, 10 per cent higher than prices of pig iron, which necessarily causes inaction when pig is going lower. Bessemer fell this week to $12 at Pittsburg and gray forge to $10, but some contracts of importance have been placed. One for 7,000 to 8,000 tons for a new building on Park row and another for 13,000 tons of cast pipe for Fifth avenue is pending. Quotations for finished products are not lower, but are somewhat cut.

THROUGH SPANISH CHANNELS.

News of Spanish Triumphs Over Cuban Patriots Comes.

Four Spanish warships, in conjunction with the land forces under command of Colonel Seamora on June 29, attacked the rebels who held possession of Taco and Naguareje bays, near Baracoa. After sharp fighting the rebels were dislodged from their positions. The rebels lost seven men killed, and the Spanish captured four boats belonging to them and destroyed their camps, plantations, etc. The Spanish losses are not stated.

General Ochoa upon receiving the information that a filibustering expedition would attempt to land on the coast near Jaruco, in the province of Havana, left his camp with 170 men for the purpose of preventing the filibusters from getting ashore. During his march he was harassed by rebel bands, which tried to intercept him and prevent his reaching the coast. With these parties General Ochoa had a number of engagements, in which the fighting was of the fiercest character. The rebels made a strong defense of their positions and the firing was mostly done at close range. While storming one of the rebel's positions General Ochoa was wounded, though not seriously. The rebels, who were commanded by the leaders, Montero and Valenica, lost thirty-six killed and three wounded, and nine of them were taken prisoners. Among the killed were a number of foreigners. In addition to these rebel losses, the Spaniards, when they reached the coast, captured seven prisoners from the expedition they had gone to intercept. The troops also captured thirty-one rifles, a great many machetes and 6,000 cartridges. The Spanish loss was eight wounded.

Anarchistic Proceeding.

A state of affairs amounting almost to panic, prevails in certain districts of the mountain county of Warren, Tenn. A communication signed "The Mob," printed in a paper at the county seat, McMinnville, made the startling declaration that fifteen citizens of the fourth, fifth and sixth civil districts, were marked men, and would soon meet the fate of Arling Miller, who was lately found hanging to a tree on the highway. His murderers were supposed to be moonshiners, against whom he had lodged information. Four lynchings, the victims being generally farmers, have occurred in Warren in the past three months.

The Gold Reserve.

Gold withdrawals Saturday amounted to $124,300, leaving the reserve at the close of business at $99,033,996.

A MINISTER'S WIFE.

The Frank Statement of the Pastor of Bethel Church.

From the Advertiser, Elmira, N. Y.

DR. WILLIAMS.—Dear Sir:—My wife has been a sufferer from rheumatism for more than three years, suffering at times with terrible pains in her limbs, and other times with a severe "crick" in her back which causes great agony. She spent much for physicians and medicine, but secured only temporary relief; finally she concluded to try Pink Pills. She has taken eight boxes and I can say from the first one she has improved until now she is almost entirely free from pain, and has grown much stronger and feels confident that, by the blessing of God, they will effect a permanent cure. We take great pleasure in recommending them to our friends.

(Signed.) REV. J. H. BUCKNER,
Pastor Bethel A. M. E. Church, Elmira, New York.

Indeed, the graduates of this college are in great demand as teachers and the college authorities take great pleasure in answering requests for trained teachers sent in by school authorities from all over Alabama and adjoining states.

It will be seen from the Normal Exponent that students desiring the usual college course may get it here at very low expense, too. Board is but $8 to $10 per month and tuition and incidentals low.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

A LA TRILBY.

It was a grandly glorious, balmy day in July of a past summer. There was not a cloud in the expanse of clear, deep blue sky, and the earth was bathed in a flood of golden sunshine, dispensing a genial warmth resultant from the gentle breeze prevailing from the southeast, the chill imparted by the great ocean on the south thereto, dispelled by the sweep over Long Island's sea girt lowland and monotonous forest on the Sound boundary.

The saucy little Olga swung on her chain in the flood tide, tugging at it as if she would be free, and dancing on the wavelets swinging her boom and rattling the rigging.

The absent flag indicated that the owner was ashore, and there was no visible indication that any one remained aboard. In the seclusion of the cabin, reposing on soft cushions of the couch, lay a guest, reading "Trilby," which kept him awake, or he might have yielded to the soothing influences and fallen asleep, fanned by the breeze down the companion way; as all the others were ashore at the pretentious hotel, in view of the open cabin door.

He was disturbed in the perusal of Du Maurier's fascinating novel by the merry voices of a party of girls on some rocks on the shore near by. There was a party of young ladies from the hotel rambling on the rocks, long the terror of yachts coming into the cove.

Satisfying themselves that there was no one aboard, these merry girls had decided to remove their shoes and stockings and paddle in the cool, clear water, with a frequent eye for the return of the yacht's boat and crew, when they would scamper back into the copse and scrub oak and resume their footgear, gleeful to escape undiscovered.

The girls enjoyed themselves greatly, until the yacht's boat was discovered putting out from the long dock of the hotel, and then they hastily gathered up their shoes and stockings and retreated like culprits into the bushes, where they remained in hiding for a reason that will appear, instead of hurrying back to the hotel.

"Had a nap, or finished 'Trilby'?" Charley asked, hurrying on deck with the painter in hand, while his man hoisted the ensign in place of the absent flag.

"No—m—neither," Jack responded, going up into the cockpit; continuing, "Any news?"

"There will be a dance at the hotel tonight," said Charley, adding," and we will all go over. What say you?"

"With pleasure," responded Jack, with a glance toward the rocks, which, of course, did not have any significance to Charley, who busied himself about the housekeeping details of the yacht.

"I think a little exercise will put me up," suddenly exclaimed Jack pulling in the small boat, into which he jumped, and placing the oars, he started toward the rocks on a voyage of discovery bent.

"Look out for those rocks!" exclaimed Charley, adding, "They rise like shelves and you'll be onto them before you know."

"I know 'em," called Jack, as the boat under his vigorous pulls shot toward the shore.

He carefully picked his way into a safe landing place, and, jumping out, he secured the painter to a large loose stone, and started into the underbrush, without discovering a trace of the girls, as the soft white sand retained the impression of their steps no longer than water would have done. The girls were fleeing down the road, in the shelter of a corn field, in great apprehension of discovery and pursuit by the yachtsmen, who are notoriously bold and sailor like, always alert for adventure. They sought the seclusion of an old weather-beaten, abandoned fisherman's shanty, where they remained in hiding, their dear hearts beating as if to burst all bounds in excitement over the adventure, so entirely unpremeditated.

Jack, however, had no idea of intruding on them, and consequently did not follow the girls, or he would certainly have been amused at the predicament of one of them, and have gladly availed himself of the opportunity to render her gallant service.

Returning to the rocks, he paused to view the magnificent panorama of shore, wood, water and field, embellished by browsing cattle, handsome cottages and sailing craft, with now and then a resounding steamboat on the Sound, when he was recalled from his reverie by the stentorian voice of Charley, shouting;

"Ship-ahoy! Come aboard!"

His glance lowered to the water line, he discovered in a shelf-like crevice of the rocks a pair of small, neat russet pumps, which undoubtedly had been left by their fair owner in her flight on the approach of the boat.

His first impulse was to capture as a trophy this pair of pumps, and then that he would mark them for the purpose of future identification. He divined he would never discover the fair owner by taking them to the hotel and enacting a Cinderella-like comedy of having them tried on by all the girls until he found the right one, and decided to mark them, and for this purpose he took them to the yacht, where he interested his comrades by telling the story.

It chanced that the sailing master was somewhat of a chemist, a Norwegian of good education, and of the several plans suggested for identifying the shoes, his was adopted.

He suggested that a daub of phosphorus be made on the rear of each heel, which would not attract attention in the daylight but which would be luminous at night. Shrewder than the rest of us, he suggested that the shoes be returned to the rocks, to be found there by the fair owner, who would undoubtedly return for them if we went away on a sail. We all agreed she would never claim the shoes if we left them at the hotel desk to be restored to the owner.

In a few minutes the mainsail was hoisted, and the jib flung out and the Olga glided away like a bird before a good breeze that put her starboard bow in the water.

I took a station on the after deck, glass in hand, and watched the shore, and particularly the rocks. Sure enough, as soon as the Olga left the scene and the coast was literally clear, I espied a bevy of girls emerge from the cornfield and hasten along the shore to the rocks to recover the missing shoes. In the group I could not discern which one appropriated them, as they kept well together for mutual protection, but I could hear their merry shouts of success.

After a spin on the Sound the Olga was once again anchored off the rocks, out of the channel, a little bit calmed it seemed to me, by her sailing, but still restive as if anxious to be off again. To me a yacht often seems to be imbued with the animation and nature of a bird, like a living thing, restless, ambitious, chafing under the restraint of the chain, like a mettled steed in his stall waiting to be out.

The day wore away all too slowly for us, pleasant as was the scene and weather, as all shared my curiosity to discover the owner of those two small shapely pumps. What if she did not wear them at the hop? Perish the thought, for the summer girl always wears her cosey comfortable russets.

We went ashore after a delightful little dinner on deck, that is, in the cockpit under the awning. It seemed that the shades of night would never fall over the earth and envelop all in the darkness necessary for the success of our discovery. The sun, a large, red, fiery orb, never sank so slowly. His iridescent rays never lingered longer in the horizon. There was an illuminating glow in the pink-tinted and purple sky longer than usual. I don't believe that the hotel manager ever indulged before in such a general lighting of his lamps and swaying Chinese lanterns.

But finally it was dark, a fact proclaimed by the locusts and the frogs and the katydids, and there was a general assembling of promenaders on the grand piazza, preparatory to the dance in the dining room, that was being actively cleared by the colored servants of its tables and chairs, after a hasty dinner.

Pretty girls in charming white and colored linen attire of the most fetching designs, trooped down the broad central stairs or across the spacious lawn from the cottages, as gleesome and noisy as mere children. Oh! this joyousness of innocent, unvexed youth!

Although all of us were on the qui vive, the crowd was so close that for a long time, and an anxious time, there was no chance for a revelation of the tell tale phosphorus. But perseverance is always rewarded, and ours was after the dancing began, and the only ones on the piazza were promenaders who came out between the numbers for a breathing spell of the cool night air.

One of the prettiest little blondes I had then ever seen—well, now I think the prettiest in the world—was discovered by our trick to be the owner of those russets, which I am sure were as small, if not smaller than Cinderella's. Such pretty little shoes could only belong to a perfect Venus, with her roguish blue eyes, flowing golden tresses, sweet musical mouth, saucy dignity and girlish grace.

Of course Jack sought an introduction, but, of course, he did not tell her his secret until—well until he was accepted by her later in the fall.

They are married now, and the shoes are preserved in a glass case in his bureau, which bears the significant but inappropriate inscription, "A la Trilby."—Vanity.

Making a Child Sit Up.

It is a gross mistake which many mothers make to constantly command a child to "sit up," without ever having explained the reason why. We must remember that a child's judgment is so immature that it cannot fully foresee the effects of such habits, and for this season we should make our illustrations so vivid, our lessons so simple, so numerous and variable that they will become indelibly fixed. Remember our constant aim must be to make an impression which shall remain with them while they are absent from us as well as when we are with them, otherwise we shall gain no headway.

Not a few children inherit physical weakness, and in such instances an appeal to the will power alone will not be successful. How important it becomes, then, that we use every discreet and commendable means to build up a strong body, and by no relaxation of our vigilance allow any such habits to become established.—New York Leger.

As to Eating.

Maximus, the emperor of Rome, was able to eat a whole quarter of an ox at one meal.

Beets are among the most difficult vegetables to be digested, requiring nearly four hours.

Men of great size do not always have stomachs in proportion to their height or weight.

Vinegar taken with food greatly delays and sometimes entirely prevents proper digestion.

A man from 50 to 70 years of age needs only two-thirds of the food required for a workingman.

Cocoa is believed to have no effect either in promoting or retarding the digestion of other food.

Condiments and stimulants are not really foods. They are simply whips to appetite or digestion.

Impossible.

"Do I understand you to say that this man never made a statement that wasn't true?"

"That was what I said."

The questioner laughed long and loud.

"Impossible," he said. "Absurd! Preposterous! Why, he's a government weather prophet."—Chicago Post.

Hard Lines.

"I expect to be in terrible suspense until next Fall."

"How so?"

"My wife just informed me that she had bet a new hat on the election."—Puck.

HOW THE CLOVERS GO TO BED.

The great round sun is sleepy
And wants to go to bed;
So he hides his face so shiny
Behind a kerchief red.
Then all the little clovers
That dot the velvet lawn
Begin to nod their tiny heads
And tie their nightcaps on.

The moon comes up a-tiptoe
To kiss the dears good-night,
And she brings a little cloudlet
To shield their eyes from light.
Good night, you winsome clovers,
All snug in grassy beds;
You'll dream of sleepy bumblebees
Who sing about your heads.

THE BUGLE ON MEN-OF-WAR.

Many of you know what an important part the bugle plays in military operations on shore; how it assembles vast bodies of men, deploys them for battle, regulates their fire and sounds the charge which even dumb animals understand and obey, in a desperate rush for victory. The voice of the commander gives the order; but since his voice can reach only those near him, the bugle takes it up, and carries it in piercing notes to the most distant ear.

So, too, on board of a man-of-war the bugle is used to make an order penetrate the utmost parts of the ship from deck to hold, from stem to stern, and from quarterdeck to masthead. From morning till night it is calling officers and men to routine duties, and in battle it is directing nearly every movement and inspiring them to their utmost endeavor.—St. Nicholas.

TWO BOYISH WARRIORS.

It was only a little shepherd boy, you will remember, who delivered the Israelites from the hands of the Philistines, and saved his nation in a time of serious peril. The youth David went out alone and almost empty handed, when all the warriors of the army were afraid, and he slew the great giant Goliath of Gath, whose height, the Bible tells us, was six cubits and a span. This boy was a born fighter, for, before he slew the giant, he had killed a bear and a lion, when they tried to steal his father's sheep.

But in later times, as well, there have been several young warriors who made great names for themselves, such, for instance, as Alexander, who won the battle of the Granicus at twenty-two years of age. The great Napoleon was a lieutenant of artillery before he was eighteen, and a young man when he commanded the armies of Italy. Think of it!—at the age when our West Point cadets are graduated, this young Corsican had held an important command in the French armies, winning victories and laying the foundation of the most famous military career the world has ever seen.—St. Nicholas.

A BOY KILLS AN ANGRY BEAR.

It was in September—and the Colorado sun had done its duty and made Phil as brown of face and stout of limb as any of us—that the geology class, consisting of the professor and ten pupils, made an excursion into the range with the object of taking a practical lesson among the limestone beds at the back of Lincoln park.

Away we went, feeling very hilarious at the idea of making an independent expedition, even with Blinkers for a general, scrambling over rocks and fallen trees, chasing squirrels and chipmunks, throwing stones at birds and rabbits, and behaving generally just like what we were—a parcel of school boys.

Presently we emerged from the trees and came out upon another little open park-like stretch of ground. Half way across it our attention was suddenly attracted by a stir among some high grass, and out jumped a little, dark-colored, short-legged animal, which looked like a wooly pig—if there be any such thing in nature.

Away it scuttled, and away we all went, with a shout, in pursuit.

Phil happened to be some distance behind at the moment, being busily engaged in digging a tarantula's nest out of the ground with his knife; but as soon as he saw what we were doing, he came racing after us, shouting, "Look out! Look out! It's a— "

We did not hear what, we were making so much noise ourselves.

But the little animal, whatever it was, was too quick for us and disappeared into some willows while we were still twenty yards behind. The next moment the willows waved and bent and out bounced a great she-bear—a grizzly!

With a yell of dismay we all turned and, scattering like a flock of sparrows when a cat jumps into the midst of them, fled for the nearest trees. Blinkers, quite forgetting that he was the general of the little expeditionary force, made such use of his long legs that he was safely up a tree before any one of the rest of us had reached one.

As for me, I never reached one at all.

In turning to run I tripped over the ax, and though I was up again in an instant, the check made me the last of the fugitives.

The chase was very soon over. In six jumps, as it seemed, the great beast caught me, and, with one blow of her paw on the middle of my back, sent me, face downward, to the ground, with every atom of breath driven out of my body.

This last circumstance was a good thing for me; I could not have moved a muscle if I had wished to. Consequently the bear supposed that I was dead, and instead of tearing me up into small pieces, as I expected, she began sniffing me all over and turning me about with her claws.

Suddenly, however, she ceased and began to growl, and I heard Blinkers up in his tree call out. "Go back! You can't do any good. You'll only get yourself killed, too." From which I concluded that Blinkars and the bear had one thought in common; they both supposed me to be dead.

I was beginning to recover my breath by this time, and in my anxiety to see what was going forward I made a slight movement with one arm, and in an instant the bear had that arm between his teeth. It hurt me so horribly that I fainted, and all that happened afterwards I gathered from the other boys.

Phil, when he saw me knocked down, instead of climbing up a tree like the rest, ran back to where I had dropped the ax, and picking it up, advanced to my rescue.

It was a mad thing to do, there is no doubt about that; but Phil did it—and without a thought of his own danger. It was in vain that Blinkers called to him to go back; he did not seem to hear, but kept coming on slowly, with his eyes fixed on the bear, and the ax held in readiness to strike.

The bear dropped my arm and advanced a step, standing across my body, growling and turning up her lips until all her great white teeth were exposed; but still Phil came on. At six feet distance he stopped. The bear took a step forward, and then another, and then, with all the strength of his body, doubled by the intense excitement of the moment, Phil struck at her with such force and precision that he split her skull clean in two.

But, even in dying, the bear succeeded in doing some mischief.

With a last convulsive effort she struck out, and, with her great claws, tore away the front of Phil's coat, vest and shirt, and made three deep cuts all across his chest from the left shoulder diagonally downward. Another inch and Phil must certainly have been killed. As it was, he stood for a moment swaying to and fro, and then fell forward upon the dead body of the bear.

Belting of ramie cloth coated with tar has proven successful with French machinists. It is unaffected by water, steam or acids, and tests have shown it to have twice the strength of cotton and three times that of double leather.

The Microbiological Institute at Madrid, Spain, has published statistics which show that only 10 percent of diphtheritic patients treated with the new serum died, whereas previously (from 1882 to 1891) the mortality had been 80 percent.

The board of health of St. Louis has made public the result of its official inquiry into the results of the treatment of diphtheria with antitoxine. Out 326 cases the percentage of deaths was but 4.6, while under ordinary conditions the average percentage of deaths in cases not treated with antitoxine was sixty.

An East Indian apparatus for the production of rain consists of a rocket capable of rising to the height of a mile and containing a reservoir of ether. In its descent it opens a parachute, which causes it to come down slowly. The ether is ejected in a fine spray, and its absorption of heat is said to lower the temperature in its vicinity sufficiently to condense the vapor and produce a limited shower.

Imitation hard rubber from sawdust is the subject of a German patent. The sawdust—that of resinous woods being best—is mixed with chromatized glue, pressed into the desired shape and freed from moisture in a bath of heated oil, varnish or tar. The process is completed by drying in an oven heated to 400 degrees to 600 degrees F., when the substance becomes like hard rubber in appearance as well as properties.

In One Family for a Century.

The homestead of the late Sophia Kall, at the head of Connecticut avenue, containing about ten acres, will be sold at public action. This property is one of the few parcels of real estate in the district that has remained in one family for over a century, it having been formerly owned and occupied, together with about 700 more acres, by Anthony Holmead, one of the original proprietors of the City of Washington and the grandfather of the deceased Mrs. Kall. The sale is the result of a chancery suit by certain of Mrs. Kall's heirs for the purpose of partitioning her property. The deceased owner was several times offered fabulous prices for her home, but always refused, preferring to keep it for her residence.—Washington Post.

Birds That Stole a Nest.

Nature tells a tale of a pair of rooks, evidently young birds, that strove in vain to build a nest. The wind each time blew the foundations down while the rooks, which fly far for nest materials instead of taking those close at hand, were away. At last, despairing of building a home by legitimate means, they fell upon a complete nest of another pair while the owners were absent, tore it to pieces and built a nest foundation that would stand in the wind. Then they made a superstructure in the clumsy and inexperienced way that young birds always do.

If we moved our legs proportionately as fast as an ant, it is calculated we could travel nearly 800 miles an hour.

Mr. Gladstone thinks the responsibility for Armenia now rests with Russia, since that Power, and not England, now dominates Turkey.

An attempt was recently made at Elsenthal, Germany, to see how soon a part of a tree could be converted into a newspaper. The tree was felled, reduced to pulp and paper, and after two hours and twenty-five minutes the newspaper made from it was ready for the readers.

Five hundred tons of light steel rails were recently sent from a Milwaukee (Wis.) steel works to Japan by way of Buffalo and New York. British experts say their pull with Japan is lessening.

After seeing some of the wonderful shirt waists to be worn by this year's summer girls, the Chicago Record thinks it is safe to prophesy that the havoc wrought among susceptible summer young men is going to be fearful.

It is stated "on indisreputable authority" that Maceo, the leader of the insurgent forces in Cuba, has an army of 20,000 men, well fortified in the mountains, and that among them are four companies of women soldiers, who are as effective in the field as any of his troops. It would seem entirely out of place for women to be fighting in the ranks, and to unsex them and cut them off from the sympathy of women elsewhere; but when the fact is learned that they have sought refuge from the brutality of the Spanish soldiers, it entirely changes the aspect of the case, observes the Trenton (N. J.) American. They prefer fighting on the battlefield beside their husband and brothers to being thrown into the forts at the mercy of Spanish soldiery, and they should be honored for their choice.

Governor Bushnell, of Ohio, has received a letter from Professor E. D. Cope, of the Department of Comparative Anatomy in the University of Pennsylvania, and President of the Society for the Advancement of Science, in which he deprecates the fact that Ohio is soon to adopt the electric method of executing the death sentence, which he says is a fad and a barbarism. The effect of the electric shock is, he says, uncertain and but little understood. In many cases persons have suffered severer shocks than are administered under the New York law and have recovered. The professor intimates that he thinks the persons who offered to resuscitate any of the persons executed in Auburn could do it, and would if allowed. He says there is no doubt in his mind that several of the persons electrocuted have really died from the result of the post-mortem examination.

The Detroit Free Press philosophizes about the death of Austin Corbin as follows: A grand estate comprising 40,000 acres in the scenic regions of the old Granite State. A splendid manor affording a luxurious yet restful retreat for city-weary mind and body. A retinue of servants, footmen and gamekeepers. Great stables and noble steeds, and miles and miles of riding in magnificent equipage in the shade of forest trees. Animals tame and wild roam over the vast preserve—four-footed pets from many different climes. This immense acreage, this extensive private park, and sometimes home of an owner with three others quite as pretentious in a different way to go to, and thus distribute his abundant leisure. Many millions in railway and banking stocks to turn desire into gratification, wishes into realization, and permit not a single whim to go ungranted. A life of princely opulence and imperial power; a rose-scented pathway of material success. You envy the possessor of these happiness-producing possessions, don't you? Well, you would better not. The strong man who gloried in them was thrown from his carriage last Friday and killed. If all the rocks were crystals and the seas pure gold they could not bring Austin Corbin back to his great houses, his broad lands and uncounted thousands.

Help For Howard College.

The Baptist people of Columbia gave a very entertaining concert at the court house Tuesday night, the proceeds of which went to the debt fund of Howard College, and for this help the institution is indebted to the untiring efforts of Mrs. L. G. Clark.

Tennessee River.

The Tennessee river at Decatur has fallen about four feet since Tuesday, but is still far above low water mark. Reports from Chattanooga indicate another rise. Boating on the Tennessee is active. The Pryor came into Decatur Friday with 500 bushels of corn, lumber and a lot of miscellaneous freight.

Wants Swan Lake Drained.

Mr. R. P. McEntire, an enterprising property owner, is making a praiseworthy effort to induce the counties of Limestone and Morgan and the Memphis and Charleston Railroad Company to join in defraying the expense of draining Swan lake, lying just north of Decatur, so as to reduce the water of the lake about five feet.

Fire at Woodlawn.

Friday night about 8 o'clock the general store of Mitchell & Walker at Woodlawn was found to be on fire, and despite the best efforts of those near by the house almost the entire contents were destroyed. The loss is covered by insurance. The origin of the blaze is a mystery; but it was supposed to have occurred through a spark from a cigar, pipe or cigarette.

Shot Her Husband.

Emma Morris, colored, aged 25 years, is in the Jefferson county jail. The charge is that she murdered her husband in the Blue Creek mining region last Saturday by shooting him with a pistol. Emma was brought to the county jail Monday morning by Constable Dock Parsons on a commitment from the justice court of T. M. Parsons. She brought with her in a basket a heavy billet of oak wood, with which she says her husband attacked her. She says she then shot her husband in defense of her own life.

Tells All About It.

One of the negroes arrested last week by Officers Ellard and Bodeker, of Birmingham, with a lot of pistols, razors and knives, has made a statement in which he says that the goods were stolen in a little town between Stone Mountain and Atlanta in Georgia. Postal cards have been sent to the place. Another negro named Jim Morris has been arrested on suspicion of having had some connection with the robbery. The negro who made the sratement says that the other two did the robbery while he slept alongside the railroad track.

Down to Shame and Death.

Thursday at noon in Anniston at the house of ill fame of Ida Waters, Nora Tanner, the keeper of a similar resort, and Warren P. Rouse, a young man well known about town, had a fierce fight as the result of a row between them the day before, for which Rouse was arraigned in police court Thursday morning, with the woman as a witness against him. In the fight Madame Tanner had her arm broken in two places and was fearfully beaten over the head. Rouse was shot by the woman in the left side to the hollow and through the leg, from which wounds he died six hours later, The Tanner woman may die. Rouse was the husband of an estimable woman and the father of a child.

Looking at the Pistol.

Mr, W. R. Goudlock, who has been acting as deputy sheriff at Ishkooda recently, returned to Birmingham Thursday morning. He had occasion to go into Furman's tailor shop, and while there laid his pistol on the counter. A negro picked up the pistol and while examining it broke it and took out some of the cartridges. In handing it to Mr. Goudlock he also gave him the cartridges. It seems that while the negro was looking at the pistol he cocked it, of which fact neither of them was aware. Mr. Goudlock in putting the cartridges back discharged his pistol, the ball passing through one of the negroe's hands, making an ugly wound. The negro was badly frightened for awhile. The wound was dressed by a physician.

Religious Revival.

The good people of North Birmingham have certainly provided a great religious feast for their friends. The location of the tent was fortunate. It is in a beautiful grove, with abundance of shade and spring water. During the past week three services a day have been held. Large crowds attend during the day, and from 1,200 to 1,500 at night. Additional seats for 500 more were placed yesterday. At the close of the morning service yesterday 145 persons had professed faith in Christ. Among these are some of our best citizens. Rev. R. C. George of Gadsden is assisting Dr. Wells. Mr. Stapleton of Chattanooga has charge of a choir of fifty voices.

Industrial—Talladega.

The iron furnace at Talladega, which was for several years owned and operated by the Talladega Iron and Steel company, but which has been idle for quite a while, has been sold by Capt. W. P. Armstrong, of Selma, who was its most recent owner, to the Alabama Iron and Railroad company. The transfer was made to G. A. Mattison, superintendent of the Birmingham and Atlantic Railway company, as a representative of the new company. It is said that it is the intention of the Alabama Iron and Railroad company to put the furnace in blast as soon as some badly needed repairs can be made. The furnace, which is a large one, is one of the best in the state, and was most profitably operated for a number of years. It is a comparatively new plant, and has attached to it several mines and branch railroads.

Policemen on Wheels.

Saturday evening as Officer Dishcroon, of Birmingham, was going along Twentieth street on his wheel, he heard a great commotion near the Chinese laundry between Fourth and Fifth avenues. Upon making a hasty investigation he ascertained that a negro named Henry Williams had stolen a bundle of laundry. The officer made after the negro towards Fifth avenue and caught him before he had gotten a block. This morning Judge Feagin in the inferior criminal court held the negro to bail to go before the next term of the grand jury. The officers on their wheels took up a negro named Jim Wright in Buzzard Roost who was wanted to serve out a sentence for the city. Wright was fined in a case and also bound over to the criminal court. Before working out his city fine he was turned over to the county, which dealt with him. He will now serve out the city sentence.

Increasing Postal Revenues.

In pursuance of orders issued by the postmaster general the Kansas City, Memphis and Birmingham railroad on Thursday ordered all of its agents to discontinue sending what is known as "R. R. B." mail. The other roads will probably issue similar orders within the next few days.

This matter was taken up some time ago by the postmaster general, and the result was an order commanding all roads to stamp its mail with the required postage and send it by United States mail.

The "R. R. B." mail is a big thing with all railroads, and the compelling of roads to provide all mail with proper postage will net the government a large amount of revenue.

Assistant Baggage Master Sam Moore of the union passenger station, Birmingham, states that from 5,000 to 10,000 letters are handled in that office daily, the larger per cent of the pieces being heavy letters. Thus it will be seen what amount of revenue will accrue from different points in the United States.

ANOTHER DEADLY PARALLEL.

"I am proud of my vote."—Goodwyn's Speech, Troy, Ala. Confederate Veteran—And he claims to be one of us.—From Birmingham State Herald

His Little Pistol Did It.

About 1 o'clock p. m., Saturday Allen Trumbower, a lad of 14 years, went into the country to purchase eggs for his parents, who live at Thomas, his father being weigher for the company. About 2:45 a negro man named Wallace Burt was riding along the Jasper road, about a mile from Thomas and five miles from Birmingham, when he saw the lad lying on his left side on the ground, and approaching found it to be Allen Trumbower, whom he knew well. He summoned the nearest neighbors and sent word to Marshal Phillips of Pratt City to come out there, also to Dr. J. W. Hirst of Thomas, both of whom arrived in a short time. When turned over the boy was still alive, and his own pistol was found under his body. He was conveyed to the home of his parents at Thomas, where he died and where the coroner saw and examined the body soon after its arrival there, and under the circumstances, there being no witnesses to the shooting, and thinking the same was done accidentally by the boy himself, did not call a jury of inquest.

WILLIAM E. RUSSELL DEAD.

The Patriot Statesman is Cut Off in the Morning of His Prime.

Ex-Governor William E. Russell, of Massachusetts, was found dead in his tent near St. Adelaide De Pabos, Quebec, Thursday morning. Heart disease is supposed to have caused his death.

William E. Russell was the most conspicuous democratic leader in New England, and was one of the ablest democrats in the country. He was born in Cambridge, Mass., 39 years ago. His father was Judge Charles T. Russell, a distinguished citizen of that city. He was four times nominated for governor of his native state by the democrats and twice elected. Each time when he was defeated it was by small pluralities.

Governor Russell was a graduate of Harvard college and a lawyer by profession. He was regarded as one of the brightest orators in New England and was prominently mentioned as a democratic candidate for the presidency during the recent campaign. Only last week he attended the democratic national convention at Chicago and made a great speech at the sound money meeting at the Auditorium hotel before the convention assembled and afterward spoke ably against the adoption of the majority report of the committee on platform, closing the debate for the gold standard men. He was one of the sound money leaders at the convention, and on every side his ability was recognized. His speech at the sound money conference at the Auditorium hotel prior to the convention was remarkable for its ability and eloquence. Mr. Russell was an ideal leader among the young democrats of the country, and his death will be a source of keen regret. He was in Canada for recreation at the time of his sudden demise.

LOOKOUT MOUNTAIN

Battlefield—The Lines of Battle—Imposing Monuments.

Gen. A. P. Stewart, Gen. H. V. Boynton, Mr. J. P. Smartt and Engineer Betts, of the National park, have completed the general location of the Union and Confederate lines of battle on the Lookout mountain battlefield. Both lines will extend through the open ground on each side of the Cravens house, and will be in plain view from the city, so that none of the monuments to be erected on them will be concealed by the woods. To avoid this, General Walthall's lines were established a short distance east of the Cravens house, and the lines of General Hooker's forces about 200 yards west of it.

The government purchase of the Lookout battlefield embraces all the fighting ground on the mountain, aggregating 100 acres, including the Cravens and McMillan properties and several smaller holdings. As soon as the deed can be prepared the government will take possession. The purchase extends from a point on the west side of the mountain, 1,500 feet south of the north front of the palisades, to a point half way between the two inclines. Both New York and Pennsylvania are ready to erect very fine monuments near the Cravens house as soon as the government acquires possession.

New York and New Jersey are just closing contracts for imposing monuments on Orchard Knob, That of New York will be 40 feet high, and that of New Jersey 37. The New York monument will be the most costly one yet erected in the park.

An inspection of the Indiana monuments erected since the dedication has just been completed, with the astonishing result that upon six of the monuments the state commission has put historical tablets which do not belong to the site where the monuments stand, but in four cases to sites more than a mile distant. In six cases the state commission has failed to observe corrections in their tablets made by the national commission, but have chosen to cast the plates with their errors retained.

Suicide or Murder.

The headless bodies of a man and woman were found on the Southern railroad track ten miles from Lawrenceburg, Ky., Saturday morning. The man's head was severed from the mouth up and the woman's diagonally across the head. Tickets were found on the man which show that they had been traveling on the Queen and Crescent route. They had evieently laid down with their heads on the rail, whether with suicidal intent or not will never be known. The bodies have been identified as those of Joseph Hopper and wife, of London, Ky. The coroner returned a verdict of suicide. The couple were about twenty-five years old. They were well dressed, apparently country people. No money was found on either person, but each had tickets showing they had been riding on the Cincinnati Southern. Hopper had a letter from Laurel river United Baptist church showing him in good standing and fellowship, signed by W. H. Brewner, moderator.

ANARCHY AT CLEVELAND.

The Reign of Terror Continues—More Troops to the Rescue.

The strike situation at the Brown hoisting works, Cleveland, O., assumed so dangerous a phase Thursday afternoon that three more companies of troops were hurried to the scene just before quitting time, and are now encamped in the works. Early in the afternoon crowds began to assemble and stood about sullenly, defiant of police orders to move on. There was so much evidence of a prearranged plan, every street leading to the works having its own division of the mob, that the authorities in hot haste sent for more troops. When the sixty-three men who had been at work were placed in vans to be driven home from the works it was found necessary to charge the mob twice before a passage could be made for the wagons. The drivers had refused to leave the stables with the vehicles, and the policemen did the driving. During the melee jeers and threats were hurled at the scabs, police and military, and some stones were thrown. The severest fighting was on Hamilton street, and in the charges about forty strikers were pricked by the bayonets. After a passage had been forced the military had all it could do to keep the mob from chasing the wagons. There is a sullen spirit abroad, which is more dangerous than anything which the police have yet met. One man suffering from a bayonet wound was locked up by the police. The state board of arbitration began its work on the case Thursday.

Cuban Victory Reported.

A battle is said to have occurred on July 15 near Maceo's stronghold, in the province of Pinar del Rio. For the last two weeks the insurgents have been very aggressive, and small parties have repeatedly attacked the trocha, causing the Spaniards much annoyance.

General Inclan was ordered to drive back the detached bands of insurgents, and for this purpose took with him 2,000 men. Maceo seems to have expected such a movement, and arranged to ambush the Spaniards. He stationed a large force in a formidable position, and ordered the detached bands to draw Inclan into the trap. The Spaniards followed the insurgent skirmishers incautiously and fell into the ambush. Then the Cubans opened fire from all sides, which threw the Spaniards into confusion. While the Spaniards were thus disordered the Cubans charged, completely routing their foes.

General Inclan made a desperate effort to rally his demoralized forces, but was surrounded by the Cubans and compelled to surrender.

It is said in Havana that the Spaniards were pursued almost to the trocha and lost more than 300 men killed and wounded. There were fourteen officers among the killed.

Cubans here also say that Maceo will hold Inclan as a hostage.

AT THE SPRING.

The spring was the center of attraction last Friday evening. The young people having grown tired of indoor socials gathered at this, our favorite resort, where the string band furnished excellent music, and watermelons were all the rage. It was a very enjoyable affair as the moon shone in all its beauty upon the happy couples seated upon the rustic seats, some perhaps, telling their tales of love, while others told their tales of woe. The following were there:

W. B. McMath, with Miss Bessie Allen; A. J. Lee with Miss Ida B. Marshall; H. C. Reynolds, Jr., with Miss Eunice Latham; F. E. Davis, with Miss Bertie Allen; W. P. McConaughy, with Mrs. Lawrence and Miss Della Latham; F. W. Rogan, with Miss Belle Reynolds; Wm. Lyman with Miss Pauline Acker, and L. N. Bowdon, with Miss Lena Belle North. Messrs. E. L. Lyman, W. B. Reynolds, W. S. Cary, Ben Hoskings and Mr. Haysk composed the band.

Merritt Suttle, colored, was killed by falling slate at the Aldrich mines Tuesday.

Mr. Thomas J. Perry, one of P. H. Earle & Co's. efficient salesmen, is spending a vacation with home folks in Montevallo.

DOGWOOD ITEMS.

Rev. P. H. Berry delivered quite an able sermon at the M. E. church Sunday. He is conducting a protracted meeting here.

Rev. C. T. Milstead, of West Calera, is assisting our pastor (P. H. Berry) in the protracted meeting.

Mr. Walter Harrison filled his regular appointment at Gurnee Sunday night.

Misses Ida and Velmer Cunningham, two of Ebenezer's most affable young ladies, spent the Sabbath in our village.

Mr. John Fulton and his new wife, of Maylene, attended church here Sunday.

Mrs. P. H. Berry, of Pelham, is spending the week here with her many friends.

Dogwood and Aldrich boys contemplate going to Siluria Saturday to cross bats with Pelham and Highland base ball teams.

We hope that all will be benefited by the series of meetings at this place.

How Ex-Governor Russell Died.

It appears that the people who accompanied Ex-Governor Russell were his brother and Francis Peabody, from Boston. Their camp was near the Little Pabos river, where they had been fishing all day Wednesday, when the ex-governor seemed in the very best of health. The tent in which they slept was divided into two compartments, and, as the ex-governor slept alone the others never knew that he was dead until late this morning, when they thought it was time to wake him At a late hour Thursday night the coroner's jury returned to St. Adelaide de Pabes from the camp The doctors and coroner's jury decided that heart disease was the cause of death.

COMMERCIAL CONDITIONS.

Failures Increasing—The Future Still Uncertain.

RAILWAY STOCKS DECLINED.

Mills Stop Work to Prevent a Disastrous Decline in Prices of Their Products—Woolen Manufacturies Waiting—Pig Iron Accumulating. Bar Iron Falling.

Failures for the week have been 269 in the United States, against 256 last year, and 35 in Canada, against 39 last year. Disapproval of the action at the Chicago convention has had some influence in the markets the past week, but a far more important factor has been the feeling that the future is still uncertain. This acute attack of doubt, coming at a time when business is for other reasons seriously depressed, has made the week unusually gloomy in speculative circles. The average price of active railroad stocks has declined from $47.22 to $44.76 per share, and the average of trust stocks from $47.30 to $44.48 per share. Cotton has fallen about ⅛ cent in spot prices, because the men who were sure there would be a cotton famine in July and have been holding large quantities of cotton in expectation of higher prices have changed their minds. The closing of about three-quarters of the southern mills in producing capacity and about half of the northern mills for part of the time until the new crop comes forward will help to prevent a disastrous decline in prices of goods, but if accounts of conditions are not misleading and the general rains in Texas have helped the crop as much as many believe the yield is likely to be more than 9,000,000 bales. The decrease in consumption here is not as yet effective in helping the prices of cotton goods, which are still selling at about the lowest quotations ever made.

The woolen manufacturer is waiting, and as new orders are exceedingly slow the sales of wool at the three chief markets were for the week only 2,155,100 pounds, transactions at Boston being reported the lowest ever known at that market.

The output of pig iron July 1 was 180,532 tons weekly, against 182,220 June 1 and 171,194 tons a year ago. The decrease since the maximum was reached November 1, 217,306 tons weekly, has been material, and yet stocks are rapidly accumulating, those held by producers, not including the great steel companies, amounting to 815,872 tons' an increase of 29,929 tons for the month of June, or about 7,000 per week, which indicates a consumption of less than 173,000 tons. Considering the fact that the accumulation by the great steel companies must have been large, the consumption is undoubtedly smaller than it was a year ago. The demand for finished products of iron and steel is extremely narrow, although one considerable building contract is reported, 50,000 tons for the San Francisco Call building, being followed by smaller contracts. But in bars the combinations have found themselves unable to maintain prices, and there are renewed reports that the great decrease in sales of nails will force a reduction of prices August 1.

Bessemer pig has not changed in nominal quotations at Pittsburg, although one sale of 10,000 tons to an Indianapolis concern is reported at prices netting only $11 to the valley furnace. Gray forge has been sold at a price equivalent to $9.75 at Pittsburg. The average of iron and steel prices is the lowest since a year ago.

The manufacture of boots and shoes is weakening under the effort to secure an advance in price, although most of the works have orders for some time ahead. But the demand is very light and nearly all the shops would have to close if dependent upon new orders.

Fire Destroys a Town.

The town of Malvern, Ark., at the junction of the Hot Springs and Iron Mountain railways, was almost entirely destroyed by fire early Saturday morning. The total loss is estimated at $250,000, only a small portion of which is covered by insurance. The burned buildings include the railroad depots, two hotels, the bank and all of the principal business houses in the place.

The citizens, firmly believing that the town had been fired, instituted a search early in the day for the miscreants, and about noon arrested three suspicious characters, two white men and a negro. The feeling against them rapidly increased, and early in the afternoon Sheriff Fitzhugh organized a posse, and escorting the men to the depot, took a train for Little Rock, where they arrived at night. The names of the men are Case Williams, colored, and E. A. Miller and Eugene Ingram, white. The men were placed in the penitentiary for safe keeping. Williams says he came from St. Louis, while the others claim Little Rock as their home. Miller has made a confession, implicating himself, Ingram and Williams.

Bad for Divorcees.

The Kansas court of appeals, all the judges concurring, has declared ineffective the law under which divorces have been granted in that state for twenty-five years. It is estimated that from 35,000 to 50,000 divorces are affected. The decision also affects property rights and the custody of children.

Manchester Mills Sued.

The strikers at the Manchester Cotton mills, at Rome, Ga., will bring suit against the operators for violating the state laws by working on Sunday.

Many railroad officials, says the Chattanooga Times, when they read the order of Postmaster General Wilson relating to the railway correspondence that passes over every line of road and from one road to another in official "R. R. B." envelopes, thought it was only a bluff, and that it would soon be turned down. However, it now appears that the law will be carried out to the letter, and it is said that a watch will be put on some of the local roads this week, and the baggage master, or whoever carries the letters, arrested. The use of stamped envelopes will obviate the difficulty, if the stamps are proportionate to the size and weight of the letter.

Heard From at Last.

At the office of the White Star Line, in London, word was received Thursday that a bottle was picked up recently at Hoylake, near Birkenhead, which contained the following, written on a slip of paper: "Struck iceberg; sinking fast; mid-ocean; Naronic." Signed "Young." The steamer Naronic, one of the finest and largest freighters of the White Star Line, sailed from Liverpool on February 11, 1893, for New York, and from that time to this has never been heard from.

Big Rain in the Mountains.

A cloudburst in the mountains this afternoon north of old Fort Bliss, above El Haso, Texas, swept several hundred feet of the Santa Fe track into the Rio Grande. The Rio Grande has been entirely dry for the past two months. By this rain it was filled with a raging torrent fed by rushing streams descending from a hundred arroyos and canons. A number of animals and several persons had narrow escapes from drowning.

Death by Lightning.

In McMinn county, Tenn., four miles from Charleston, Will Miller and James Gamblen were at work cutting briars when a heavy thunder storm came up. They went to a straw stack, placed some rails against it and improvised a shelter. The lightning struck the stack, and Miller was instantly killed and Gamblen rendered unconscious for some time.

WOMAN'S WORLD

ODD JEWELS.

The engagement bracelet—that is, a chain of fine gold clasped with a miniature heart of pearls or diamonds—is, however, the sentimental feature of the summer months.

Superb collarettes have been revived. For some years only slight necklaces, if any, have been worn. This season the dog-collar is to be seen in a variety of gems, notably diamonds and pearls.

But the really new stone—the one that has the merit, if merit it be, of having only recently been added to the list of gems—is the olivine, a Russian jewel that resembles the emerald, but differs from it in tone.

Open hearts, wreaths, the fleur-de-lis and floral designs are the brooches most used for summer gowns. Quaint forms, such as tiny frogs, yachts and the like are made into stick-pins to hold the rebellious bit of lace in place.

The unusual popularity of the amethyst is attested in many ways. Big stones, deep in color and set about pearls, make the clasps for narrow belts. Smaller ones are set at intervals in a tiny band of flexible openwork gold.

THE TOILET FOR TORRID WEATHER.

Adjustment of one's costume to the exigencies of torrid weather is fast becoming a simple problem for women, in view of the wide array of this summer's dress goods and of wonderfully attractive fashions that are now offered them. The ideal summer wardrobe is a happy combination of comfort, coolness and grace, and the wise woman will be rejoiced to find that it has an added possibility, which is economy. As summer trifles have a way of proving to be worth their weight in gold, expense is by no means an unimportant factor in the consideration of midsummer dress. Silk is the coolest summer material known, a fact which is probably more often dimly realized than directly applied. It has, moreover, so many varieties that no two silk gowns need look alike. The prettiest and most fashionable summer gowns will be made of taffeta, which is seen in the most bewildering lovely shades. One of the daintiest taffeta frocks that have yet been exhibited is of apple green, woven in the fascinating miroir pattern that makes a light shifting of the material seem like the play of sunlight among fresh foliage. Deep flounces of creamy lace fall from the collar and the shoulders and fall prettily about the hips and down each side of the front panel of the skirt. This panel is embroidered at the bottom in the most exquisite of pink apple blossoms, and the wide tabs, falling over the shoulders, have the same dainty decorations. Pale tan gloves are worn with such a costume, and the hat is of rough green straw, trimmed with green and purple bows of ribbons and chiffon and with a small group of black plumes at one side. The silk used for this gown is exceedingly thin, and is made so simply as not to be cumbersome on the hottest days.—Chicago Times-Herald.

THE MOST POPULAR GARMENT.

The shirt-waist is the most popular garment of the day for women. Of changeable, unfigured taffeta, without a lining, and made and worn like a cotton shirt, it is almost an indispensable article in a woman's summer wardrobe. It is always ready to be put on, without consulting the laundry's requirements, and, with a low-cut bodice for dinner, the skirts, cotton shirt and jacket-bodice worn as a traveling frock, it constitutes all the needed variety for a few days from home. Velvet shirt-waists, also made and worn exactly like a cotton shirt, are very smart for bicycling on cool days. By adding hand-made collar and cuffs of embroidery, tucks, fancy stitches and lace to a blouse of this kind, dressiness and daintiness may be obtained when occasion warrants it.

The materials used for the most expensive skirt-waists are entirely different from the materials that are bought by the yard in the shops. They are imported expressly for the purpose, and are obtainable in men's furnishing stores. It is surprising to note how many women one sees in these masculine shrines. They come in with an air of owning the place that drives affrighted masculine patrons to the far ends of the shop. That is, in San Francisco. In New York, the woman patron has brought the woman clerk. Many of the larger haberdasheries are equipped with saleswomen, and it is now no uncommon sight there to see a man and wife enter a furnishing store and separate as soon as they cross the threshold, he repairing to his shirt counter, while she hies to hers.

One of the faults of the shirt-waist is the sagging of the skirt-band at the back, which sometimes make revelations and is always unsightly. Most women overcome it by using a long, narrow silver pin, but Ada Rehan has brought to San Francisco a new fashion which will doubtless soon be widely copied. It is another "conveyance" from the masculine wardrobe, being nothing less than the masculine suspenders. The article is made of superfine material, elaborately embroidered, and is attached well to the side in front, while at the back the two front pieces unite high up near the neck to form a single broad band, terminating in a little fork to meet the two buttons on the waist-band.—The Argonaut.

WOMEN AS ARCHITECTS.

"Women have the mental endowment to become great architects," said one of the greatest of men architects recently; "they have the brain power and the artistic temperament. Their difficulty lies in the feminine desire to skip the lower rounds of the ladder. Younger men in our profession are giving years to preparatory work, and the women who wish to compete with them must do the same."

It is a remarkable fact that while men are thus advocating the necessity of thorough preparation among women who aspire to professional honor, they are still keeping closed against them some of the best architectural schools in the country. The list of colleges where the rustle of the feminine petticoat is heard in the architectural department is not long. Women are admitted to study architecture at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, at Cornell University, and at the Franklin Institute in Philadelphia. There are also schools of design that have added an architectural course to their curriculum, solely for the benefit of women; but in spite of these few opportunities women find it a difficult matter to gain a thorough preparatory course in this profession.

Mr. Bruce Price, one of the finest of American architects, prescribes the following course as essential to either a man or woman wishing to prepare for the highest grade of architectural work: "A thorough college course along general lines to begin with, followed by a three years' special course in architecture, then at least a year as draftsman in an architect's office, and last—and always—Paris." This may seem a grave outlook to the woman who has had visions of embarking on a successful career as an architect after a couple of years' study and an expenditure of a few hundred dollars, and she is quite right; the study of architecture is a serious undertaking. There are no short cuts, no specially inclined planes to success for the gentler sex. The fact is that a woman must not only make as rapid onward strides in the profession as a man, but break the ground she travels over as well.—Demorest's Magazine.

FASHION NOTES.

Fancy collas grow in favor daily.

All the summer girls will wear sashes.

Vaseline and yellow ochre are used as dressing for russet shoes.

Black chiffon veils with woven dots are considered ultra modish.

The woman who knows how to dress when traveling is never seen in black satin.

Fetching little caps of flowered taffeta will be worn with summer costumes.

The syndicate ladies' maid is an idea that can with certainty be dubbed not feasible.

Plain red combined with red and white in wall papering is considered very artistic.

Next to the wedding gown the graduation costume is most important in woman's eyes.

Linen neck ruchings combined with white satin ribbon are to be worn much with summer gowns.

A brunette at a reception recently wore a costume of orange velvet and white satin. That it was a stunning combination goes without saying.

According to the latest news from Paris only one style of dress is considered correct. The plain skirt and bodice covered with embroideries or linen have taken the fashionable world by storm.

Embroidery in colored straws is a novelty much liked on the other side. A gown of chamelon silk is described as having sleeves with short puffs, with a straw trimming adorning the cuff, which terminates at the wrist.

To wear with the grass linen gown there is the dainty Dresden petticoat, with its tiny pink roses or tinier yellow buttercups on a back-ground of pale lemon. The flounces on this skirt are pinked and a pinked ruching serves as the heading.

Flowered muslins, dotted swiss and similar thin stuffs are being made with the popular gored skirt, each seam being defined by an insertion of lace. Silk linings are invariably used, but colored lawn answers well the purpose, the color scheming enhancing greatly its daintiness and charm.

The fad of the summer is, however, the flower-trimmed petticoat. Not the petticoat embroidered in dainty blossoms, but the one that has fresh flowers sewn among its flounces. This is exclusively for evening wear and the fragrance pervading summer ballrooms will this year emanate to a large degree from the summer girl's petticoats. Add to these the numberless fabrications of muslin and lawn, the plain silk skirts for walking and traveling, and the divided skirts for outdoor exercises, and a fair idea may be gained of the summer girl's requirements in the way of petticoats.

WANTED TO SEE IT WORK.

"Let me take the blamed thing home," said the patient, as the dentist relieved him of his aching molar; "I want to take it home and poke sugar in it to see it ache!"

WORDS FIULY SPOKEN.

"Did you hear about that hair-raising story Hone was circulating?" asked the barber in Grabenstatter's.

"Don't tell it to me," hastily replied the customer. "Keep it for your bald-headed victims."

UNGENTLEMANLY.

"It seems to me," shouted Uncle Allen Sparks to the fleeing bloomer girl, whose bicycle had given him a severe jolt at a crossing, "you might stop a second or at least look around to see whether you've knocked anybody down or not. That would be the gentlemanly thing to do."

ABSOLUTE PROOF.

A recruit, wishing to evade service, was brought up for medical inspection, and the doctor asked him:

"Have you any defects?"

"Yes, sir; I am short sighted."

"How can you prove it?"

"Easily enough, doctor. Do you see that nail up yonder in the wall?"

"Yes."

"Well, I don't.

A SUPERFLUOUS QUESTION.

"These scales," said a Dallas druggist, "are adjusted so nicely that you can tell on them the difference between the weight of a blonde hair and a dark hair."

"Which hair weighs the less."

"The light hair weighs less, of course."

Where Gold Goes.

A dentist in a good practice uses over $500 worth of gold a year in filling teeth. Some prepare their own gold; others get it from the gold beaters, but the greater part obtain it from dental supply firms.

This gold is put up in eight-ounce packages, packed in small glass phials, each containing a fraction of an ounce. The cylindrical pieces of gold in it are gold-foil of a very soft and spongy kind.

When pressed into a hollow tooth, one of these cylinders will not take up one-twentieth of the space it occupies in the bottle. About $10,000,000 is now concealed in the mouths of people in the world.—Boston Traveller.

How Old are You?

You need not answer the question, madam, for in your case age is not counted by years. It will always be true that "a woman is as old as she looks." Nothing sets the seal of age so deeply upon woman's beauty as gray hair. It is natural, therefore, that every woman is anxious to preserve her hair in all its original abundance and beauty; or, that being denied the crowning gift of beautiful hair, she longs to possess it. Nothing is easier than to attain to this gift or to preserve it, if already possessed. Ayer's Hair Vigor restores gray or faded hair to its original color. It does this by simply aiding nature, by supplying the nutrition necessary to health and growth. There is no better preparation for the hair than SUFFERING IN SILENCE.

Women are the real heroes of the world. Thousands on thousands of them endure the dragging torture of the ills peculiar to womankind in the silence of home. They suffer on and on—weeks, months, years. The story of weakness and torture is written in the drawn features, in the sallow skin, in the listless eyes, in the lines of care and worry on the face.

Inborn modesty seals their lips. They prefer pain to humiliation. Custom has made them believe the only hope of relief lies in the exposure of examination and "local treatment."

Take ten cases of "female weakness" and in nine of them "local treatment" is unnecessary, There is no reason why modest, sensitive women should submit to it. McELREE'S is a vegetable wine. It exerts a wonderfully healing, strengthening and soothing influence over the organs of womankind. It invigorates and stimulates the whole system. It is almost infallible in curing the peculiar weaknesses, irregularities and painful derangements of woman. Year after year, in the privacy of home—away from the eyes of everybody—it effects cures.

WINE OF CARDUI is sold for $1.00 a bottle. Dealers in medicine sell it. Five bottles usually cure the worst cases.

The Isle of Long Ago.

Oh, a wonderful stream is the River Time,
As it flows through the realm of years,
With a faultless rhythm and a musical rhyme,
And a broader sweep and a surge sublime,
As it blends with the ocean of years,

How the winters are drifting, like flakes of snow,
And the summers like buds between;
And the years in the sheaf—so they come and they go
On the river's breast, with its ebb and flow,
As they glide in the shadow and sheen.

There's a magical Isle up the River Time,
Where the softest of airs are playing;
There's a cloudless sky and a tropical clime,
And a voice as sweet as a vesper chime,
And the Junes with the roses are staying.

And the name of this isle is the Long Ago,
And we bury our treasures there;
There are brows of beauty and bosoms of snow—
There are heaps of dust, but we love them so!
There are trinkets and tresses of hair.

There are fragments of songs that nobody sings,
And a part of an infant's prayer,
There's a harp unswept and a lute without strings,
There are broken vows and pieces of rings,
And the garments she used to wear.

There are hands that are waved when the fairy shore
By the mirage is lifted in air;
And we sometimes hear through the turbulent roar
Sweet voices we heard in the days gone before,
When the wind down the river is fair.

Oh, remembered for aye be the blessed Isle
All the day of our life till night.
And when evening comes with its beautiful smile,
And our eyes are closing in slumber awhile,
May that "Greenwood" of soul be in sight.

Wooing of Miss Anna Beggs.

BY KATHERINE BATES.

"No," said lawyer Anna Beggs, "no, I shall never marry."

"That is a great pity," replied the man to whom she was speaking, "for you would make a delightful home for some lucky fellow."

The lawyer looked at him in surprise.

"Do you think so?" she asked. "I hardly agree with you, for I am not at all domestic. You probably think so because it is your theory that women should make homes—"

"No, that isn't it," interrupted her friend. "I think you would make a delightful home."

Miss Beggs was silent; she crossed her feet and slipped down in her chair, meditating for a little while. At last she said: "Oh, I think not."

"Why not?"

"Well, it is generally held that one of the essentials of a home is wifely admiration for the head of the family. It is not my custom to admire men."

"That is true," admitted the man; "but a man's admiration for his wife goes a long way toward making a home."

"That's another theory, isn't it? Did you ever see a home properly conducted without wifely admiration?"

"No; I can't say that I ever did. But I should be willing to try the experiment if you would take me."

"Take you? Are you proposing to me, Henry West?"

"That's what I am working up to—I have intended for some years to do it when you had time to listen. You seemed a trifle short of clients this afternoon—the extreme cold, no doubt—so I deemed it a good time to try my luck. That is why I introduced matrimony as a general topic; unless it is positively disagreeable to you, I'd now like to make it a special one."

The lawyer sighed. She was a handsome woman, with very long lashes to her dark grey eyes, and she drooped these convenient lashes as she considered the matter.

"Well, if you must talk it out I suppose now is as good a time as any: but I am dissappointed in you, Henry. I have known you for years, and I have always counted on you as one of the men who would not want to marry me."

"For a good many of those years I did not intend to want to," said Henry, apologetically. "In fact, I thought the men who were anxious to in spite of your eccentricities, were great idiots, but I have changed my mind."

"And you a man!"

"Yes, but I am not very much of one, Anna. That's the plea I am going to advance this afternoon—the basis of my argument. I have gone over all the points in the case, and it seems my best chance. I know that I am no better looking, no more entertaining, have no better principles and no more money than some of the men you have already refused; but I do think I am ahead of them in that one point. You enjoy being a manly woman—well, I enjoy being a man with womanly tastes. Why shouldn't we be just the people for each other? No, that was only a rhetorical question—I don't want an answer yet, for I should like to set forth the whole plan. That is the great advantage in proposing to a sensible woman—one doesn't want to get hurried and flurried. If you married me, you could go on just the same with your work; the housekeeper and I could manage the house well enough, I am sure—"

"You and the housekeeper!" interrupted the lawyer, impulsively.

"Yes; no doubt we could get a capable woman to help us out. I have quite good taste in the furnishing of a house, the equipping of a small conservatory, and so on; and I could confer with her on the points I am weak in. She could manage the cuisine with hints from me about game, fish, and a few other matters in which I am well up. I know quite a little of landscape gardening, and if she had taste, too, no doubt we could manage to make the whole place quite attractive."

"I thought you said I would make a delightful home."

"So you would; the housekeeper and I are only going to see to the house."

"May I ask why you don't marry her?"

"Because I am, unfortunately, in love with you."

"And yet you don't count me in your plans at all!"

I am dwelling merely on the material side now. When you came home at night, after dinner (about which, you remember, you need have no thought whatever) if you had no references to look up, and if there was nothing you cared to go to, why you and I could talk. I am a good listener, Anna."

"And what should we have to talk about? Every possible common interest would be monopolized by the housekeeper, it seems to me."

"Oh, no, not at all. I read a great deal—especially fiction—and we could discuss current literature. I know little Mrs. Hardy and her husband often read the magazines to each other in the evening—after she has attended to the ordering breakfast and other household matters—and they seem very happy in doing so."

"After she has attended her household affairs," mused the lawyer.

"Yes; but of course you would not have any household affairs to mar your enjoyment. You could feel exactly as if you were in a hotel."

"I haven't the faintest doubt that I should," said Miss Beggs, warmly.

"All the details of our life together would soon fall into shape—there are a good many things I should like to do if I were established in a home of my own, but I should never think of insisting on your sharing them. For instance, I should like to have a visit from Aunt Lætitia, the dear old lady back in the East who brought me up; but if we had succeeded in getting a pleasant woman as housekeeper, Aunt Letty would not be in the least a drain on you. She is a chummy old soul, and very likely she would grow fond of the housekeeper and they could go on all sorts of larks together. Then I should like to take a pew in the nearest church of our—of my persuasion. My father had one as long as he lived, and some way an interest in a church has always seemed to me a part of domesticity. I dare say I should not go often, but if she were a Christian woman,—and that is the sort we should like to get, shouldn't we?—why, she could use the pew."

"Do I understand that you are going to church with her, while I—"

"Oh, not at all, of course not, Anna. I merely wished to have the pew in my name, and I hoped she would care to attend that church because—well, because I should like to think of a good woman in the West pew—my bringing-up cropping out, you see. Then there are other things—books are my hobby, you know, but we could have two libraries, one for your legal books and political science and all the other things you know so much about, and a little den for my novels and books of verse. I confess to liking some one to judge a new book with me—but I promise not to bore you in that way, Anna."

"The housekeeper, in the intervals between beautifying the home and going to church, could probably read them with you," said Miss Beggs.

"Isn't it queer, I had thought of that very thing—if we should chance on a cultured woman. Now, Anna, doesn't it seem a possibility? Won't you consider—"

"I consider," said the lawyer, rising to her feet with sudden vim, "that you are insulting me, Henry West! After our long friendship, I should not have expected this of you. I may have been indifferent to marriage, from a personal point of view, but I have always considered it a sacred institution. To be asked to join with you in such an arrangement as you propose"—she broke off and for the first time since she had been admitted to the bar tears came into her eyes, and her voice trembled.

The man with womanly tastes was pleased at the sight of the drops on her cheeks, and he bent over and kissed them away.

"Dearest," he said, "will you be my housekeeper?"—The New Bohemia.

How the Queen Rides.

A rider with black boots, waxed hat and short hunting whip on a trotting gray horse; a few yards behind him a modern landau; on the seat beside the coachman, a Scotchman, wearing a black hat decorated with a buckle, in which is a feather standing like an aigrette; in the landau, two women in deep mourning, one small, aged, compact, her head hidden in a poke bonnet with a thick veil; the other tall, thin, blonde; opposite them are seated two boys in sailor dress with wide blue collars; then comes another carriage; then a victoria, wherein is an old gentleman wearing a decoration—such is the spectacle of England's Queen taking her constitutional, every day ride, with Princess Beatrice and her sons at Nice.

Children's Column

THE CHILDREN.

They are such tiny feet!
They have gone so short way to meet
The years which are required to break
Their steps to evenness, and make Them go
More sure and slow.

They are such little hands!
Be kind; things are so new, and life but stands
A step beyond the doorway. All around
New day has found
Such tempting things to shine upon, and so
The hands are tempted oft, you know.

They are such fond, clear eyes,
That widen to surprise
At every turn! They are so often held
To sun or showers, showers soon dispelled
By looking in our face,
Love asks for so much grace!

They are such fair, frail gifts!
Uncertain as the rifts
Of light that lie along the sky;
They may not be here by and by.
Give them not love, but more, above
And harder patience with the love.

PETS THE PARK SQUIRRELS.

A venerable looking man with snow white hair and beard is a regular morning visitor at Mount Morris park, in Harlem. He always enters the park at Fifth avenue, walks quietly to a large tree, and taps against it with his cane. At the same time he calls softly. In a few moments sharp barks of delight are heard among the branches and one or two gray squirrels are seen to run down the trunk of the tree. The old man smiles and coaxes and pretty soon the squirrels have jumped from the tree to his shoulders and have begun an exploration in search of pockets.

The gray pets always are rewarded by finding some nuts, which they carry off to the branches of the tree and eat. Sometimes they make two or three trips down the tree and clamber over the old man and search his pockets until they are sure the supply of nuts has been exhausted. There are a dozen squirrels in the northwest corner of the park who are on the best of terms with their venerable visitor, and are apparently, on the lookout for him every day.

"A squirrel makes a nice pet," said the old man, "and I have some great friends among them, both in this and Central park. It takes quite a little time to make them understand that you do not mean to harm them, but after they once put confidence in you they never lose it. I usually attract their attention with a little call which resembles their bark so nearly that they can hardly tell the difference. It probably means good morning, or some pleasant greeting in squirrel language, for I am a firm believer in their chatter being perfectly understood by one another. I have also a number of bird friends in the park. They fly to me at my call, and always expect a piece of cake or cracker.

"After all," said the old man, "animals are about the truest friends a person can have in this world. They stick to you through thick and thin." —New York Journal.

TAMING WILD MICE.

An uncommonly good mouse story is given by a correspondent of the London Spectator. Almost incredible as it sounds, it appears to be well vouched for. It offers another proof of the power of persistent kindness.

A lady living in my house in the country announced to me one day that she had tamed a family of mice, consisting of a father and mother and seven young mouse children, who had made their nest in the partially decayed sash frame of the window in her first floor bedroom, which had an opening on the sill outside.

She further stated that she could identify the members of this family, and could induce them to come to her call and feed out of her hand. These statements appeared so incredible that I felt compelled to express my disbelief in them in the absence of personal proof of their veracity, and she therefore requested me to accompany her to her room, there to receive such evidence as would satisfy my doubts.

I went and stood with her close to her open window and she called the mice by the names, "Jim," "Tom," "Jack," and so on, to which she asserted that she had accustomed them, and I saw them come, one by one, to the window ledge, where they ate bread out of her hand, and subsequently out of my own, not timidly, but as if in full assurance of safety.

On the afternoon of the same day I had a small tennis party in the garden on which this bedroom looked. My cousin whose Christian name is Jim, was playing tennis, and several of the party, including myself, were sitting in the garden beneath the mouse window, when afternoon tea was brought out to us, and I called loudly, "Jim! Jim!" several times to communicate that fact to my cousin.

At the third or fourth call something ran across the path, and one of the party threw his low hat at it, and killed what we found to be a mouse.

The mouse tamer was not present, and knew nothing of the occurrence, to which, indeed, none of us attached more than a passing importance. The next morning, however, still in ignorance of the incident, she informed us that her little "Jim," had disappeared from her family, and that although the others came as usual at her call, he remained absent and I know that he never re-appeared.

RATS STEAL HEAVY NAILS.

California is a state of big things, and not the least interesting among them is the huge wood rat found along the slope of the Cascade mountains. Besides being big, the rat is a professional thief. He steals anything and everything, and is the terror of the natives as well as of hunting parties. Forest and Stream tells some amusing stories of raids made on camps by rats which carried away knives, forks, spoons, tin plates, towels, cartridges and all sorts of cloth and rags that could be used as lining for their nests.

The same paper tells of an effort at building done by a pair of these rats which beats all records for rat architecture. They selected the top of the stove in a hunter's cabin for the site, and while the hunter was gone they built their house. They used railroad spikes for the walls, securing them from a railroad shanty 200 yards from the cabin.

In building the house they laid the spikes with the utmost regularity and arranged them so that the points all stuck out. After building the wall up to the proper height the rats filled the interior with soft stuff and had quite a comfortable home when the hunter returned and outsed them without the formality of a writ of ejectment.

It is not always that rats put the results of their theft to such good use. Many things are stolen apparently for the love of stealing, and with no intention of using the stolen articles. In the matter of the railroad spikes it seems that the rats knew what they were doing, for they stole enough spikes to erect their house, and no other iron entered into its construction. Perhaps one of the rats had visited a large city and secured some ideas about building by watching the erection of a modern sky scraper, and was so pleased with the scheme that he resolved to adopt it himself. At any rate the rats built a home that embodied in its construction many of the features of the 20-story buildings in New York.

This particular rat has many queer habits not common to rodents, and he is an interesting study for naturalists. Residents of the locality which the rats inhabit, however, maintain that the rats are a nuisance, and the thieving rascals are killed whenever possible. It is all right to study a criminal until your own goods have been purloined, and many California settlers have suffered from the depredations of the wood rat, and so they have sworn vengeance on the pestiferous but jolly little rodent that steals merely for the pleasure of stealing.

Professor Bokai of Budapest has pointed out that not only has the use of antitoxic serum for diphtheria reduced the death rate in that city from 37 to 21 percent, but it has reduced the necessity of surgical operations on the patients from about 90 percent to 74.

Montana's School of Mines.

California has no such thing as a school of mines, although the richest mining state in the Union. In this respect she is behind Montana in the march of progress. That state has an organized school at Butte, managed by a board of trustees, and that body adopted plans for a fine structure for the accommodation of the school. These plans provide for laboratories, lecture-rooms and all other appointments necessary to make the school suited to the growing wants of Montana as a mining state. The Federal Government has donated 100,000 acres of the public lands for the benefit of the school, and the last Legislature of Montana authorized the board of trustees of the School of Mines to erect a building not to exceed the cost of $100,000 and to equip it at a cost not to exceed $15,000. The act also authorizes the trustees to accept donations, and it is expected that a liberal sum will be realized from this source. As a result of these liberal provisions Montana will soon have an elegant structure for the scientific education in mining matters of its young men. —San Francisco Chronicle.

Origin of a Famous Phrase.

The phrase sub rosa ("under the rose,") has been said to have originated from the many plots and conspiracies engendered during the wars of York and Lancaster, but it is much more probable that it arose from a custom—now fallen into disuse, but once very general among the nations of the north of Europe—of suspending a rose over the heads of the guests at feasts, to signify that whatever transpired was of a confidential nature.

Clever Fling at a Critic.

We regret very much to see the article written to the Jacksonville Republican by Mr. F. W. Gist in which he censures Mr. W. F. Aldrich for failing to secure the passage of the bill appropriating lands to the Industrial School. Mr. Gist was an active supporter and worker for the success of the bill and when it failed of passage he, like many of us, felt that some one was to blame. When Mr. Aldrich was first seated in congress it was thought by a great many that owing to the supposed unfairness shown him in the election at this box in 1894 that he would not be inclined to favor the bill. As to whether he entertained such motives as revenge in his mind we are unable to say, but we do say for his credit that he wrote repeatedly to different parties here that he was doing everything possible to get the bill passed. In fact, when the writer went on to Washington he assured him that if any one could be found who could reach Speaker Reed and gain his consent for recognition that he, Aldrich, would gladly turn the bill over to such a party and assist in any way possible to get it through. On the last suspension day of the session Mr. Aldrich, in company with Mr. Goodwyn, called Speaker Reed from his chair and had a long interview with him, pleading for consideration of the bill. They were told by the speaker that his programme for the day was made up and if that was finished he would allow the bill to be called up. Only a few bills were disposed of however, when the veto of the deficiency bill came in and everything else was set aside for this. It is hard to realize how difficult it is to get recognition in the house. It must be borne in mind that there are thousands of private bills such as ours always standing ready for the attention of the speaker and it takes time to reach them all. Mr. Aldrich is certain he will get the bill passed in December. We see no reason why it should not be, and he stands ready and willing to forward the interest of the school at any time.

We hope Mr. Gist will find himself mistaken in his criticisms, and we feel sure when he does no one will be quicker to make amends for any wrong done Mr. Aldrich than he.

The last report of the State Library Commission of Massachusetts shows that there are 256 towns and cities in the State in which the rights are owned and controlled by the municipalities, and the books are free for circulation to all the people. The number of bound volumes in the free libraries has increased in three years from 2,759,400 to 3,139,637. The State has spent in one year the sum of $437,395 upon these various libraries.

The Oregon and Washington people are much concerned about the threatened advent of the Russian thistle, which is on its way both by rail and by river from Idaho. Near Pendleton, Oregon, where it has got lodgment, they are watching it with the utmost vigilance, with what results is to be determined. Every farmer or other person who thinks he sees a Russian thistle should kill it on the spot and send a portion of its remains to the nearest experimental station for identification. Whoever neglects this precaution or strives to "hush up" the presence of the pest is a public enemy.

Captain Bourke, who died recently in a Philadelphia hospital, was one of the three officers of the United States Army who declined to accept medals awarded by Congress for gallantry of action, and the reasons he gave were the source of a great deal of amusement among his comrades, although they illustraded his high sense of honor. He returned the medals to the Secretary of War with a letter saying that he noticed that similar medals had been awarded to other officers for the same reasons, and if they deserved them he did not. The satire and significance of this brief declination can be appreciated only by those who know the methods used by certain officers to obtain this distinction, writes W. E. Curtis to the Chicago Record.

Mystery of Walter Parsons.

About one year ago Water, the 8-year-old son of a Tuscaloosa county farmer named Parsons, disappeared from his home and though a most diligent search, in which the whole neighborhood joined, was instituted, the little fellow could not be found, Friday a man was hunting in the swamps about five miles from the Parsons' farm, when he discovered lying in a lonely spot the skeleton of a child, which, by the tattered garments that clung about it, was later identified as the remains of little Walter Parsons. The skeleton received Christian burial in the presence of a large assemblage of sympathizing friends.

Pistols at a Picnic.

Near Letohatchie, Lowndes county Saturday during the progress of a negro church picnic a quarrel occurred between Dave Gunter and Burnett Means, over whose turn it was to ride on a "flying jennie," when both men pulled pistols and engaged in an impromptu duel A big crowd of negroes was present and friends of the combatants at once took sides and a pitched battle followed. Fully fifty shots were fired. When the smoke cleared away it was found that Gunter, Means and a third negro named Jerry Gilmer were dead and six others, chiefly bystanders, wounded. Two of the wounded were women, and three of them are expected to die.

Sheriff Kennedy Indicted.

On the day of the meeting of the last democratic state convention, Sheriff Robert Kennedy, of Dallas county, shot and killed Percy Wood, of Selma, Ala., while trying to kill his brother, Mardis Wood, who had seduced Kennedy's wife and induced her to leave Kennedy and go to Louisiana to live with him. Besides killing Percy Wood, Kennedy seriously wounded Mardis Wood. He was given a preliminary trial and discharged from custody, buf the grand jury, which has been in session at Montgomery for the past two weeks, took up the case and has returned a true bill charging Kennedy with murder in the first degree. An officer was sent to Selma to arrest Kennedy.

Active Industrial Centre.

Among the most active industrial centers in the district just now is the Hardee-Tynes Foundry & Machine company, located on the corner of First avenue and Twenty-sixth street. This well equipped shop has about all the work it can handle at the present time, and has orders booked ahead. Saturday last they shipped a car of machinery to New Orleans for the sugar refineries thereabouts, and this shipment will be followed by another of equal size today, bound for the same point. The company builds quite a lot of machinery to be used in the making of sugar, and has in course of construction now another car or two. Besides this work, the company is building eight or ten engines, large and small, destined for mines and other plants in Alabama and neighboring states.

Nominal Damages.

The Morgan county circuit court began its regular session in Decatur on the 13th instant. Judge H. C. Speake, of Huntsville, Ala., presided. The first week of the session was devoted to a slim civil docket, a number of cases being continued. The present week has been used by the court in disposing of a number of criminal cases. The case of the state vs. W. P. Wilson, charged with assault with weapons, has elicited a great deal of interest on account of the fact that the dispute which led to the stabbing arose between Wilson and a married man, William Evans, who attempted to interfere with Wilson in his attention to a young lady on the occasion of a bicycle meet at Hartselle, Ala., on July 30 last. On that occasion Wilson stabbed Evans with a knife, inflicting several more or less painful wounds, from which Evans soon recovered. The verdict against Wilson was assessed at 1 cent damages by the jury.

THE FLOODS OF WATERS.

Rising Rivers Rush Down Carrying Destruction Through the Valley.

The following dispatches showing damage all over West Virginia, eastern Kentucky, southern Ohio and Indiana from floods, were received Friday night:

At Glouster, O., the greatest flood ever known is pouring down Sunday creek, flooding coal mine No. 6, one the largest in Ohio.

A dispatch from Sistersville, W. Va., says that the damage in the oil fields will amount to hundreds of thousands of dollars. The riggings have been washed away, the tanks and derricks overturned.

A dispatch from Caldwell, O., states that the towns of Ava, Belleville, Dudley, South Olive, Harriettsville Carlisle and other towns along the Muskingum river are completely submerged.

The Ohio river road is washed out between Waverly and Moundsville, also near Sistersville and Woodland. The loss in Tygartsville alone is $50,000.

At Marietta, O., where the Muskingum empties into the Ohio, the merchants are moving from Front street. All the railroads entering the city are washed out, none able to get trains into the city.

Below Wheeling, the many streams tributary to the Ohio are on a rampage that has not been approached but once since the famous flood of 1875. Reports from Marshall, Wetsell and Tyler counties tell of inestimable damage to growing crops and the breaking of timber booms, freeing millions of logs, which are now passing down to the Ohio.

On the Ohio side of the river below Wheeling the Belaire, Zanesville and Cincinnati road has six trestles washed. The greatest losses have been along the west fork of Reedy. This creek is one of the main tributaries of the Kanawha. Some of the farmers along it are almost ruined and their fences swept away. Many homes have been washed away.

At Muncie, Ind., the White river is the highest known in years. The suspension bridge went down, precipitating twelve boys into the river. Walter Darlington, 15 years old, was drowned. Two others are missing. It is feared the five remaining bridges will be swept away before morning.

A Death Trap Falls.

By the falling of a portion of the interior dome of the old postoffice building in Chicago Thursday morning, on man was killed and another so badly injured that his life is despaired of. The dead man is Nicholas Smith, and Elmer Stringer was terribly crushed by the tangled mass of iron and debris.

LIVE WASHINGTON NOTES.

Strict Orders Given to Observe Quarantine Regulations.

NEW $1 SILVER CERTIFICATES.

No Apprehension is Felt That Another Bond Issue Will Be Made. The Gold Reserved Has Been Restored by New York Banks Depositing Fifteen Million.

New $1 Silver Certificate.

The treasury began paying out Thursday over the counter the new designed $1 silver certificate.

***

United States Treasury Statement.

Saturday's statement shows: Available cash balance, $261,387,987; gold reserve, $102,452,779. The withdrawal of gold from the treasury aggregated $53,800, of which $43,700 was in coin and $10,100 bars. None went out for export. New York banks put $375,000 in gold coin into the sub-treasury, swelling the gold reserve to $103,951,371 at the close of business.

***

Enforcing Quarantine.

Secretary Herbert has ordered Captain Crowinshield, of the battleship Maine, to co-operate with the local authorities at Key West in enforcing the smallpox quarantine regulations, in compliance with the request of Governor Mitchell, of Florida. The Maine will prevent the ingress or egress of all infected vessels until relieved by the Montgomery, which has orders to leave Tomkinsville, S. I., within forty-eight hours for Key West.

***

The Gold Reserve Restored.

The treasury gold reserve, through the action of the New York national banks, became intact again Thursday, the reserve standing at the close of business at $101,881,770. This result was attained by the New York banks depositing $15,250,000 in gold and receiving therefor a like sum in legal tender notes, which are redeemable in gold on presentation to the treasury. The day's withdrawals were $239,400, all of which was taken for hoarding purposes.

***

No Issue of Bonds Intended.

Secretary Lamont returned to Washington from New York Wednesday morning and spent some time with Secretary Carlisle, who is just back from a short voyage down Chesapeake bay with Secretary Herbert. It can be stated positively that the administration has not now and has not recently had any intention of resorting to another bond issue for the purpose of replenishing the gold reserve, and under the present condition of the treasury no apprehension is felt that recourse must be had to such an issue.

General Batchelor to Be Retired.

Brigadier General Richard M. Batchelor, quartermaster-general of the army will go on the retired list on account of age. There is considerable discussion as to his successor, but it is generally agreed that the selection, which is by law confined to the quartermaster's department, will go to one of the four colonels, who in order of seniority are: Colonel Charles G. Awelle, stationed at Governor's Island, N. Y.; Colonel Marshall I. Ludington, stationed at Chicago; Colonel J. S. M. Moore, stationed in New York city, and Colonel Joe E. Weeks, on duty in this city as depot quartermaster.

***

Extra for Clerk Hire.

First Assistant Postmaster General Frank H. Jones declines to give out the report of the postmaster at New Orleans, or to say what extra allowances will be made upon his recommendation for clerk hire and extra letter carriers' pay. Heretofore it has been the custom of the postoffice department to withhold the recommendations of postmasters, but to give to the press the allowances made by the first assistant postmaster general. General Jones said today that he could not follow precedent this year, because the appropriation for extra clerk hire, etc., is so small that each postmaster will receive an insignificant sum.

Look Out for Counterfeits.

Two new counterfeits of United States silver certificates have been discovered by the treasury department. The first is a one dollar, series of 1891, check letter C, signed by F. Fount Tillman, registrar, and D. N. Morgan, treasurer, and having a portrait of Stanton. The second is a five dollar, series of 1891, check letter B, signed by F. Fount Tillman, registrar, and D. N. Morgan, treasurer, and having a portrait of Grant. These counterfeits are printed from etched plates and are very poor productions. The portraits, tathe work and small lettering especially are bad, being much blurred and indistinct. The paper is also poor; a few pieces of silk thread have been distributed through it. The most careless handler of money, it is said, should readily detect the counterfeit notes.

According to the present expectations of Mr. Baldwin, auditor of the treasury, the sugar bounty claimant will be paid the latter part of next week. He delayed figuring the percentage which each claimant shall receive out of the five million dollar appropriation until Secretary Carlisle rendered a decision on the Suthon and other claims. These claims, four in number, are as follows: Walter J. Suthon and John O. Scannell, Frank J. Webb and John L. Scanlan. It will be remembered that the commissioner of internal revenue decided that these men were not entitled to a percentage of the five million appropriation because they had advanced money, but did not own the land upon which the sugar was raised, and therefore did not come within the provisions of the law. A prompt appeal was taken to Secretary Carlisle who late this afternoon sustained the commissioner of internal revenue and threw out the claims. Auditor Baldwin, acting after Secretary Carlisle's decision was rendered, has figured out that each claimant will be entitled to 82.167,153 per cent of the amount of his claim. This per cent will bring the total within 7 cents of the $5,000,000 appropriation. Mr. Baldwin has set his clerks at work upon the claims, and by Tuesday night he expects to know just how much each claimant will be entitled to. With the above per cent known the claimant can now figure out for themselves without waiting to hear from the treasury department how much money they will receive.

DISASTROUS CLOUDBURST.

Ten Lives Lost—Mills, Houses, Crops and Bridges Swept Away.

Ten lives lost and untold loss to property is the result, in brief, of a terrific cloudburst at 4 o'clock last Tuesday morning at the head of Benton creek, four miles west of Frankfort, Ky.

The dead whose bodies have been recovered are:

James Bradley, a farmer, with his two children.

Mrs. Bryant, a widow, with two children.

An unknown white man.

Thomas Massie, colored.

The missing are:

Mrs. Bradley and two children.

Benson creek comes out of the western portion of the county, crosses the various turnpikes, six or eight miles from town, then crosses the railroad four miles from town and comes down alongside the railroad until it empties into the river in the middle of the town.

Mrs. Bryant kept the toll gate near one of these turnpike bridges and the little toll house was right on the creek and just across from James Bradley's and not far from her father's, 'Squire Moore. The Conway mill, just above, was the first to go. Its timber must have swept away the Bryant and Bradley houses. Those houses themselves must have hit the railroad bridge two miles below. The bridge was swept away with terrible force Everything about it, iron and all, except the main abutment, is gone.

A half dozen or more county bridges have been washed away. The most valuable was the one recently constructed over Benson creek and cost $20,000.

Trains ran to the bridge from both directions, but the waters are so violent that it was impossible to transfe passengers by boat or otherwise.

Many people living in Benson valley left their houses and waded through the mad waters, only escaping a few minutes before the bridges washed away.

The destruction to property in many parts of Franklin county is complete Damage is estimated at $100,000 a the lowest figure.

A tramp who was refused lodging by James Hewlett saved the lives o his family. He stopped in the bar afterward, and came to the door and awoke the family just in time for them to get out safely.

A DRUNKEN HUSBAND

Slaughters His Wife and Children and Kills Himself.

A special from Athens to the Constitution says that Dave Berryman, a white man, killed his wife, four children and himself at his home in Madison county last night. Berryman was dissipated. He went home drunk about dark. His wife had supper on the table waiting for him. It is presumed that she remonstrated with him for absenting himself all day, and that in a drunken frenzy he snatched his gun from the wall and shot her dead. Then he killed his four children aged 5, 4 and 2 years and the 2-months old babe in its mother's arms. His last shot he fired into his own body. Neighbors who heard the shots went to the house and found Berryman dying and all the others dead. Berryman was 29 years old He is connected with respectable families in the county. He has been a drunkard for some years. He was married once before, but his first wife got a divorce on the ground of cruel treatment. Berryman had treated his second wife cruelly, too, but she continued to live with him for the sake of their children. The murderer was drinking heavily yesterday, and was drunk when he started home from neighboring mill shortly before the tragedy. It is said by the neighbors that Berryman was infatuated with another woman, who was the cause of frequent quarrels between Berryman and his wife.

High Water in Pennsylvania.

The water reached a stage of twenty-five feet at Pittsburg, but did not go as high as was expected. Considerable damage was done in McKeesport, where the Dewees company's mill had thirty-eight furnaces "killed" by the water, causing a loss of $25,000. Work was suspended at the water works and the National tube works.

A number of coal barges broke loose and sank, the loss by that means being about $25,000. In all the towns along the Monongahela more or less damage was done. The houses in the low parts of Homestead, Port Perry, Braddock, Dravosburg and adjacent towns were inundated. There was considerable injury everywhere to furniture.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY.

Present Conditions, as Reported by Dun's Review.

THE LOWEST POINT OF THE YEAR.

Having Been Reached, Stocks Recover Sharply—Business Affected by the Monetary Condition—Nothing Encouraging in the Industries. Working Forces Being Reduced.

The week began with extreme depression in stocks and speculative markets owing to the heavy outgo of gold. Stocks fell rapidly, and on Monday averaged lower than at any time this year or during the Venezuelan alarm in December. Then came a sharp recovery with the union of banks to turn gold into the treasury and of international bankers to control foreign exchange.

Business of all kinds has been considerably affected by the monetary conditions, and is slow to improve. The produce markets have been seriously depressed, lard making the lowest quotations on record.

Nothing appears of encouragement in the industries, and there has been a considerable further decline in the working force. The closing of iron furnaces continues, and yet prices fall, as unsold stocks are the largest ever known, while the demand is remarkably light. Southern No. 1 at the east is nominally $11.25 and Pennsylvania $12, with Bessemer $11 75 and Pittsburg and gray forge $9.75, but even these and all prices for finished products are shaded to secure business. The general demoralization is partly due to the growing belief that large combinations which still hold up prices cannot hold them. Nearly all wire and wire rod mills are closed. Sales of nails and small bar iron at 1.2 are being largely superseded by steel at 1.05, open hearth billets are offered below Bessemer, the demand for rails is very light, and the great structural works at Homestead go on half time unless orders this week are better. Minor metals are also weaker.

Textile industries are rapidly reducing working force, as the prospect for future demand does not grow clearer, and while prices are nominally unchanged it is because there is little chance of business at present. The state of the woolen manufacture appears in sales of wool at the chief markets for the week, the smallest ever known. Prices do not nominally change, but are shaded to make sales, and western markets are weakening some, though still higher than eastern. There is little new business in boots and shoes.

Failures for the week have been 281 in the United States, against 202 last year, and 29 in Canada, against 27 last year.

Brown Hoisting Company Strike.

Grand Master Machinist O'Connell, of Chicago, who has charge of the locked-out employes of the Brown Hoisting & Conveying Machine Company, said Sunday that negotiations were pending which he thought would prove satisfactory to both sides to the controversy. The proposition will provide, it was said, for the return of the men as individuals, as the company demands, but that their union is not recognized. O'Connell says that when the men are once at work again the company will receive committees, rather than have any further trouble. A later dispatch says the strike is ended.

Fatal Family Fight.

Early Thursday morning six shots were heard at the residence of William T. Wiley, ladies' tailor and furrier, on West Fifth street, Cincinnati, O. When Wiley's room was entered Mrs. Wiley was found bleeding from five bullet wounds and her husband unconscious, with a bullet wound in the right temple. The woman died on the way to the hospital. Wiley's wound was superficial, the ball glancing off the skull. They have had frequent quarrels and were separated, but began to live together again about three months ago. Wiley says his wife shot him and he then seized the revolver and fired at her. He came here from Louisville fifteen years ago.

The Bear Creek Horror.

At 8 o'clock Friday evening a great wave of water 10 feet high came tearing down the narrow canon of Bear Creek, carrying everything before it. Hundreds of persons were camping along the creek, and it is impossible to say how many were lost. Saturday morning a terrible state of affairs was revealed at Morrison, Golden Central City and other points in Colorado where the storm raged fiercest. Dead bodies horribly mangled are discovered. At 9 o'clock thirty dead had been recovered, of which twenty-one are in Morrison alone. Trains left Denver early Saturday morning with coffins for the stricken districts.

Four Ladies Drowned.

Horace M. Warren, a banker, was driving through Mount Vernon canon, Col., Friday night with his wife, Mrs. Josephine Holmes and Misses Della and Mary Horner, daughters of Judge J. W. Horner, when a cloudburst occurred. The stream was soon a raging torrent, and the carriage, with its occupants, was swept away by the flood. The four women were drowned. Mr. Warren, bruised and bleeding, lodged in a tree and was rescued several hours later. He is in a critical condition.

Signor Canulla Bancia, of Italy, recently played the piano for forty-six consecutive hours. No wonder the Italians are emigrating in large numbers.

A good deal of apprehension is felt over the condition of the mill pond. It is feared that owing to the fact that it is nearly always low it will cause sickness. If kept full the sun can not reach the muddy bottom and cause malaria to rise. It should either be kept full of water or turned off altogether.

DISASTROUS FLOODS.

A House Swept Away—A Woman Drowned.

The heaviest rain ever known in Shelby county, Kentucky, fell a few days ago, the total fall being 7.15 inches according to the report of the government weather observer. In consequence all of the streams were swollen away beyond their banks and damage done which conservative estimates place at $100,000.

The only fatality so far reported was the death of Mrs. James Peyton, who was drowned in Plum creek. She and her husband and two children lived on the bank of the creek near Finchville. When it was discovered that the house was in danger of being swept away by the flood, Mr. Peyton carried the children to a place of safety, but before he could return and rescue his wife the house was carried into the stream and the woman was found several hours later in a pile of drift two miles down the creek. Crops growing on bottom lands are almost a total loss.

In Shelbyville all the low lying sections of the city were under water, and in the colored quarters there was much distress.

Cleansing.

A soap for cleaning silk is made by heating one pound cocoanut oil in 96 degrees F., adding half pound caustic soda, mixing thoroughly. Then heat half pound white Venetian turpentine, add to the soap and again mix thoroughly. The mixture is covered and left four hours, then heated again, and one pound of ox gall is added to it and well stirred. Next pulverize some perfectly dry, good curd soap, and add it to the gall soap in sufficient quantity to make it solid. One or two pounds of curd soap will be needed. When cold the mass should be pressed into cakes.

POPULIST CONVENTION

Nominates W. J Bryan, the Democratic Nominee, for President.

THE USUAL ORDER REVERSED

By the Adoption of a Rule Providing That the Nomination for Vice President Precede That for President—Thomas E. Watson, of Georgia, Nominated.

The populist convention met in St Louis, Mo., last Wednesday and was called to order at 12:37 by Chairman Taubeneck.

Prayer was offered by Rev. W. L. Smith, of the Third Baptist church of St. Louis.

Ex-Governor Stone, of Missouri, was then introduced and made an address of welcome, which was responded to by Ignatius Donnelly, of Minnesota.

Senator Butler was introduced as temporary chairman, having been chosen by the national committee without a dissenting vote. He addressed the convention, after which the states were called for members of the committee on credentials. At the conclusion of the call a recess until 8 p. m. was taken.

The committee on credentials met immediately after the recess was taken and organized by electing F. M. Wardall, of California, chairman.

At 8:45 Chairman Butler appeared on the stage. The band played, "Put Me Off at Buffalo," and then Senator Butler called the convention to order. He announced that the committee on credentials would not be able to report that night, and that as owing to an accident there was no light, he would declare the convention in recess until 10 a. m. Thursday.

SECOND DAY.

At 10:10 Thursday morning the convention was called to order by the temporary chairman. Rev. Mr. Smith again offered prayer.

The chairman called the committee on credentials, but it was not ready to report and its time was extended. The roll of the states was called for naming members of the several committees.

The members of the committee on organization were requested to retire for consultation.

At 11:35 the committee on platform retired to meet at the Lindell hotel.

A motion that the delegates to the silver convention, now in session in the city, be admitted to this convention was ruled out of order.

At 12:45 the convention took a recess until 3 o'clock.

The convention was called to order and the credentials committee made a partial report, by the majority, recommending that the delegations be recognized in all the uncontested cases; that in the case of the First and Second Illinois congressional districts both contestants and contestees be seated with the right to cast half votes, and that in the case of Colorado the delegates known as the Patterson delegates be seated and cast the full vote of the state.

Minority reports, the chairman said, would be submitted in these cases

That part of the report for the admission of the delegates whose seats were uncontested was agreed to.

The Illinois contest was taken up and the majority report agreed to by 665 to 642. Debate was limited to 15 minutes. This result was announced by the chair amid a scene of great confusion. It was stated by the chair in reply to a question that the Illinois delegations had voted on their own case, though no one had heard Illinois called. It was incidentally disclosed during the roll call that the vote of Louisiana had been increased by the committee on credentials from fifteen to thirty-two without any report being made in regard thereto.

The roll call also gave public information for the first time of votes assigned each state under the elastic rules of the convention.

Other contests were disposed of and Mr. Cox, of Virginia, chairman on permanent organization, was recognized by the chair. Mr. Cox stated the recommendation of the committee to be that Senator Allen, of Nebraska, be elected permanent chairman. A minority report naming James E. Champion, of Maine, was presented.

The majority report was adopted by 758 to 574.

On motion the election of Senator Allen was made unanimous.

Senator Allen was conducted to the chair and addressed the convention in a speech of one hour.

Senator Butler moved that a committee of 25 be appointed to confer tonight or tomorrow with a conference committee of the silver convention. Agreed to.

The committee on rules presented its report, and the convention, without acting on it, at 10:8 p. m. adjourned until Friday morning at 10 o'clock,

THIRD DAY.

Before resuming the business Friday morning the convention was entertained by the presentation of a gavel containing forty-eight kinds of wood, representing the states and territories, and by the appearance on the stage of two fantastics supposed to represent Uncle Sam and Miss Columbia. The latter treated the audience to a song.

The states were called for naming members of the committee of twenty-five to confer with representatives of the silver convention, and then the report of the committee on rules was taken up, and the minority report was read. It recommended that the nomination of a vice president precede that of president.

Mr. E. G. Brown, of Massachusetts advocated the minority report in a short conciliating speech and asked for a poll of the states on the question of proceeding to the nomination of a vice president. The chair ruled that Mr Brown's motion was out of order until the previous motion to take up the reports by sections was disposed of. A warm debate ensued which was finally cut off by a demand for the previous question. Nevertheless Mr. Garry Brown, of Massachusetts, and Ex-Governor Gibbs, of Texas, were permitted to address the convention, after the chair had declared the previous question carried, both of them favoring the minority report and the nomination of a southern populist for vice preiident.

The question was put on the adoption of the majority report as far as it did not conflict with that of the minority, and it was carried.

Mr. Washburne, of Massachusetts, was called to the chair to relieve Senator Allen.

It was decided by an almost unanimous vote to leave the selection of chairman of the national committee to the committee itself, instead of confiding it to the presidential nominee.

The minority report as to the order of nomination was adopted by 785 for, to 615 against it.

The report, as amended was then adopted.

At 3:05 p. m. General Weaver, of Iowa, chairman of committee on resolutions, presented and read the platform as agreed to in committee.

Mr. Coxey, of Ohio, presented the views of the minority of the committee on platform, favoring non-interest bearing bonds; good roads; extension of suffrage to women, and the ownership and control by the government of every industry necessary to the welfare of the community.

Mr. Kearby, of Texas, on the part of the minority, stated an objection to the platform to be that it was too elaborate and too much like the one adopted at Chicago. He presented a substitute platform, which was read.

A minority report of one member of the committee on rules was presented by Mr. F. Vallette, of Rhode Island. It was read, the opening paragraph being a paraphrase of the declaration of independence.

While the paper was being read the convention grew restless and shafts of sarcasm were fired at its author from every quarter. Mr. Vallette retorted with such violent anger that he was removed from the stage by force.

All amendments were laid on the table and the platform was adopted as it came from the committee.

A motion to call the states for nominations for vice-president was carried, but was reconsidered after the call had begun and at 4:33 a recess until 6 p. m. was taken.

When the convention reassembled and order was restored Delegate Pollock, of Mississippi, a member of the silver convention, was introduced by the chairman and proceeded to read the platform adopted by that body. When he reached the conclusion to the effect that Mr. Bryan had been nominated for the presidency there was an outburst of applause, drowning the further announcement of the nomination of Sewall for vice-president.

The call of states for nomination for vice-president was resumed, Mr. Bowman, of Alabama, appearing as the spokesman of that delegation to nominate for vice-president Representative Skinner, the populist congressman from North Carolina.

Representative Howard, of Alabama, placed in nomination Hon. Thomas E. Watson, the late populist congressman from Georgia.

Mr. Sovereign, master workman of the Knights of Labor, seconded the nomination of Mr. Watson on behalf of the state of Arkansas.

Mr. Lafe Pence, of New York, nominated Arthur Sewall, of Maine.

Mr. Weller, of Iowa, nominated Frack Burkitt, of Mississippi.

Captain Burnam, of Tennessee, named A. L. Mims, of that state.

L. C. Bateman, of Maine, put in nomination Mr. Mann Page, of Virginia, president of the National Farmers' Alliance.

WATSON FOR VICE-PRESIDENT.

The call of the states, the nomination and seconding speeches closed just before midnight. At this point General Weaver, with an obvious knowledge of the grave import of the telegrams which had passed between Senator Jones and Mr. Bryan, ascended the platform and in earnest tones stated that the gravity of the situation was such as to require that each delegation should have an opportunity to consult. This suggestion was received with loud cries of "no." Then General Weaver made another proposition that one vote should be taken and then an adjournment taken until tomorrow. This was also howled down and the chairman took a hand. He said the leaders of the party had been driven away from the platform and he asked if there was enough patriotism and decency in the gentlemen on the floor and in the galleries to accord a respectful hearing to any one.

The audience, shamed into silence quieted down, but the hour of midnight being now passed, all further attempt at remonstrance was abandoned and the convention rushed on.

The voting for vice president began at 12:10 a. m. The roll was completed at 12:25. Then Mr. Burkitt, of Mississippi took the stand to withdraw his name and to ask his friends to change their votes to other candidates. Mr. Mimms, of Tennessee, next took the stand and asked his friends to cast their votes for Watson, adding: "I release them from all obligation to me."

Then changing of votes began and delegates almost tumbled over one another to change their votes to Watson who soon had enough to insure a nomination, though the whole proceedings were so irregularly conducted that the clerks could not make a record. Finally Texas changed 103 to Watson and that settled it.

A motion was made to suspend the rules and make Mr. Watson the unanimous choice of the contion. As soon as this had been done the lights went out.

At 1:16 o'clock the electric lights gave out a feeble glimmer again, which slowly increased until faces were dimly visible. The chair announced that Mr. Watson had been declared the unanimous nominee for vice president. Then again the electric lights became once more fairly brilliant and the candles were blown out.

General Weaver again tried to get the convention to adjourn, but was cried down. The chair announced that the next order of business was the selection of a national committee. The convention refused to accept that and the chair retorted: "That's your order of business, anyhow:" He put the motion to adjourn and declared it carried, and at 12;50 a. m. the convention adjourned until tomorrow at 9 a. m.

BRYAN NOMINATED.

The first business of the convention on the fourth day was the selection of national committeemen. Committeemen on notification were then called for and named.

The call of the states for nominations for president was then begun.

Mr. Gaither, of Alabama, gave way to James B. Weaver, who nominated Mr. Bryan. A motion to make the nomination unanimous was made but failed, and the call of the states proceeded. Bryan's nomination was seconded by delegates from thirteen or fourteen states.

Henry W. Call, of New York, speaking for Maine delegates, nominated S. F. Norton, of Chicago.

Mr. Livingston, chairman of the Missouri delegation, named Ignatius Donnelly, of Minnesota, who declined. Then, speaking for himself, he nominated J. S. Coxey, of Ohio.

Texas seconded the nomination of Norton.

The proceedings were here interrupted long enough to hear and adopt a motion giving the national committee plenary power.

The vote was then taken for president. Bryan received 1,042, Norton 321, Donnelly 3, Debs 8, Coxey 1.

The convention then adjourned without a day.

THE POPULIST PLATFORM.

It Favors Free Coinage, an Income Tax and Government Railroads.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., July 25.—The Populist platform, as reported by the majority of the Committee on Resolutions and adopted by the convention, is as follows:

The People's party, assembled in National Convention, reaffirms its allegiance to the principles declared by the founders of the Republic, and also to the fundamental principles of just government as enunciated in the platform of the party in 1892. We recognize that, through the connivance of the present and preceding Administrations, the country has reached a crisis in its National life, as predicted in our declaration four years ago, and that prompt and patriotic action is the supreme duty of the hour.

We realize that while we have political independence, our financial and industrial independence is yet to be attained by restoring to our country the Constitutional control and exercise of the functions necessary to a people's Government, which functions have been basely surrendered by our public servants to corporate monopolies. The influence of European money changers has been more potent in shaping legislation than the voice of the American people. Executive power and patronage have been used to corrupt our Legislatures and defeat the will of the people, and plutocracy has thereby been enthroned upon the ruins of Democracy. To restore the Government intended by the fathers, and for the welfare and prosperity of this and future generations, we demand the establishment of an economic and financial system which shall make us masters of our own affairs and independent of European control, by the adoption of the following:

Declaration of Principles.

1. We demand a National money, safe and sound, issued by the general Government only, without the intervention of banks of issue, to be a full legal tender for all debts, public and private; a just, equitable and efficient means of distribution direct to the people and through the lawful disbursements of the Government.

2. We demand the free and unrestricted coinage of silver and gold at the present legal ratio of sixteen to one, without waiting for the consent of foreign Nations.

3. We demand the volume of circulating medium be steadily increased to an amount sufficient to meet the demands of the business and population and to restore the just level of prices of labor and production.

4. We denounce the sale of bonds and the increase of the public interest-bearing debt made by the present Administration as unnecessary and without authority of law, and demand that no more bonds be issued except by specific act of Congress.

5. We demand such legislation as will prevent the demonetization of the lawful money of the United States by private contract.

6. We demand that the Government, in payment of its obligations, shall use its option as to the kind of lawful money in which they are to be paid, and we denounce the present and preceding Administrations for surrendering this option to the holders of Government obligations.

7. We demand a graduated income tax, to the end that aggregated wealth shall bear its just proportion of taxation, and we regard the recent decision of the Supreme Court relative to the Income Tax law as a misinterpretation of the Constitution and an invasion of the rightful powers of Congress over the subject of taxation.

8. We demand that postal savings banks be established by the Government for the safe deposit of the savings of the people and to facilitate exchange.

Transportation.

1. Transportation being a means of exchange and a public necessity, the Government should own and operate the railroads in the interest of the people and on a nonpartisan basis, to the end that all may be accorded the same treatment in transportation, and that the tyranny and political power now exercised by the great railroad corporations which result in the impairment, if not the destruction, of the political rights and personal liberties of the citizen, may be destroyed. Such ownership is to be accomplished gradually in a manner consistent with sound public policy.

2. The interest of the United States in the public highways built with public moneys, and the proceeds of extensive grants of land to the Pacific railroads, should never be alienated, mortgaged, or sold, but guarded and protected for the general welfare as provided by the laws organizing such railroads. The foreclosure of existing liens of the United States on these roads should at once follow default in the payment thereof of the debtor companies; and at the foreclosure sales of said roads the Government shall purchase the same if it becomes necessary to protect its interests therein, or if they can be purchased at a reasonable price; and the Government shall operate said railroads as public highways for the benefit of the whole people, and not in the interest of the few, under suitable provisions for protection of life and property, giving to all transportation interests equal privileges and equal rates for fares and freights.

3. We denounce the present infamous schemes for refunding these debts, and demand that the laws now applicable thereto be executed and administered according to their interest and spirit.

4. The telegraph, like the post office system, being a necessity for the transmission of news, should be owned and operated by the Government in the interest of the people.

Land.

1. True policy demands that the National and State legislation shall be such as will ultimately enable every prudent and industrious citizen to secure a home, and therefore the land should not be monopolized for speculative purposes. All lands now held by railroads and other corporations in excess of their actual needs should by lawful means be reclaimed by the Government and held for actual settlers only, and private land monopoly, as well as alien ownership, should be prohibited.

2. We condemn the land grant frauds by which the Pacific railroad companies have, through the connivance of the Interior Department, robbed multitudes of actual bona fide settlers of their homes and miners of their claims, and we demand legislation by Congress which will enforce the exception of mineral land from such grants after as well as before the patent.

3. We demand that bona fide settlers on all public lands be granted free homes, as provided in the National Homestead law, and that no exception be made in the case of Indian reservations when opened for settlement, and that all lands not now patented come under this demand.

Direct Legislation.

We favor a system of direct legislation through the initiative and referendum, under proper constitutional safeguards.

General Propositions.

1. We demand the election of President, Vice-President and United States Senators by a direct vote of the people.

2. We tender to the patriotic people of Cuba our deepest sympathy in their heroic struggle for political freedom and independence, and we believe the time has come when the United States, the great Republic of the world, should recognize that Cuba is and of right ought to be a free and independent State.

3. We favor home rule in the Territories and the District of Columbia and the early admission of the Territories as States.

4. All public salaries should be made to correspond to the price of labor and its products.

5. In times of great industrial depression idle labor should be employed on public works as far as practicable.

6. The arbitrary course of the courts in assuming to imprison citizens for indirect contempt and ruling them by injunction should be prevented by proper legislation.

7. We favor just pensions for our disabled Union soldiers.

8. Believing that the elective franchise and an untrammelled ballot are essential to government of, for, and by the people, the People's party condemn the wholesale system of disfranchisement adopted in some of the States as unrepublican and undemocratic, and we declare it to be the duty of the several State Legislatures to take such action as will secure a full, free and fair ballot and an honest count.

9. While the foregoing propositions constitute the platform upon which our party stands, and for the vindication of which its organization will be maintained, we recognize that the great and pressing issue of the pending campaign upon which the present election will turn is the financial question, and upon this great and specific issue between the parties we cordially invite the aid and co-operation of all organizations and citizens agreeing with us upon this vital question.

Boston has just discovered that it has streets to the number of 550 with duplicated names.

Streets with Gold Pavements.

Prescott, the capital of Arizona, boasts that it is the nearest approach to the New Jerusalem, as described in the Bible, as its streets are being paved with gold. The granite used for pavements contains $4 in gold and 20 cents in silver to every ton, so that in time, when less expensive methods of reducing ores are used, it may pay the city to tear up and crush its street pavements.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

Just From Georgia

A RHYME OF GOOD TIMES.

Good times—they are coming;
Heed not what they say;
You can hear 'em humming
Miles and miles away!
Sailing through the summer,
Fighting through the freeze—
Riding down the rivers
And blowing in the breeze.

Good times—they are coming;
See 'em on the run!
Twinkling in the dew drops
And shining in the sun.
Dimpling o'er the daises,
Babbling in the brook
And looking at a fellow
Like his sweatheart used to look.

Good times—they are coming;
Brethren, clear the way!
Beneath the snows of winter
There blooms the rose of May.
And the hills are green with clover,
The fields with corn and hay,
And we'll all sing hallelujia
When the good times come to stay.
Frank L. Stanton in Atlanta Constitution.

HOW THEY MANAGED.

"Pack up your things as soon as you please, my dear," said Mr. Chesney. "We're going to move on Saturday."

Mr. and Mrs Chesney were a matrimonial firm—there was no question about that—but Mrs. Chesney had always been a silent partner in the same.

("If ever I get married," said Elma, a bright-eyed girl of seventeen, "I won't be put upon as Mamma is!" "Papa is a regular despot—that's what papa is!" decided Will, a tall stripling of fifteen.)

"Where, my dear?" asked Mrs. Chesney, with a little start.

"Into the country," said the family autocrat. "I'm tired of this city business. It costs a great deal more than it comes to. I'm told you can live at half the expense in the country."

"But," gasped Mrs. Chesney, "what is to become of the children's education?"

"There's a good district school in the neighborhood, not more than a mile distant," explained the husband, "and exercise will do them good."

"And what are we to do for society?"

"Pshaw!" said Chesney. "I wouldn't give a rap for people who can't be society for themselves. There'll be the housework to do, you know—nobody keeps a girl in the country—and plenty of chores about the place for Will and Spencer. I shall keep a horse if I can get one cheap, for the station is half a mile from the place, and I've bargained for a couple of cows and small pigs."

Will and Spencer looked askance at each other.

"It'll do us good to walk a mile to school," muttered the elder; "but father must have a horse to carry him half a mile to the station."

"That's father's logic all over," observed Spencer.

While Mr. Chesney explained to his wife the various advantages which were to accrue from the promised move.

"It's unfortunate," said he, "that Elma and Rosie weren't boys. Such a lot of women folks are enough to swamp any family. Men, now, can always earn their bread. But we must try to make everybody useful in some way or other. It's so healthy you know," added he. "And the rent won't be half of what we pay here."

"Are there any modern conveniences about the place?" timidly inquired Mrs. Chesney.

"There's a spring of excellent water about a hundred yards from the house," said her husband.

Mrs. Chesney grew pale.

"Have I got to walk a hundred yards for every drop of water I want?" said she.

"And a large rain-water hogshead under the eaves of the house," added Mr. Chesney. "And I've already got a bargain in kerosene lamps. As for candles, I am given to understand that the good housekeepers thereabouts make 'em themselves in tin molds. There's nothing like economy. Now I do beg to know, Abigail," he added, irritably, "what are you looking so lackadaisical about? Do you expect to sit still and fold your hands, while I do all the work? Give me a woman for sheer natural laziness!"

"I am not lazy, George," said the poor wife, with a bewildered air; "but—all this is so new and strange at first. But I'll try to get accustomed to it—I'll try my very best."

"I hate the country!" said Elma. "I'd as soon go to prison and done with it."

"Oh, Ellie, don't talk so," said Rose. "There are wild roses and robins there, just as one sees on the painted plaques in the store windows. And perhaps we can have a flower-bed, and some dear little downy chickens!"

But the first sight of Mulleinstalk Farm was dispiriting in the extreme.

"Is this home?" said Elma with an indescribable intonation in her voice.

"We'll get things all straightened up, after a while," said Mr. Chesney bustling to drive away the pigs, who had broken out of their pen and were squealing dismally under the window.

Mrs. Chesney cried herself to sleep that night, and awakened the next morning with every bone instinct with shooting pains.

"And no wonder," said Spencer. "There's a foot of water in the cellar."

"We must have it drained," said Mr. Chesney, with an uneasy look; "but there's plenty of things to do first."

And now began a reign of the strictest economy.

"Save, save, save! That is the chief thing," he kept repeating, briskly. "Women folks can't earn; they should try their best to save."

"It's all very well for papa," growled Will. "He goes to the city every day and sees something besides the pigs and the dead apple trees. He orders a new suit when he needs it. Look at mamma's patched gown and Rosie's dyed bonnet strings! Why, they can't even go to church, they are such objects. He gets his lunch at a restaurant, and we eat cold beans and drink dandelion coffee and sage tea!"

"Boys," fluttered Rosie, "I've an idea. Mary Penn, who lives on the next farm, you know, came to see Elma and me yesterday. Papa is earning his living; we'll earn something, too."

"I should like to know how," muttered Spencer. "I might hire out somewhere as a farm hand, if it wasn't for that wretched old horse, and the pigs, and the woodchopping, and—"

"Oh, but there is something that won't interfere with the chores, nor with school!" said cheerful little Rosie. "Just listen—all I ask of you is to listen!"

The weeks grew into months, and the family had left off complaining now. Apparently they were resigned to their doom. But there were some things that Mr. Chesney could not explain at all.

A new rug brightened up the dismal hues of the parlor carpet. Rosie had a crimson merino dress, trimmed with black velvet bars; Elma's fall jacket was edged with substantial black fur; and—grand grand climax of extravagance—Mrs. Chesney had a new shawl, in place of the old broche garment which had been her mother's before her!

He looked over the housekeeping books with renewed vigilance; he consulted the stubs of his check-book with a glance that nothing could escape.

"I— don't— know — how— they— manage it," said he, scratching his nose with the lead-pencil that he always carried. "I hate mysteries, and I mean to be at the bottom of this before I'm an hour older."

He took his account book under his arm and marched into the kitchen, where his wife was clearing away the the late supper.

"Abigail," said he, "how is this? I've given you no money. You've long left off asking for money. How have you managed to smarten yourself and the children up so? I won't be cheated by my own wife!"

Elma set down the pitcher which she was wiping, and came and stood before her father with glittering eyes and cheeks stained with crimson, like a flag of battle.

"Papa," she said, "you must not speak to mamma so. Mamma would not cheat you nor anybody else. It's money that we have earned ourselves. There! Now!"

Mr. Chesney stared at the girl with incredulous eyes.

"And if you don't believe it, come and see how," said Elma, flinging down her towel. "Mary Penn showed us. She told us everything, and gave us the first swarm of bees. There are fourteen hives down under the south wall. Spencer sold the honey for us; and we planted all the nice flowers that grow down in the meadow, that you said was too stony and barren even for the sheep to pasture upon; and Will dug and hoed around them after the chores were all done, and we sent boxes and bouquets of lilies and verbenas to the city every day by Mr. Penn's wagon. And we gathered wild strawberries before the sun was up, and got cherries out of the old lane, and the money is all ours—every cent of it!"

"Honey, eh?" said Mr. Chesney, staring at the row of hives, for Elma had dragged him out into the November moonlight to the scene of action. "Well, I've seen these many a time, but I always s'posed they belonged to Squire Penn's folks. And flowers, and wild berries! Didn't think there was so much money in 'em. Guess I'll try the business myself next year. Queer that the womenfolks should have got the start of me!"

And after that he regarded his family with more respect. The mere fact that they could earn money had elevated them immensely in his sight.

But when spring came he lost his able coadjutor.

Miss Elma incidentally announced to him one day that she was going to be married to Walter Penn the next week.

"And Mamma is coming to live with us," added Elma. "She can't stand the damp house and this hard work any longer."

But Mrs. Chesney did not go to the Penn Farm. Mr. Chesney hired a stout serving-maid, and laid drain pipes under the kitchen stoop.

If his wife understood her business so well, it was worth while to keep her well and active, he considered.

"I couldn't well leave papa, you know," said Mrs. Chesney to Elma. "He means well, and now that Rebecca Beckel is coming here, and the kitchen is dry, we shall get along nicely. I wouldn't go back to the city for anything now."

"Nor I, either," said Elma. "And oh, mamma, I shall always love those bee-hives under the holly-hocks, for it was there Walter asked me to be his wife!"

And Mrs. Chesney tearfully kissed her daughter. She, too, had been happy once, and had her dreams.

It was to be hoped that Walter Penn was made of different metal from George Chesney.

To Elma, however, all the world was couleur de rose. Had she not the eternal talisman of Youth and Love?

The Mighty Pen.

In Birmingham, England, there are a number of factories that make 150,000,000 pens every week. The majority of the workers in these factories are women.

To make 1,000,000 pens fully a ton of steel is needed. There is so much work necessary to manufacture a single pen that if they were not made in such bulk they would be much more expensive.

When the steel leaves the presses it is shaped like a pen, but is flat instead of rounding. The flat pieces are put in a furnace, where they remain till they are redhot, when they are hammered and stamped.

More steel is used every year in the making of pens than in the manufacture of guns, swords and needles throughout the world. The typewriter has rather checked the enormous use of steel pens, still they lead.

Forty years ago when pens, superceded quills it was one of the mysteries of the day how the slit was made down the center of the pen. Those employed in that part of the work were made to take on oath not to reveal the process. Now everybody knows that the slit is made by a pair of scissors fixed in a press. Men roll the steel to its proper thickness; then women cut it in strips the width of two pens by means of presses.

Curative.

"That fellow turns up on every corner."

"Why don't you get rid of him?"

"How can I?"

"Why, easy—lend him a dollar!"—Boston Globe.

Children's Column

THE CIRCUS PARADE.

The circus! the circus! the throb of the drums,
And the blare of the horns as the band wagon comes;
The clash and the clang of the cymbals that beat,
As the glittering pageant winds down the long street!

In the circus parade there is glory clean down
From the first spangled horse to the mule of the clown,
With the gleam and the glint and the glamour and glare
Of the days of enchantment all glimmering there!

And there are the banners of silvery fold
Caressing the winds with their fringes of gold,
And their high-lifted standards with spear tips aglow,
And the helmeted knights that go riding below.

There's the chariot, wrought of some marvelous shell,
The sea gave to Neptune, first washing it well
With its fabulous waters of gold, till it gleams
Like the galleon rare of an argonaut's dreams.

And the elephant, too (with his undulant stride
That rocks the high throne of a king in his pride,)
That in jungles of India shook from his flanks
The tigers that leapt from the Jujubee banks.

Here's the long, ever-changing, mysterious line
Of cages, with hints of there glories divine,
From the barred little windows, cut high in the rear,
Where the close-hidden animals' noses appear.

Here's the pyramid car, with its splendor and flash,
And the goddess on high, in a hot scarlet sash
And a pen-wiper skirt! Oh, the rarest of sights
Is this "Queen of the Air" in cerulean tights!

Then the far-away clash of the cymbals, and then
The swoon of the tune ere it wakens again,
With the capering tones of the gallant cornet,
That go dancing away in a mad minuet.

The circus! The circus! The throb of the drums,
And the blare of the horns as the band wagon comes;
The clash and the clang of the cymbals that beat,
As the glittering pageant winds down the long street.

A CLEVER HAWK.

A description of a most remarkable hawk has been sent from Ireland. A farmer in the south of the country has a herd of seventy-five cows, which have to be sent daily to some outlying common land at some distance from the farmhouse. His son, a lad of about sixteen, a year or two since took a hawk's nest with young ones in it, killing the parent birds, who had been flying off with his father's chickens. One of the little birds he reared, making a great pet of it as it grew up, and every day for a considerable time he took it with him when he went to fetch the cows.

A short time since the boy injured his foot so that he could not walk. His father was absent, and so it came about that no one was able to go for the herd. What was the surprise of the boy and his mother to see the cows come into the yard not much after the usual time. The fact was that the hawk had gone alone, and had succeeded in bringing up the whole herd unaided.

The next night Mr. Hawk's methods were observed. He first of all gathered his herd together in the most skilful way and then started them off for the farm. When a cow loitered he flew at it fiercely, and if it refused to quicken its steps he struck it with his great wings. When his herd was in good order he perched himself with great assurance on the horn of the last cow.

Since then the hawk has always been sent for the cows at 5 o'clock, and he is seldom behind time in bringing them up. His fame has spread abroad, and many people have visited the farm to see him perform his clever task.

RIDING A DONKEY.

When we were boys our first lessons in riding were taken on (and off) the back of a donkey. He was a creature of changeable, but, on the whole, amiable disposition. When his temper gave way before the trials to which we subjected it, we took many lessons in that gentle art of falling off which is so useful a supplement to the science of riding as more generally understood. We can make this avowal without any sense of shame now, for it happened once on a day forever memorable that our donkey kicked off our riding master himself in all his glory of boots and breeches.

Joe, the coachman's boy, declared all our theory of donkey riding to be incorrect, and it is significant that, though the donkey could kick off the riding master, boots and breeches and all, it entirely failed to shake Joe from his seat by any of its antics. But then Joe's method was entirely different from that of the riding master's. It was, indeed, so simple as scarcely to deserve the name of method, being contained in the single precept that you should sit as near the tail of the animal as possible. That was the sum total of his theory of donkey riding, and it worked to perfection in practice. Our uncle, who was in the navy, explained the mechanics of Joe's style of riding nautically. "It's as plain as a pikestaff," said he, "that when you've got all the weight in the stern the craft isn't likely to go down by the head."—Macmillan's Magazine.

A STRANGE RABBIT FREAK.

Miss Bertrand, a young lady living in Tocaloma, Cal., is the owner of a rabbit that differs from any other rabbit mentioned in zoology. This particular bunnie has but one ear, and that one is located directly on the top of its head and is about twice as large as it ought to be.

Miss Bertrand's father is a hotel proprietor, and the odd-looking rabbit is a great pet around the hostelry. According to the San Francisco Call, the rabbit must have known that he was different from other rabbits and therefore entitled to some consideration, for he approached the hotel as if desirous of being captured.

When chased he did not run away, but hid in a clump of bushes and remained there until his captor picked him up. Since then he has become very tame, but at no time did the little fellow evince any great amount of fear.

The body of the rabbit is just like that of any other cotton-tail, and so is his head. The fur is the same, and the animal seems to be about the size of other members of the same species. But he has only one ear, and this gives him an uncanny appearance. He has been dubbed the "Unicorn Rabbit," and the solitary ear gives him a ferocious aspect.

While bunnie has but one outer ear there seem to be two orifices. The openings are at the sides of the ear and not far from the usual places. From around them the skin grows towards the centre of the head, where it unites and forms the single large ear. The opening or hollow part of this ear is turned backward instead of to the sides, as is usual with rabbit's ears.

The rabbit does not seem to be annoyed by having but one ear. He hops about the hotel as contented ar any rabbit could be, and when picked up and petted seems to be delighted at receiving the attention.

Knew His Business.

"Who is that man who is explaining all about the correct use of the bicycle?"

"Oh, he's one of our most prominent experts."

"Ah, an expert rider!"

"No — er — an expert talker."—Judge.

SCIENTIFIC SCRAPS.

than 16,000 persons die in Italy every year from malarial fever, and there are 4,000 communes where quinine is not to be had.

A hundred years ago the deaths from small-pox in Germany were 65,000 a year. Today, thanks to compulsory vaccination, they are only 114 a year.

Professor Forel has calculated that in 64,000 years the lake of Geneva, in Switzerland, will have been filled up completely with sediment and changed into a meadow.

Telephonic communication between London and Paris is to be supplemented by four new wires. The new wires are to be used both for telephonic and telegraphic purposes.

The skeleton of what is reported to be a small mammoth was unearthed the other day in West Philadelphia. A skull of an Indian was found near by. The remains have been deposited in the Wisconsin Institution.

The New York Academy of Medicine is divided on the merits of the anti-toxine treatment of diphtheria, but facts from every centre in the civilized world are pouring in, and these are stubborn things to butt against.

Statistics of the city of Glasgow, Scotland, fever hospital are to hand. The year 1895 shows that under the anti-toxine treatment of diphtheria, the death rate shrunk from 34.5 per cent to 14 per cent. Dr. Marsh contrasts this low death rate with the high mortality of the tracheotomy cases in previous years, viz: 76.2 per cent in 1893 and 86.9 per cent in 1894.

By actual measurement of fifty skeletons, the right arm and left arm and left leg have been found to be longer in twenty-three, the left arm and right leg in six, the limbs on the right longer than those on the left in four, and in the remainder the inequality of the limbs was varied. Only seven out of seventy skeletons measured, or ten per cent, had limbs of equal length.

Gold in Deer Teeth.

Stories have been told about the finding of gold in the crops of chickens, in the stomachs of fishes, between the toes of wolves and in a variety of odd places, but Frank Dixon, a taxidermist of this city, is the first to find gold on the teeth of a wild deer. This story sounds improbable, but it is true.

Mr. Dixon received recently from Colorado a couple of deer heads to be mounted. The first thing he did was to skin the heads. He noticed in handling the skulls that the rows of teeth were incrusted with a brownish yellow substance. In the crevices between the teeth the incrustation was heaviest and sparkled when held to the light. Mr. Dixon knew the deer were killed in a part of Colorado where gold dust had been found. He scraped some of the incrustation from the teeth and took it to his friend, Shirley Millet, dentist. Dr. Millet tested it with chemicals and said it was gold. Mr. Dixon scraped off a lot more and took it to Mr. Lawrence, assayist. Then the taxidermist wrote to Colorado and found out the exact spot where the deer were shot and he began to make preparations to close out his business here and go there to hunt for gold.

"My theory about this thing is this," said Mr. Dixon. "Every herd of deer has a salt lick somewhere, where they go occasionally to lick the earth for the salt there is in it. The herd never wanders far away from this lick. The soil of the lick that was used by these two deer was full of gold dust, and the acid of the deers' mouths held it and incrusted it on the teeth. Or, perhaps, the gold was picked up by the deer in browsing.—Kansas City Star.

"The bloomer woman" is growing scarce and scarcer on the bicycle path. One reason for her disappearance, the New York Advertiser explains, is that few women look well in bifurcated garments, and another is that bloomer women do not command the respect of the gamins on the road as do their sisters who wear skirts.

It is worthy of note, thinks the Chicago Times-Herald, that a portion of the tide of immigration is turning toward the pine land clearings of North Wisconsin. There the settler finds rich land at low prices and a convenient market for his produce. The success of the first settlers in that region seems to answer the old inquiry: "What will the country come to when the pine is all cut off?" The prosperous future of the pine region towns as agricultural and manufacturing communities is apparently fully assured.

The Mark Lane Express, of London, refers to measures involving "grants" of about $28,000,000 for "the relief of the distressed agriculturist," now before the Austrian legislative bodies. The fact is that the subject of "relief" to the farmer is a burning one before nearly all the Legislatures of the civilized world except those of America. The forms of relief proposed in Austria are remissions of ground tax for fifteen years, compensation for losses by natural causes, including pests; allowances for improvements made and "advances" from the public treasury for improvements and enterprises of various kinds.

The creatures that seem to give Professor Langley most encouragement in his efforts to solve the man-flight problem are the ten-pound turkey buzzards that loaf about in the atmosphere, hour after hour, far above the Potomac, without flapping a wing. Professor Langley and Professor Bell thinks that we can do that after we learn how, and Professor Bell thinks that Professor Langley is very nearly ready to teach. "If we saw cannon balls floating in the air," says Professor Bell, "we would think it a miracle. The only reason we are not quite as much suprised at a soaring bird is because we are used to it."

Says the Forum: It is, of course, impossible to give a complete list of Baron de Hirsch's benefactions, but the following are probably the best known: Jewish Colonization Association, $10,000,000; De Hirsch trust for the United States, $2,500,000; trust fund for education in Galicia, $5,000,000; fund for assistance of tradesmen in Vienna and Buda-Pesth, $1,455,000; fund for the Hungarian poor, $1,455,000; turf winnings during 1891-4, distributed for charitable purposes, $500,000; gift to Empress of Russia for charitable purposes during Russo-Turkish war, $200,000; gifts in 1893 to London hospitals and other charities, $200,000; gift to Alliance Israelite Universelle, $400,000; proceeds of the sale of his son's racing stud, distributed among charities, $60,000. These alone amount to the enormous sum of nearly $22,000,000. Baron de Hirsch's noble work does not cease with his death, but rests on carefully planned foundations, administered by agents he chose in the several countries.

ASSASSINS OF COL. HUNTER HUNG.

Contract for Montgomery's New Freight Depot Let—Grasshoppers Destroying Crops—Heat Prostrations—Victims of a Storm—Death on the Track.

Religious Revival.

The series of meeting at the Baptist church, at Pratt City, closed Thursday night, with twenty-eight accessions to the church.

Overcome by the Heat.

Two cases of prostration from heat occurred at Selma Thursday. Live stock is suffering greatly. Planters are gloomy over the damage done to the cotton crop.

The Assassin Hung.

The two negroes who attempted to assassinate Col. C. D. Hunter, of Dallas county, two weeks ago, were lynched near the scene of their crime Friday night. The bodies were found swinging from a bridge and pierced with many bullets.

Huntsville Industrial School.

At the regular meeting of the board of trustees of the Huntsville Graded and Industrial school, July 28, Rev. W. L. Douglas was elected unanimously principal and superintendent of the school. Rev. Douglas formerly was a resident of Huntsville, Ala., but at present resides in Chattanooga, Tenn. The citizens of Huntsville feel proud of the selection.

Death From Heart Disease.

Nathan Williams, a negro about 53 years of age, dropped dead Friday morning about 10 o'clock from heart disease on Fourth avenue near Thirteenth street, Birmingham. He had not been very well of late, complaining of heart trouble. Coroner R. E. Jones made a preliminary investigation, but did not deem an inquest necessary. Williams came from Tennessee.

Important Contract Let.

The Louisville and Nashville railroad has let the contract for the building of their new freight depot at Montgomery to Dodson & Co., of Atlanta. The contract price is $32 000. The contract for building the underpass under the tracks through Commerce street to the river was let to Cook & Laurie, of Montgomery. Their bid was for the square foot and the contract will amount to a little more than $13,000.

"And No One Ministered Unto Him."

W. D. Cosby, a white man of good address, who had been in Selma several days without funds, went into Lockhart's livery stable in that city Friday afternoon and asked for a place to lie down. He was told to lie on a cot in the office. Later he went up stairs and laid down on the hay. About dark he was found cold in death. Papers on his person identify him and show that he is prominently connected in Lynchburg, Va. It is thought death was caused from a congestive chill.

The Tramp Who Was Killed.

It transpires that the tramp, Fred Arnsworth, who was killed in the wreck on the L. & N. Saturday was a son of a wealthy man at Fort Worth, Tex. The Warner-Smiley Company received a message from Fort Worth ordering them to embalm the body and prepare it for shipment and send it to Texas. The Live Stock National Bank, of Fort Worth, telegraphed that they would be responsible for all expenses and the remains were shipped Saturday night shortly after midnight.

Laid Up for Repairs.

The R. T. Coles, Captain J. McDermott, Engineer Ben Samuel, broke her crank shaft and rammed her cylinder head, completely disabling the vessel, ten miles above Decatur, near Bluff City, about noon Thursday. The William Towle went to her assistance and towed her to this city for repairs. She was light on passengers and freight and on her regular trip from Chattanooga. The Tennessee is about 8 feet on the water gauge, the weather ranging from 95 and upwards and the soil getting very dry.

Grasshoppers Destroying Crops.

The striped and green grasshoppers have invaded the farms of Messrs. James Pepper and M. Brown, three miles southwest of Decatur, having already destroyed a thirty acre field of clover and a strip of eight acres in a fifteen acre field of cotton. The insects made their appearance in the same locality three years ago and destroyed about fourteen acres of grain. The farmers are alarmed at the amount of damage the insects have wrought in only about a week's time and have set to work to invent means of destroying them.

Slept on the Track.

Saturday afternoon a crowd of negro laborers, who came from Georgia, left for Jasper to lay in a supply of whisky. They all got drunk and started back for Cordova. They reached Cane Creek trestle a short distance from Cordova and three of them refused to come further, and laid down and went to sleep. The passenger train that is due at Cordova at midnight ran over them and two, Wick Stewart and Tom Turner, were instantly killed, being literally ground into fragments and one other was badly wounded and was taken to Jasper for medical treatment.

Fire at Pratt City.

A fire broke out in A. Fayette's houses on Young street, Pratt City, at 9:30 o'clock Friday morning, and four three-room houses belonging to A. Fayette and one belonging to Mr. Evans were completely destroyed. The furniture in all of them was saved, but in a badly damaged condition. For a while it seemed that two whole blocks would go, but by the heroic efforts of the firemen, assisted by the public, the fire was confined to narrow limits. The heat was terrific and two persons were overcome by it. The money loss has not been ascertained. There was some insurance. It is stated that the gross loss will not exceed $2,000.

Confession of an Assassin.

There Were Forty-Seven Bodies.

Friday morning the dead from the wreck near Atlantic City, N. J., were all gathered at the old sea view excursion house, which was improvised into a morgue. The bodies were laid about the floor of the big dancing hall of the pavilion in rows. They were in all conditions of mutilation. There were headless, armless and legless trunks, and in some instances the bodies were crushed out of all semblance of recognition. There were forty-seven bodies on view. Moving through the horrible mass were a stream of people, some curious, but the majority with anxiety pictured on their faces or weeping, while looking for loved ones or friends.

RECKLESS AND FATAL SPORT.

A Chute Boat Runs Down a Row Boat, Drowns Three Persons.

Three people were killed or drowned and a fourth seriously injured in an accident at Lake Ottosee, an outing resort three miles from Knoxville, Tenn., at 4 o'clock Thursday afternoon. The dead are: Charles Perrin, aged 18. Walter Wright, aged 21. Miss Carrie P. Hibbs, aged 17. The injured is Mrs. Forester, a widow lady of Alabama, who was chaperoning the party.

The party were on the lake in a light row boat and came in the course of the chute boats.

A chute boat loaded with ten people dashed down the incline at a terrific rate of speed and hit the water with much force. It rebounded into the air and on the second bound it struck the row boat with its occupants. The crash upset the row boat and sent the passengers into the water and down to their death, with the exception of Mrs. Forester, who came to the surface and caught on to the upturned boat, where she clung until assistance arrived. Expert divers were soon put to work and the bodies recovered. An examination showed that the young people had been terribly bruised, perhaps by the chute boat when it struck them. The unfortunate ones were all members of the Broad Street Methodist Episcopal church, south, which was having its annual picnic at the lake when the accident occurred.

In the hall of his plantation home in the western part of the county surrounded by his wife and daughter, has been captured at Nanafalia, Marengo county. His name is Israel Mobley. He has made a full confession, implicating another negro on Colonel Hunter's place known as "Little Billie," and he, too, has been arrested. Israel says that he lay around the place for several nights before he got a chance to shoot. There are two indictments against Israel for stealing cotton, on which Colonel Hunter's name appeared as prosecutor. The negro stated that he had made up his mind to kill Colonel Hunter.

Victims of a Storm.

Information has been received of a terrible accident which happened at Columbus City, a small place in Marshall county across the Tennessee river, Saturday evening. A storm of no mean proportions came up and the signs were that a heavy rain was about to fall. Misses Dovie Proctor and Bishop, daughters of prominent citizens, accompanied by Maynard while out walking were caught in the storm. To escape the fury of the elements the trio entered an old building for shelter. The storm increased in velocity and the rain came down in torrents. The building in which the young people had gone for shelter could not withstand the winds and collapsed. The three were caught beneath the debris. Miss Proctor and Maynard Covans were instantly killed. Miss Bishop was so seriously injured that her life is in danger. Miss Proctor is the daughter of one of the best known families in the county. Everything possible is being done for the injured young lady. There is sadness in the little city.

Heat Prostrations Thursday.

CINCINNATI.—Twenty-nine, of which five were fatal. Thermometer registered 92 at the government observatory at 2 p. m., street instruments showing 99 in the shade.

INDIANAPOLIS.—Two deaths. The mercury at 1:30 p. m. stood at 95 in the shade.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—Four deaths and more than a score of prostrations. Mean temperature 89, highest 98.

ST. LOUIS.—Fifty victims treated at the city dispensary and various hospitals, and probably other cases not reported. Ten deaths. Maximum temperature, in the shade and protected from reflected heat, 97.

Played Havoc With Crops.

A drouth of several weeks' duration, which has played havoc with the crops in the section of the state around Meridian, was broken Saturday afternoon by a good general rain that virtually saved the corn and cotton from destruction. The first bale of new cotton was received in Meridian Saturday morning, having been shipped to Marks, Rothenberg & Co. by Weems & Floyd, of Shubuta. The bale was sold at public auction in front of the Cotton Exchange Saturday and was sold at 8½ cents, being purchased by a representative of A. S. Johnston's cotton house.

At Sagua la Grande for the week ended July 18 sixty-five new cases of yellow fever were reported, with eight deaths.

Americans Released from Prison.

The department of state is advised by Consul General Lee at Havana, under date of July 23, that Mr. George Calver, an American citizen, arrested in Manzanillo, district of Santiago de Cuba, in the month of April of this year, and Manuel Romagosa, also an American citizen, residing in the same province, have been officially notified of their unconditional release from prison.

Receipts and Expenditures.

The official treasury statement issued Saturday shows that the receipts of the government for July were $29,069,697 and the expenditures were $42,088,468, a deficit for the month of $13,018,871. The receipts for July were almost exactly what they were in July, 1895, while the expenditures were $3,500,000 greator. The customs receipts for July were $12,157,330, or $2,000,000 less than for July, 1894, while the receipts from internal revenue were $14,302,532, or nearly $2,000,000 greater than those for July, 1895. In expenditures the principal items that show an increase over July, 1895, are: Civil and miscellaneous, $2,300,000; navy, $1,400,000, and pensions, $400,000.

Quick Time Across the Continent.

Word was received at the navy department Friday that the special train carrying 100 men of the crew of the Charleston from Mare Island, California, to Norfolk, had arrived at the latter point, making the trip by the Southern route in four days and twenty-three hours, breaking all previous records for similar trans-continental journeys. Until recently enlisted men were exchanged between the Pacific and Atlantic coasts by way of Panama, consuming an average of thirty-five days, during which the men's services were lost to the navy, although their pay and subsistence went on. The advantage of the new transit system would be very great in time of sudden hostilities.

The Whitford Incident.

The United States has again been impelled to call on the government of Colombia to apologize for the schooner Whitford incident. A cablegram has been sent to the minister of the United States at Bogota, a copy of which he was instructed to lay before the Colombian government, demanded that that government reply immediately to the two notes recently addressed to it in regard to making amends for the outrage committed on the American vessel Whitford in March last. Minister McKinney is directed to say to the Colombian government that it must lose no more time in making an immediate disavowal and apology for the outrage perpetrated by its officials on an American merchantman.

Egypt's Dread Scourge.

Advices received at the marine hospital Friday from Alexandria, Egypt, show that the cholera outbreak there had got beyond the control of the sanitary authorities. For nine months they fought the disease with energy and as long as the infected area was small the limited force of European doctors was sufficient to handle it. Now, however, the dimensions of the outbreak forbid any successful attempt to stamp out the disease. The report, dated July 11, says during the week before last fresh outbreaks occurred in sixty-nine different places and last week eighty-seven. During the seven days up to the 1st instant 1,200 deaths were reported, and in the following six days 1,700 deaths. So far 8,069 deaths have occurred from the present outbreak, and it is feared that these figures will be largely increased before the desease runs its course.

Changes in Postal Methods.

Authority is given to railway postoffice clerks acting as transfer clerks and designated to receive and deliver mails outside of the postoffice to deliver such mails to the persons addressed or authorized agents. The following provisions are made:

Matter addressed to a discontinued office may be delivered from the nearest office thereto. Postmasters, where transit mail is delayed by casualties, may deliver matter to the parties addressed. When a letter from a foreign country arrives, not in a closed mail, directed to a postoffice other than that of the port of arrival, the person addressed may be given his mail. Diplomatic representatives will be allowed personally to receive mail matter from any postoffice through which it may be passing. Strict injunction for identifying is given for all these cases.

Miss Brown's Murderer Confesses.

James Smith, who murdered Miss Margaret Brown at Seat Pleasant, Md., Tuesday night, was captured Wednesday morning by Sergeant Bryan, of the Washington police force, at No. 310 East Capitol street, the city residence of the mother of the murdered girl. Smith has made a full confession of the crime and is held awaiting requisition papers from Governor Lowndes, of Maryland. He admits that he attempted to assault Miss Brown, who resisted until he choked her into insensibility. Smith seems to have followed exactly the lines of the negro Ford, recently executed in Washington for the murder of Elsie Kregler. When he failed to accomplish his purpose he cut his intended victim's throat to prevent her identifying him. The Washington city police suspected he would come to the East Capitol street where he was formerly employed, and they had the place watched. When he reached there Wednesday morning the authorities were notified and he was arrested. He made no resistance.

The Action of the Bankers.

Deposits of gold at the sub-treasury in New York up to 1 o'clock Monday $375,000 making a total deposited of $18,015,000. The committee of seven appointed at the bankers' conference last week were in session Monday and it was stated that they outlined a scheme to be given out later. It is not thought that the bankers will make public the details of the plan. The street, so far as this is concerned, however, will be perfectly satisfied to know that foreign bankers with the assistance of local banks, will stand together for the maintenance of the treasury gold reserve until the November elections are decided.

A large portion of the $2,750,000 in gold subscribed by the banks and trust companies of Philadelphia to preserve the government reserve was exchanged for government notes or legal tender certificates at the sub-treasury Monday afternoon.

The Boston banks again came forward Tuesday with an offer of a million dollars in gold coin to the treasury and Philadelphia also offered $300,000. If the department gets all in sight the balance will be raised to $112,000,000. The withdrawals Tuesday were $209,300 in gold coin and $26,044 in bars, leaving the balance stand at $104,832,623.

PROSTRATIONS FROM HEAT.

Men and Horses Fall Dead and Dogs Go Mad.

There were seven prostrations from extreme heat Wednesday in Chicago. Reports by telegraph from the principal cities and towns of the West and South show unusually hot weather.

St. Louis reports thirty-four prostrations, many will probably die and thirty-six horses fell dead in the streets Scores of dogs were driven mad. The temperature was 98, and the suffering was increased by humidity in the atmosphere. Two deaths are reported

Louisville thermometer showed 98 breaking the hot weather record of fifteen years. Two deaths are reported.

At Quincy, Ill., it is 100 in the shad and many prostrations have occurred None are serious, however,

Centralia reports 102, and Carlyl 104, with two deaths.

There were twenty-three heat victims in the vicinity of Clarksville Tenn. The mercury stood at 100 degrees. A farm hand fell dead near Kennedy, and Gurnett Roach, a wealthy young Southern Kentucky planter, was overcome in his tobacco field and is in a critical condition.

Sixteen workmen on the water main were prostrated and three workmen on the electric street railway and two streets grading hands were also overcome. It is the hottest day in ten years.

Three men died at Louisville, Ky., from the effects of sunstroke, while about twenty others were prostrated, some seriously. Many of them may not recover.

So far four persons have been overcome by the heat in Columbia, S. C., and one death has been reported. The thermometer has reached 100 in the shade.

COMMERCIAL SITUATION

Reviewed by R. G. Dun & Co. for the Week Ending July 31st.

BUSINESS CONDITIONS IMPROVED

Yet Business Lags—Further Reduction in Print Cloths—No Gain in Woolens—Slight Advance in Boots and Shoes, Leather Stiff, Hides Off, and Iron Heavy.

Business conditions have clearly improved, though business has not. It is a torpid season and better prospects have little effect as yet. Gold exports have been stopped and foreign advices are more promising as respects an early and large demand for American products. The operations of foreigners in the stock market have reflected little beyond the troubles of speculators at the London settlements and varying degrees of ignorance about American affairs. The prospect for large crops of cotton and corn is still excellent and neither movement of wheat nor markets give countenance to low estimates.

Several weeks of extremely slack demand for cotton goods have brought a further reduction in print cloths to 2,44 cents, instead of the advance expected in consequence of the stoppage of 4,000,000 spindles, but prints are selling more freely, while brown and bleached goods are dull, except for export kinds.

The woolen mills do not gain, light weights opening 5 to 7½ per cent lower in price than last year, and sales of wool now reported are less than a quarter of a full week's consumption.

The boot and shoe industry has secured slight further advances from the lowest point in brogans and calf boots and shoes, but new orders are scanty, the more because the permanence of the advance is questioned. Leather is stubbornly held without change in prices, and in some grades is really scarce, although manufacturers are buying only for actual needs, but hides have turned downward sharply at Chicago, declining 5 per cent for the week's heavy accumulations.

The iron industry is helped but little by the settlement which gives puddlers of the Ohio region 50 cents advance in wages, because the demand is so slight that few mills can run and the association price is 1.2 cents, while steel bars are now being sold at less than 1.05 cents. A ray of encouragement comes to rail mills, two considerable sales having been made for 20,000 tons to a New England road and 10,000 by the new Premier Steel company of Indianapolis. But otherwise sales are small. Trade in wire nails has been so light that even the trifling allotment of 65,000 kegs for July is supposed to have exceeded sales and the association is in session in Boston to consider the matter. The billet pool has been constantly undersold by middlemen, and the open hearth steel men held a session at which reduction of prices was discussed. Many contracts for structural works are held back, and there is very little done in that line, and orders for plates and pipe are scarce. It is not strange that pig is weak, Bessemer being $11 50 at Pittsburg and southern somewhat lower at the east.

The volume of domestic trade, judging from exchanges, has been small even for midsummer.

It is not surprising that failures have been considerable in magnitude, and in twenty-three days of July defaulted liabilities were $10,069,481 against $8,392,727 in twenty-five days last year.

Failures for the week have been 281 in the United States, against 261 last year, and 40 in Canada, against 28 last year.

The fishermen came home Friday from the river. They say they brought plenty of fish home, but no one else saw them.

LAWN FETE.

One of the most pleasant social events of the season was the lawn party given on last Friday night by the young men of the town in honor of the visiting girls. The large yard that belongs to the Holbrook place, situated in the grove, was beautifully illuminated and was the scene of great merriment. Here and there tables dotted the lawn, and on these the most delicate and delicious refreshments were served. ITALIANS PROVOKE RIOTING

Which Results in the Expulsion of Their Countrymen.

The excitement aroused in Zurich, Switzerland, by the killing of a Swede by Italians, which resulted in rioting on Saturday and again on Monday, still continues and the streets are occupied by troops. Crowds of Italians are gathered at the railway station awaiting the opportunity to leave the city, and it is estimated that 6,000 are making preparations to depart. The proprietors of the various Italian lodging houses, fearing that their property would be damaged, turned their lodgers into the streets, and 1,500 of those thus rendered homeless were obliged to camp in the woods in the vicinity of the town.

Every family should have one of those 3-quart Fountain Syringes with a 6-foot pipe and 5 rubber tubes. All physicians recommend them. Only $1.25 for the entire outfit in wooden case with clasp lock. H. C. & W. B Reynolds' Drug Department. 3t

A Kerosene Oil Drunk.

Kerosene oil would hardly be deemed a desirable beverage by an epicure, but it is used in large quantities as a stimulant by Russian immigrants in this country. The habit is one that they acquire in their native land, and, strange as it may seem, they adhere to this form of intoxication even when other liquors are within reach of their purse. An "oil drunk" produces intense drowsiness, and the tippler of this odd drink goes to sleep as soon as he has become saturated with the liquid.

Professor Was Absent-Minded.

Prof. Dusel, of Bonn, noticed one day his wife placing a large bouquet on his desk.

"What does all that mean?" he asked.

"Why, this is the anniversary of your marriage," replied Mrs. Dusel.

"Is that so? Well, let me know when yours comes round and I'll reciprocate."

FARM AND GARDEN NOTES

ITEMS OF TIMELY INTEREST TO THE FARMERS

When Fences Are a Nuisance---The Asparagus Beetle---Nut Culture---The Feeding Value of Straw.

Feeding Value of Straw.—To utilize straw for winter feeding it will be a good plan to put it into a mow in the barn in alternate layers of six or eight inches with the green corn stalks. The straw will absorb the moisture from the corn, and both will be improved for feeding. This will be equally adaptable to a silo, and the ensilage thus made will be better than of the corn alone. Any kind of corn may be used in this way, or clover, either.

IRREGULAR HATCHING.

There is some variation in the time of hatching hen's eggs, depending on the vigor of the fowls and the time eggs are left cold before being sat on. With strong, vigorous fowls twenty days will see most of the chicks out. Late in the season the germ in the eggs sometimes begins to evolve into a chick even before it is sat on, from the heat of the weather. This has been known to occur in the house, and we remember a neighbor who kept eggs in a basket not far from the kitchen, who found a live chick among them unmothered. It had been hatched out from the heat of the stove in the next room.

A GOOD GARDEN.

In laying out your plot for garden make it longer than wide; begin at one side and set a row or two of blackberries, the same of raspberries, both red and black; then currants and gooseberries; and do not forget the luscious strawberries, of which it is said that perhaps God Almighty might have made a better berry, but he never has. I set these all in long rows, that they may be easily cultivated with a horse. While they are small, potatoes, peas or some other vegetable can be grown between them. Put in a row of asparagus; then in early spring sow spinach, lettuce, radishes, beets, and such hardy vegetables as a light breeze will not hurt. And put out some onion seed, parsnips and carrots. Later plant cucumbers and melons, sweet corn and tomatoes.—J. W. Brigham in Massachusetts Ploughman.

WHERE FENCES ARE A NUISANCE.

When the haying is in progress one realizes the nuisance of the fences quite forcibly. Why should there be inside fences on any farm? Why should there be any fences? It is not easy for any one to satisfy his mind in regard to this matter, the real necessity for fences being wholly based upon unnecessary conditions altogether. But if there must be fences, they should be straight, and made of posts and wire. The borders of them will not then be mere nurseries of weeds and all kinds of vermin, breeding pests to damage the crops far more than is thought of.

But if one will have fences, and not have his farm all out of doors, as has been said, let him have whatever kind he wishes, but only straight ones, taking up no more room than the width of the posts, and keep both sides well grassed. This strip of grass may be mown for hay, and will permit the horses used in the cultivation of the land to turn upon without damaging the crops. The edges of the cornfields are always more or less wasted or incumbered with weeds, on account of the difficulty in turning, by which it is not possible to clean the land just there. There will be nothing about the farm more pleasing to the owner or the traveler passing by than these neat, clean, and smooth fence rows.—New York Times.

FOR POTATO BUGS.

Plaster and paris green is with us the most satisfactory application for the potato bug, where the field is of moderate size, a tablespoon of green to a wooden pail of plaster. On fields where water can be had without trouble, liquid poison may be more convenient; but usually the water must be carried some distance, and is less satisfactory, because the poison will not remain evenly mixed.

The plaster mixture, when once thoroughly prepared, will stay so, and 100 pounds of it will dust an acre of moderate-sized vines. It can be quickly mixed upon an old piece of canvas with a hoe or shovel; one pound of green to 100 pounds of plaster. If applied when the vines are wet with dew the mixture will stick until the next heavy rain. Care should be taken not to handle the mixture without gloves. Paris green will poison the skin, causing blisters, resembling the symptoms of ivy poisoning.

The plaster in the mixture is worth all it costs as a stimulant to the soil, and for that reason it is just as well to apply it freely. Two thorough applications, paying special attention to the new leaves at the ends of the vines, will usually prove enough.

Good sieves for applying dry poison can be had at the farm supply stores, or can be made by punching holes in the bottom of a tin dish.

Cheap flour is used by many instead of the plaster. Flour will adhere longer upon vines, but its value as a dressing is of little account.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

NUT CULTURE.

There is much encouragement to plant our native nuts, and some of the foreign ones. As a rule, our indigenous trees are good bearers, and in Mr. Van Deman's opinion, they produce nuts of better quality than foreign ones. The chestnut is receiving the most attention now, and there are a few well-marked native varieties of value. Although they are smaller than the European varieties, they are of better quality and very productive. The best are Delaney, Excelsior, Griffin, Hathaway, Morrell and Otto. Rocky hillsides and other places unsuitable for tillage can be used with profit for nut trees, and they can be set about buildings and in pastures. The European varieties seem more profitable.

It seems to be a rule that the more pubescence the nut has, the better its quality. European varieties are more fuzzy than the Japanese, and less so than the American sorts. The most prominent of these are the Paragon, Numbo, Ridgely, and Hannum. Japanese chestnut trees have a more dwarf habit, and the nut has a bitter skin. They graft quite readily on American seedlings, and the best varieties introduced are Alpha, Early, Reliance, Grand and Superb. Among the hickories, the best nut tree is the pecan, a native of our Southern States, and the shell bark hickory, common throughout the Northeastern States. A firm in Pennsylvania ships more than twenty tons of hickory nuts very year. The nuts should be planted in rough places, four feet apart each way, and thinned as they grow. Seedlings are variable, and so they must be grafted. The principal varieties are Hale's, a large, thin-shelled sort; Leaning, Curtis, Elliott and Mulford. Among the walnuts, our native butternuts may, perhaps, be improved, but the so-called English walnut is the best of the family, although it is difficult to grow as far north as New York. There is no doubt that nut trees are hard to graft and to bud. Evaporation should be prevented until the sap begins to flow. When the sap starts the grafts should be put in underground. The scions should be cut so as to have the pith all on one side, or, if necessary to graft above the ground, they should be covered well to prevent all evaporation possible—Garden and Forest.

THE ASPARAGUS BEETLE.

The asparagus beetle was noticed many years ago in the vicinity of New Jersey. It has been working northward ever since. It has done much damage on Long Island and in southern Connecticut, but has been followed by a parasitic enemy that greatly aided farmers in keeping it under control.

At one time it was hoped that the parasite would exterminate the beetle, but such is not the course of nature. Parasites suppress, but never exterminate. No war was ever known where all the combatants were destroyed. The beetle has been doing more or less damage in the vicinity of Boston for a half-dozen years or more.

It is not difficult to fight in old beds, as cutting the shoots destroys most of the eggs that are laid during the cutting season. The first crop of beetles (grown the year previous) usually gets through mating, eating and egg-laying by the middle of June, when peas are ready for picking. My rule is to cut asparagus till the last beetle is dead, then the new stalks will be free from eggs, and I will have no slugs.

On new beds the case is different. Cutting here is not allowable, so the eggs hatch and the young slugs must be destroyed. If a careful gardener has a careless neighbor, the former will have a hard fight, as the second crop of beetles, appearing late in summer, will be sure to visit him in large numbers.

The best way to destroy slugs I have tried is to dust the foliage when wet with dew with air-slaked lime, using it quite freely. The slug is a soft-bodied thing, and the lime curls him up in short order. C. W. Prescott, of Concord, one of the most successful growers in this State, writes "The Farm and Home" that he fights the beetle with chickens. Two men—one at each end—take a board, ten or twelve feet long, and, carrying it in front of them, brush the beetles from the foliage in the early morning, while they are in a semi-dormant state. Chickens are taught to follow, and they pick up most of the beetles. Mr. Prescott's chief trouble is with neighbors' beetles, propagated in fields that are badly neglected. It would seem but just that any one having such a nursery of mischief should be compelled to abate it or suffer the consequences.

Poultry do not eat the slugs, so these must be killed by poison or by knocking off to die on the hot ground. Mr. Prescott says he has seen them dead in less than sixty seconds after falling on sand in the heat of a sunny day. Paris green will destroy the slugs or beetles if it can be made to stick to the foliage. Adding glucose or molasses to the water will help the matter somewhat.

Of all the remedies I have tried, lime dust is the cheapest and most easily applied. One can throw a handful over quite a space and cover every leaf when wet with dew on a still morning.—A. W. Cheever, in New England Farmer.

FARM AND GARDEN NOTES.

There has been a good deal of poor lamb meat in the market this season. It is tough and tasteless.

In seasons of scarcity of hay or where hay is wanted for sale, and corn is cheap, horses, cattle and mules may be brought through the winter in admirable condition on straw, fed in connection with corn.

Most vegetables, and especially potatoes, contain a large proportion of starch, which, in itself, is not a complete ration. There should be some nitrogenous material fed with the vegetables, and, if mixed with the feed, so much the better.

Horses hard at work need water between the morning and noon meal, and also between noon and time for closing the day's work. If a handful of oatmeal is thrown in a pail of water it will prevent any danger of injury, and it will also give strength, as well as refreshment.

Milk is a perfect food for young animals, it being what nature has provided. It contains all the nutritive elements called for by the system, in the proportions needed, and in such a condition as to be more easily available. Cow's milk has a nutritive ratio of about one to four, just what the young pig wants.

Corn is the most valuable single stock food known, and if it were to be lost to us the calamity would be immeasurable. But its deficiencies must be made up before its full value is brought out. How shall we do this? By feeding it in connection with some substance which is rich in what it (the corn) is lacking, thus making one supplement the other.

The word thoroughbred does not mean, as many suppose, an animal of pure blood, that is unmixed. If so, any wild animal would be a thoroughbred. The word thoroughbred is used to designate animals bred from the best blood, but originally derived from a mixture of races, as the short-horn cattle, and racing horses. The term more properly belongs to racing horses.

SEWN UP IN HIS LEG.

How an Immensely Valuable Stone Was Taktn from Persia to Russia.

Gus Fox, a dealer in diamonds on Fourth street, Cincinnati, has a story about the famous Orloff diamond named after Count Orloff, the first European who bought it. Fox says: "It was originally the eye of an idol in Trinchinopoli. It was stolen, according to the accepted account, by a Frenchman, who escaped with it to Persia, where he sold it for the equivalent in our money of $8,000 to a Jewish merchant.

"The Jewish merchant sold it to an Armenian named Shafras, who had traveled in Russia, and conceived the idea of taking the diamond to that country and selling it to the Empress Catherine for a great sum. Shafras paid him $60,000 for it.

"Having secured the stone, the next question with Shafras was how to get it to Russia, or rather how to conceal it when he was searched by robbers, as he was sure to be on the road. The journey was a long and perilous one, and thieves abounded everywhere. Shafras thought of swallowing the stone when he should be taken by the robbers, but was obliged to give that plan up, as the diamond was too large to swallow.

"He began to feel he had a white elephant on his hands, when a thought occurred to him. He procured a sharp lance, made a cut in the fleshy part of his left leg, and thrust the diamond into the wound. He sewed up the cut with a needle and a silver wire. It healed, leaving the diamond embedded fast in the leg, quite out of sight.

"Then he started for Russia. On the way he was seized by robbers again and again, and it was thoroughly searched. Being an Armenian, and suspected of going to Russia to trade, the thieves marvelled greatly at finding nothing of value upon his person.

"He arrived in Russia at last, and, after extracting his diamond, visited the Empress. He was willing to sell it for about $150,000, but the Empress had not so large an amount in cash for the purchase, and Shafras preferred to go on to Amsterdam, the seat of the diamond-cutting industry, where he had the stone polished.

"Here Count Orloff, an extremely wealthy Russian, saw the diamond, and was filled with a determination to secure it for the Russian crown. He did secure it, but Shafras exacted from the Russian Government $400,000, an annuity of $20,000, and a title of nobility. He died a millionaire.

"The Orloff diamond weighs 195 carats, and is about the size of a pigeon's egg. It is smaller than the Koh-i-Noor, in the possession of the English Queen, which is supposed to be worth $3,750,000."

Curious Red Color of a Swiss Lake.

Lake Morat, one of the prettiest of the many lakes in Switzerland, has recently turned red, and this revives the old legends about the place. Every four or five years for a century or longer the waters have taken on a peculiar reddish tinge. This is due, scientists say, to the growth of a minute aquatic plant, which is designated by the long name of oscillatrola rubescens. In no other body of water in the world does it flourish, and it does not appear in large quantities, except occasionally, in Lake Morat.

On June 21, 1476, there was a battle on the shores of the lake. A party of Burgundians, under the command of Charles the Bold, fell victims to the Swiss, and nearly every one was killed. No quarter was shown, and thousands of bodies were thrown in the lake. Old fishermen say that the red color of the lake is the blood of the Burgundians.

Frenchmen, however, claim that the lake churches at the memory of the Swiss, who showed no mercy to their antagonists, and continued the fight after it had become mere slaughter. The lake presents a sinister appearance, especially when the setting sun heightens the crimson effect.

In looking around for an ally China is more successful than Spain. The combination of Russia and China includes more than a third of the world's population and is likely to cut a figure in history.

Pill Clothes.

The good pill has a good coat. The pill coat serves two purposes; it protects the pill, enabling it to retain all its remedial value, and it disguises the taste for the palate. Some pill coats are too heavy; they will not dissolve in the stomach, and the pills they cover pass through the system as harmless as a bread pellet. Other coats are too light, and permit the speedy deterioration of the pill. After 30 years exposure, Ayer's Sugar Coated Pills have been found as effective as if just fresh from the laboratory. It's a good pill with a good coat. Ask your druggist for

The Location of the College is one of healthfulness and moral security. Saloons and such demoralizing agencies are forever excluded from the town of Oxford by the provisions of the charter. The society of the place is cultured and religious. Oxford is emphatically a college town, and students at Emory College are not only free from the temptations to immorality which prevail in larger towns, but from the distractions of a commercial community and the unwholesome social excitements common in such places. It is forty miles east of Atlanta, and about one mile north of the Covington depot, on the Georgia Railroad, from which it is reached by a horse-car line. * * For catalogue and further information, address

Learn to Labor and Wait.

For the lessons of life
They are many and stern;
And the hardest to learn
Is not masterful strife
For a king or a state;
It is only—to wait.

Youth is eager to start
On the ocean alone,
Ere his strength be full-grown;
And though Age from his heart
May of perils inform,
Still he thirsts for the storm.

If his courage be strong
He may struggle along
And by sorrow grow strong;
And the years, as they fly,
May allot him life's prize
On this side of the skies.

But the many that strive
For the laurels must fail;
And full many a sail
At Death's port shall arrive,
That could enter Joy's gate
Would its master but wait.

COUSIN MARY ANN.

BY HELEN FORREST GRAVES.

Eveleen Blake was a school teacher.

Rather a laborious and ill-paid life it was for a girl of nineteen; but she knew that she had her own living to earn somehow. There wasn't an inkling of romance in her life, except what she unconsciously absorbed out of the books in the circulating library. No handsome young bachelor school trustee ever thought of falling in love with her; no wealthy old gentleman adopted her as his sole heiress and legatee, and she hadn't a rich relative in all the world except one old aunt out in Wisconsin, who had never noticed her existence in any way whatsoever, and apparently didn't intend to. Her two sisters were both married—Mrs. Simon Sykes and Mrs. John Smith—and each of them looked out industriously for Number One.

"Eveleen has had an eduction," said Mrs. Sykes. "Let her take care of herself. Of course one wants to be sisterly and all that sort of thing, but when dear Simon married me, he didn't expect to marry the whole family."

"Of course not," said Mrs. Smith. "She can't expect us to support her."

And beyond an occasional invitation to a Christmas or a Thanksgiving dinner, poor Eveleen received very little countenance from her sisters.

But she was a cheery, light-hearted lassie, this Eveleen Blake, and plodded patiently along the dull routine of her daily life, making the best of everything.

Five hundred a year wasn't a stupendous income, to be sure, but Eveleen knew how to economize it to the very best advantage. She dressed as plainly as any Quaker, kept house daintily in two little rooms, and put by a dollar a week in the nearest savings bank against a possible rainy day.

She was mending a pair of gloves one afternoon by the window, when Mrs. Simon Sykes walked in, with a great rustling and smell of patchouli.

Mrs. Simon Sykes—nee Deborah Blake—was tall and large and rosy. Eveleen was on the petite scale, with large, limpid gray eyes, very little color, and straight brown hair which shone and glistened like satin in the level rays of the declining sun.

Mrs. Sykes wore a stiff black silk dress, with a set of staring cameos, and a mammoth pink rose in her hat.

"Dear me!" she said, "how good that teapot smells on the stove! And I'm clean tired out with my walk."

"Would you like a cup of tea?" said Eveleen.

"Well, I don't mind," said Mrs. Sykes, unpinning her shawl: "that is, if you've a bun or a biscuit to nibble with it. Tea alone always gives me the heartburn."

So Eveleen went to work industriously and brewed a cup of tea, and brought out a plate of rusks which were to have made her own frugal evening meal.

"But I can eat a cracker or so," said self-denying little Eveleen, as she watched the rusks disappear before Mrs. Simon Sykes' appetite.

"I've had such a turn," said Mrs. Sykes, as she held out her cup for a second replenishing.

"A turn?" said Eveleen, inquiringly.

"Yes," nodded Mrs. Sykes; "a visit from a poor relation, who lives out West. I dare say she'll be here next, but I advise you to send her about her business, as I did."

"Who is it?" said Eveleen, in surprise.

"It's Mary Ann Blake, from Claw's Corners, Michigan. Wants something to do. Expects me to take her in and give her a home until she can obtain a situation."

"There's the little hall bedroom that you don't use," hinted Eveleen, who had a sort of instinctive sympathy for the houseless and homeless.

"I want that for Mr. Sykes' relatives when they come to town." said Mrs. Sykes. "He's got a single brother with property, and a married sister, with no children, who is very well off indeed? and if I don't want it; I don't propose to open a free asylum for every old maid that comes along."

"But what will she do?"

"Do? Why, do as other folks do, I suppose. Go to a cheap boarding house. There's plenty of 'em, I'm sure."

"But if she hasn't got any money?"

"Then she's no business here," said autocratic Mrs. Sykes. "Why didn't she stay out West, where her friends could take care of her?"

"Perhaps she hasn't any friends."

"Then she certainly must be an undeserving character," said Mrs. Sykes shaking the rusk crumbs down upon Eveleen's neatly-swept carpet. "Oh, here's Selina Smith, as true as the world!"

Mrs. John Smith came fluttering in—a thin, sharp-featured little woman with snapping black eyes.

"Oh," she cried, "you're here, are you, Debby? How do, Eveleen? Well, since you're taking tea, I will have a cup! Heard the news?" as she sat herself down.

"About Mary Ann Blake? Yes, of course," answered Mrs. Sykes, with a toss of the head. She's been to see me; but I sent her about her business."

"Well, she certainly can't expect us to provide for her," said Mrs. Smith, beginning to crumble up the reserve of crackers that Eveleen had brought out, with a sigh. "Smith's salary ain't large, and I've a considerable-sized family of my own. I told her pretty plainly that, as far as I was concerned, she needn't expect anything. I do hate these genteel beggars! And if she should come here, Eveleen, I hope you will give her the cold shoulder. Hush! There's a knock now. If it should be her!"

"It's a good thing we are here to advise," said Mrs. Sykes, as Eveleen went to the door. "Eveleen is so unsuspecting! Any one could impose upon her!"

"Yes, to-be-sure," nodded Mrs. Smith, complacently. "And— But, dear me, it is Mary Ann!"

Both the sisters nodded frigidly at the approach of a tall, nervous-looking woman, in shabby black, followed by Eveleen, who drew out the softest easy-chair for her accommodation, and gently untied her wispy bonnet-strings.

"Do sit down," said Eveleen. "I am sure you are tired. Let me give you a cup of tea."

"Yes," said Mary Ann Blake, looking apprehensively from Mrs. John Sykes to Mrs. John Smith, "I am tired. I have been walking a good ways."

"I hope you've got a situation," said Mrs. Smith, icily.

But Mary Ann Blake shook her head.

"It was very foolish of you to come here at all, wasting your money on an expensive journey," said Mrs. Sykes. "Why couldn't you go to Aunt Pamela.

(Now Aunt Pamela was the rich old aunt in Wisconsin, who so systematically ignored her nieces in New York, and kept her money in United States bonds, instead of investing it in Mr. Sykes' wholesale grocery, or Mr. Smith's insurance company.)

"I did," said Mary Ann, dejectedly, "But she declined to assist me."

"Stingy old harridan!" said Mrs. Sykes, with energy.

"She has a right to do as she pleases with her own, I suppose," said Eveleen, who was boiling up a teaspoonful of fresh tea for the pale guest, and cutting a little smoked beef in thin slices.

"No she hasn't," said Mrs. Smith. "People get so miserly!"

"Sykes thinks we might some day clap her into a lunatic asylum, and put the property into the hands of trustees, for the use of her relatives," said Mrs. Sykes.

"I don't know about that," said Mary Ann Blake. "I only know she would not give me anything. And I do not know what to do. You are my cousins. Perhaps--"

"Oh, indeed we can't do anything for you!" said Mrs. Sykes, becoming absolutely Arctic in her demeanor, while Mrs. Smith drew herself up, and set her thin lips together like a thread of carmine. "Better get back West as fast as you can," added Mrs. Sykes.

"By all means," said Mrs. Smith, with a toss of her head. "And tell that old hag out in Wisconsin that she's a deal better able to provide for you than we are."

"No," said Eveleen, gently. She had been looking from one to the other of her relatives as they spoke, and now interposed with her soft voice and pitying gray eyes. "Cousin Mary Ann shall stay with me. There's plenty of room on my little iron bedstead for two, and I can go out with her, looking for a situation, after school hours. To-be-sure, I haven't a great deal, but what little I have I will share with Cousin Mary Ann."

"Eveleen, you're crazy!" said Mrs. Simon Sykes, uplifting both her hands.

"You're a fool!" politely added Mrs. Smith.

But the stranger's lip quivered.

"God bless you, child!" said she, rising up and putting aside the veil of worn lace that dropped on her face. "And now, girls, I may as well tell you that I am your Aunt Pamela. Mary Ann Blake is an entirely imaginary person."

"You Aunt Pamela?" shrieked Mrs. Sykes.

"Yes, I."

"But—you are rich."

"People say so."

"Then," gasped Mrs. Smith, "why do you come here in the guise of a beggar?"

"To try the hearts and natures of my three nieces," said Aunt Pamela, dryly. "Deborah calls me an old harridan, Selina refuses to help me by so much as a penny, but little Eveleen is willing to share her scanty all with me. And I'll be as generous with her. What money the old woman has to leave shall be Eveleen Blake's."

Mrs. Simon Sykes and Mrs. John Smith looked at each other in dismay. But it was too late to apologize now—the mischief was done, and the fact that they had done it themselves was a poor consolation. And little Eveleen was an heiress after all.--Saturday Night.

Cat Superstitions.

In the Tyrol the girls who are fond of cats marry early.

If it rains on a Dutch girl's wedding day it is because the bride has forgotten to fed her cat.

If it rains when there is a large washing on the line in Germany, it is a sure sign that the house mother has ill-treated the cat.

Throwing a cat overboard from a ship will cause a cyclone.

A person who despises cats will be carried to his grave in a howling storm.

If the family cat lies with its back to the fire there will be a squall.

If a cat licks itself against the grain take your mackintosh with you.

If a cat washes herself calmly and smoothly the weather will be fair.

Bad luck will follow if a black cat crosses your path, for the devil prowls about especially at night, in the guise of a black cat.

To dream of a black cat at Christmas time in Germany is a omen of alarming illness.

The Pennsylvania Dutch believe black cats cure epilepsy.

Three drops of a black cat's blood is said to be a cure for croup.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The Late Shah's Jewels.

The diamonds in one symbol of the late Persian Shah's rank are said to weigh nearly twenty pounds. There is also a jeweled saber, valued at $1,600,000. Another thing that the Shah prized was a silver vase ornmented with 100 emeralds, whose equal, is said, is not tobe found in the world.

IN SLEEPYTOWN.

Pretty, drowsy, baby eyes,
'Neath the white lids blinking,
Far away up in the skies
Some bright stars are winking.
They light the way to a baby-show
To which, sweet one, you soon must go.
Look pleasant—smooth that tiny frown—
And you'll take the prize in Sleepytown.
Babes will be there from across the sea,
The black-eyed Turk and small Chinee,
The fur-wrapped, funny Esquimau,
Whose hut is placed 'mid arctic snow,
Yes, from all lands this earth doth know
Babies will come to the dream-land show,
And pretty, drowsy baby eyes,
You will be sure to win the prize.
So shut your dainty eyelids down,
And hie away to Sleepytown.

A BABY HYENA.

The baby hyena is the attraction at the Central Park "Zoo." A hyena in infancy is cute, bright-eyed, soft, pudgy and kittenish. But it grows out of this in time, and this frolicsome little creature will a few years hence be as villainously ugly as he is now delightful. He is a brownish-hued creature, with a black muzzle, about as tall and as fat as a Newfoundland puppy. His age is three months—a fact due to the vigilance of the keeper, as her "ma" has shown heretofore a disposition to eat her offspring, having in this unnatural manner disposed of half a dozen youngsters that would have been brothers and sisters to the latest arrival.

Mrs. Hyena is as tall as a St. Bernard, and her infant freely walks under the arch of her shaggy and ill-smelling body. The baby just now has high fore legs and short hind legs, and moves about with an awkward wobble that greatly amuses the children who throng before the cage. When the baby grows up he will laugh, as does his mother, a laugh that carries terror with it to every breast in the Zoo, but just now the laugh is simply a joyous gurgle.

The mother is fond of her son in a hyena way, and evidently believes with Solomon that to spare the rod is to spoil the child. One day last week she gave her offspring a trouncing that he will not forget in a hurry. It seems that when the daily allowance of meat, scraps and bones were thrown into the cage she declined to allow the infant any portion of it. Some one called the keeper's attention to this seemingly selfish act, but the keeper said "she probably knew best."

The youngster evidently did not share the keeper's opinion of the wisdom of his mother, for he made a futile effort to seize a juicy morsel of horse meat, was caught in the act and punished. His name is "Whiskers."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

SAVED BY A SEAGULL.

Two months before our story opens Andy Royson, while playing on the beach, came across a seagull which in some way had broken its wing and was unable to fly. Andy took it home and nursed it until it was well. He offered the bird its liberty by taking it on the beach and pitching it into the air. It would fly a little way but would always come back to him. Andy soon learned to love the bird very much. At the time our story opens they were always together. It would follow Andy everywhere he went.

Andy lived close to the beach. He had learned to row and his father had bought him a small rowboat. There was a pile of rocks that jutted out of the water about two miles from the shore. It was Andy's favored fishing place. He would go every Saturday and fish. His father always warned him not to stay too long, because when the tide came in it would be dangerous. He promised to be always on the alert. He had gotten permission from his father to go fishing that day. He called Dan to go with him—that was what he had named the bird. Dan hopped into the boat. Andy took up the oars and rowed to the rocks, fastened his boat to some rocks, and commenced fishing. Dan was sitting by his side watching him intently, for it was Andy's custom to give him all the small fish he caught. He had unusually good luck that day, and had caught as many fish as he could very well carry. He stopped and was thinking about going home, but on looking at his watch he found that it was early yet, and determined to rest before going. He lay down in the shadow of the rocks and was thinking how surprised his mother would be when he showed her the fish. He had been lying there but a few minutes, he never could tell how it happened, but he fell asleep. He was suddenly awakened by feeling the water rippling around his feet. He started up in surprise, but it did not frighten him then, for he knew that he could get to his boat in time. Gathering up his fish he called Dan and started for the boat, but judge of his horror at finding that his boat had become loosened by the rising tide and had floated away. He could see it far off in the distance. The water was still rising. It was now at his ankles. He saw if assistance hid not reach him in a few hours he would be drowned. The bird seemed to know of his master's danger, for he flew upon his shoulder, uttering a queer noise all the time, as if warning him of his danger. Andy went to the highest part of the rocks, there he sank down, overcome, and wept. He wondered what his mother and father would think. He knew how grieved they would be if he should never come back. Suddenly he remembered the little prayer his mother had taught him, and that God would help those who would ask Him. He sank upon his knee and prayed a long time. When he had finished he felt better and more hopeful.

All at once an idea struck him. Why not let Dan carry a message to his father? Hastily taking a pencil from his pocket he wrote a note to his father; tying it around Dan's neck he turned him towards the land and pitched him in the air. The bird circled around twice and then started towards the shore. How Andy prayed that he would safely take the message to his father. The water was now up to his knees. It rose slowly, but surely. Now it was up to his waist and then his shoulders. He began to lose hope. Would his father never come? He strained his eyes, hoping to see him coming. Suddenly he saw a dark object on the water. He continued to watch it. Finally it outlined itself into a boat with a man in it. He gave a shout of joy. Pretty soon he recognized his father's face. He began shouting again. He saw his father look up and redouble his efforts. Now only his head was above water, and it was still rising. Pretty soon his father got within hailing distance and shouted, "for God's sake, hold out a little longer." The water slowly crept to his chin. Now he had to stand on tiptoe to keep the water out of his mouth, but it got no further. His father had reached him and dragged him into the boat. He was too overcome to row any further. Andy took up the oars and rowed back to the land, where his mother was waiting for him. She clasped him in her arms and showered his face with kisses, laughing and crying in turn.

That night at the supper table they told him how Dan had come to the door, and finding that he could not get in, had gone to the window and tapped it with his bill until his father let him in. They saw the paper around his neck. Reading it, his father hurried down to the beach and found his boat and saved him.

Dan was the hero of the day. He was petted and praised by everyone, and when he died a few years later, Mr. Royson had him buried in the family burial ground, and a tombstone erected over his grave with these words inscribed: "Here lies Dan a hero,"—Atlanta Journal.

A curious property of potassium uranyl sulphide has been reported to the French academy by M. Becquerel. When excited to phosphorescence, this substance emits rays which last a long time—more than 160 hours—after phosphorescence ceases, which pass through paper, aluminum and copper, and which discharge electrified bodies like the Roentgen rays.

Frogs and toads sleep a living death during the winter, but wake in early spring to lay their eggs and cheer the world with their rustic songs. Every country pond swarms with them. The frogs lay but few eggs. Hence more care must be exercised to preserve and fertilize them. To this end they are dropped, not singly, but in clusters into the water, and are thus protected from harm and cared for until the hatching time arrives. And the product is always a frog or toad, as the case may be. This egg never develops into a turtle or a fish; it is always a tadpole.

A Great Shot.

James Shields was elected to the United States Senate in 1848, defeating his predecessor, senator Breese. Shields had distinguished himself in the Mexican war, and at the battle of Cerro Gordo he was shot through the lungs, the ball passing out at his back. His recovery was one of the marvels of the day. Shield's war record is believed to have secured to him his triumph over Breese. When the news of Shields's election was received, a lawyer named Butterfield was speaking of it to a group of friends, when one of them remarked: "It was that Mexican bullet that did the business." "Yes," restored Butterfield, "that was a great shot. The ball went clear through Shields without hurting him, and killed Breese one thousand miles away."—Argonaut.

The consumption of wheat in Britain is reckoned at six bushels per head per annum, which, on the basis of an estimated population of 38,000,000, makes a total consumption of 233,000,000 bushels.

The County of London has just sent in its agricultural returns and they have a queer sound. Of the 75,142 acres on which lives the population of 4,232,118, no less than 14,401 acres are devoted to agricultural purposes, besides 207 used for grazing. In the last two years 500 acres were lost to the farmers, being devoted to buildings.

He has been released from his vows and gone back to business life in Boston.

Railroad building in the United States has not been at a standstill during the past year. The Railroad Gazette is authority for the statement that 717 miles of road have been built in the first half of the year. The new track built in the first half of the year for seven years past was as follows: 1896, 717; 1895, 620; 1894, 495; 1893, 1025; 1892, 1284; 1891, 1704; 1890, 2055. Much the largest mileage credit to any one company of the total given for the sixth months is that built by the Kansas City, Pittsburg and Gulf, nearly 140 miles, in Arkansas, Texas and Indian Territory. The second largest line was built by the San Francisco and San Joaquin Valley road, fifty-five miles, in California.

The Forum says: If the press is to maintain its dignity as an educator of the people, it must lead and not follow. It must fearlessly express the truth, not pander to the almighty dollar nor to blind partisanship. Last summer I said to the editor of a great cosmopolitan newspaper: "Why do the newspapers print so many columns of sensational stuff in a questionable manner?" "Simply," said he, "to meet the demand of the toughter element of the community, which reads nothing else. This kind of news is read by all classes that have much to do with the police; by 'sports,' inhabitants of the slums and the 'The Tenderloin District.'" Would a minister preach, or a teacher teach, to please the baser elements of the community? Then why should a newspaper?

The most ancient court in England is that of the King's bench. Alfred the Great presided over this court more than a thousand years ago. Other monarchs followed his example until the cares of the realm became such that it was necessary to appoint Judges. The court of chancery is almost as old as the king's bench. In 1871 these ancient tribunals were merged into a comprehenive judicial system, composed of the king's bench, the court of common pleas, the exchequer and the probate courts. At the head of these departments is the supreme legal officer of the law of Great Britain and Ireland, the lord high chancellor. He is appointed by the crown on the motion of the premier of the realm and changes office with his political party. He sits upon the woolsack, the presiding officer's chair in the House of Lords, and is also a member of the privy council and the chief judge of the appellate tribunals. Next in rank is the lord chief justice of England, who presides over the court of appeals. Lord Halsbury is the lord chancellor, Lord Russell, of Killowen, is the chief justice, and Lord Esher is the master of rolls, and he will be the last judge to hold that time-honored title; it dies with him. Among the wearers of the judicial ermine, the late Chief Justice Coleridge was conspicuous for his liberal views, since liberalism is not a prevalent creed with judges in England.

Robinson lives in Decatur, where his injuries received medical attention.

His Most Faithful Friend.

One of the most pathetic scenes that it is possible to witness was noticed at Valley Head on Wednesday last in connection with the murder of old man Musgrove. It is stated his sole companion was a little dog, who seemed to know his master's every wish. When the dead body was found the little dog was standing beside it, barking and growling at the hogs that were at tempting to devour the corpse. When the body was carried to a neighbor's house the dog accompanied it, and when it was placed in the coffin and the lid placed on it, the faithful little animal jumped on the coffin whining piteously. It is said the dog would permit those present to caress it, except a man whose name is not given, and who was subsequently charged with complicity in the murder.

Mysterious Tragedy in Birmingham.

About 10 o'clock Friday night several pistol shots startled the boarders and others about the building at the corner of Second avenue and Twenty-first street, Birmingham, known as the Palais Royal. Officer Newman heard the shots and ran to the building and up stairs to the room from which the sounds emanated. On entering he found P. B. Green holding R. H. Fowler, with one arm around his neck and scuffling with him. The men were separated and it was at once seen that Green had been shot and was dangerously wounded. Captain Weir had followed Officer Newman and to the two officers the wounded man stated that he went to the Palais Royal at the invitation of Fowler to spend the night. After undressing, he continued, he called to Fowler and asked him to bring him a drink of water. Fowler did so, and after handing it to him pulled a 38-calibre pistol and fired three times at Green, one ball passing through the breast, another through the thigh and another through one of his fingers. Fowler was taken to the city prison and put in a cell. It is said that Green made a dying statement in the presence of Dr. Gibson, who was called to attend him, and others, in which he alleged his belief that Fowler had been hired to kill him.

Mystery of Musgrove's Murder.

The mystery surrounding the murder of old man Musgrove may possibly be cleared up. The coroner, acting under orders from the attorney-general, has exhumed the body and found that the deceased was shot twice in the back and once in the side. There are several theories advanced for the cause of the murder. Musgrove was an ex-confederate soldier, who was born in DeKalb county in 1821, and was consequently about 75 years old at the time of his death last week. He kept batchelor's hall, in a rude hut, his only companion being a little dog. He owned cattle, and it was while hunting some of them that had strayed away that he came across four men working at a still. It was thought, probably without reason, that years ago he gave information to the revenue officers that caused them to discover a pot still. These four men were suspicious of him and tried to kill him then, firing two shots at him, but he managed, old as he was, to get away. It is supposed that these four men, who Musgrove recognized and named to several of his friends, committed the murder. His body was lying in such a position as to lead to the belief that he had been killed in the road, where his tracks suddenly ceased, and then carried to where he was found by Ed Hartline and his wife on their way to Little River church. There is very great excitement over the matter, and every iota of evidence possible is being collected.

Two Negroes Shot.

Charley Allen and Edward Alexander, two colored men, aged each about 22, were shot and killed near Robbins, Tenn., Saturday about 4 o'clock. The men were killed close to the caboose of freight train No. 31, that had sidetracked to let another train pass. Conductor Woody and the entire crew of train No. 31, are under arrest charged with the killing. It is said, however, that the man who did the shooting made his escape. Both the dead men were drunk and had a supply of whisky with them when killed. 'Squire Lew Allen took charge of a revolver that Alexander had in his pocket. Both men were shot through the heart. No one has yet been found to say that he saw the shooting, and the cause of the tragedy is a mystery.

Shot at a Race Track.

Hugh Penny, the once famous jockey, was shot at the race track at Dubuque, Ia., Saturday night by Harry Sayre, of Middleport, O., who had refused him the mount on His Brother in the fifth race. Other jockeys and stable boys drew revolvers and started for Sayre, but the police jumped in an hurried him to jail. Penny's wounds are serious.

INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS

As Observed and Reported by Dun's Weekly Review.

COLLAPSE OF A BIG SPECULATION

Seriously Affects Stocks—Exports Increase and Imports Diminish. The Cotton Crop—Labor More Disturbed than Usual—Suspension of Industries.

The sensational collapse of speculators at Chicago who controlled Diamond Match and New York Biscuit stocks and had hoisted them to fancy figures, with the consequent closing of the Chicago stock exchange for a period yet indefinite, though followed by remarkably few failures, brings a sudden change in monetary conditions throughout the country. At least a month earlier than had been expected Chicago has drawn heavily upon its bank balances in New York, and withdrawals of all other western funds may naturally result. Europe was also moved to sell American stocks rather freely, so that the average of sixty most active railroads' stocks fell about $2.18 per share, and the average of trust stocks about $1.88.

It is important that the increase of merchandise exports, $800,000, or 12 per cent over last year for the week, and the decrease of imports, $700,000, or 7.7 per cent still continues to limit the sum payable abroad.

The situation as to cotton is doubtless critical for many producers. Extremely hot and dry weather has done serious harm, but it must, indeed, be an extraordinary condition that reduces the yield 20 per cent in August. Men of much knowledge and experience but a few days ago judged a yield of 10,000,000 bales probable, and if they were 1,000,000 bales too high, still those who now predict only 7,000,000 bales are likely to err in the opposite direction. With large acreage it is always safe to remember that only a part of the crop will be affected by misfortunes between August 1 and frost. The price rose almost beyond precedent, ⅝ of a cent on Wednesday alone, and the alarm will at least be of service to planters in giving them better prices, whether buyers realize profits or not.

Labor is more disturbed than usual. The great strike of garment workers in New York is much extended; the strike at Cleveland has broken out again and involves several other branches of labor; the iron furnace men of the Shenango valley resist a reduction to the wages of May, 1895, though Mahoning valley workers do not; the iron works throughout the country are striving to cut down cost in order to keep in operation; the iron mines of the Gogebic range are stopping; the suspension of cotton mills has become more general and over 4,000,000 spindles are said to be idle at Fall River alone, and probably three-eighths or more of the entire producing capacity in the country; the rubber works have mostly stopped. Evidently the working force and also wages have been reduced.

The iron markets grow less demoralized in tone, because all the associations decided to maintain prices for this month, but the markets are stronger in volume of orders or purchases.

The volume of domestic business reflected by exchanges was 7.7 per cent smaller than in 1892. The early crop movement and the speculative loans here appear to be much restricted. Failures in July, classified by branches of business, show larger liabilities in the lumber than in any of the manufacturing class, and for seven months double the liabilities in the next largest class, while in trading the dry goods liabilities lead. Failures for the week have been 240 in the United States, against 225 last year, and 32 in Canada, against 43 last year.

NEGROES IN CREEK NATION

By a Decision of the Supreme Court Are Decitizenized.

By a decision handed down by Judge Adams, chief justice of the supreme court of the Creek Nation, the names of over 1,700 negroes are stricken from the rolls of citizenship of the Nation. The decision holds that the action of Indian council, after the passing of the emancipation act by the United States in admitting the negroes to tribal relations, was unconstitutional and, therefore, at this time invalid. Since the passage of this act those negroes have drawn annuities from the Creek government of over a million dollars, have held positions of trust and have improved their farms. From the decision of the court there is no appeal.

Michigan Bank Failure.

The Ingham county bank, of Lansing, Mich., did not open for business Friday morning. A card was posted on the door which read: "This bank is in the hands of a receiver." The bank had a capital of $101,000 and a surplus of $50,000. Paul Ulrich is president and J. A. May cashier. The bank has deposits of $144,000, about equally divided between commercial and savings depositors. The bank has assets of about $285,000. The stockholders of the bank are well-to-do and the depositors are amply protected.

Fatal Boiler Explosion.

The boiler of Layman's canning factory at Troutville, twelve miles north of Roanoke, Va., exploded Friday afternoon, instantly killing two employes and wounding several others. The latter's head was blown off. Fragments of the boiler were thrown 300 yards by the force of the explosion.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

Mr. B. W. Baine, of Selma, visited our town Saturday last.

Mr. John McMath is visiting friends in Clanton this week.

Having just received a nice lot of trunks, we can very easily suit you in the choice of one. H. C. & W. B. Reynolds.

Mrs. C. C. Vandegrift and daughter, Miss Imogene, and Robert Hall are spending a while at Imogene, Ala.

Just think—you can get bacon at 5 cents, eight bars of soap for 25 cents, and the best New Orleans molasses for 35 cents a gallon at H. C. & W. B. Reynolds'.

Messrs. George and Edgar Holcombe, of Calera, passed through town from Plantersville Sunday.

Mr. Frank Kroell lost one of his pretty gray horses last week. The horse was driven from Centreville through the hot sun and got overheated.

Three negroes held up another one near Gurnee last Friday, and finally persuaded him to appropriate to them a watch, a razor, and a few dollars of free silver. They came down the railroad from there, but were caught and brought to town, and sent to Columbiana to jail that night.

Mrs. Thomas, of Blocton, is visiting Mrs. Crowe.

Mr. Self sent over a stalk of cotton Tuesday with twenty-five bolls on it.

Mr. Dick Steele is the champion turkey slayer around here. He killed four large ones one day last week, and says he knows where to find more.

Mr. D. M. Dickson, state agent for the Washington Life Insurance Company, of New York, is spending a while in our city. Mr. Dickson is from Montgomery.

Mr. Lee, a well known farmer of North Alabama, is visiting friends near here.

Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Davis were at home to a number of their friends on Monday evening. The spacious halls and porches of their residence were thrown open to the juvenile society and all was the scene of brightnesss until a late hour. Mrs. Davis made an ideal hostess and the occasion will long be remembered.

The latest things in town are the Siphon Oil cans. Besides being the most convenient, they are the cheapest sold. They can be found at H. C. & W. B. Reynolds'.

Mr. Charles Rhodes, who was once a popular baseball player in our town, is on a few days' visit to relatives here. Charlie is now located in Palestine, Texas.

Mr. G. W. Canterberry has accepted a position with the Montevallo Coal and Transportation Co. at Aldrich.

The many friends that Miss Alice Ivey, of Talladega, made while on her visit in Montevallo, were sorry to see her leave Tuesday for her home.

Mr. Charles T. Acker, after a lengthy stay in the east, came home Wednesday.

Mr. Burrell McMath left Sunday for a week's vacation, to be spent in Maplesville and south Alabama.

Messrs. H. C. Reynolds and L. L. Abernathy visited Montgomery last week.

Among the visiting young ladies last week were Miss Lottie Neilson, of Tuscaloosa, at Mr. S. A. Latham's; Miss Maggie Jemison, of Brierfield, at Mrs. Clay Fancher's.

Miss Lucille Fancher has returned from a visit to Brierfield.

Miss Nora Claughton, of Jemison, is visiting her brother, Dr. A. R. Claughton.

Mr. and Mrs. John Ingram came in from Aldrich one day last week.

Misses Louise Manly and Nannie Clements, both of Tuscaloosa, are the guests of Dr. Crowe's family.

Mr. Ben Large, of Ashby, was in town Tuesday.

Col. John West came down from Calera Tuesday and spent a while in the city.

MUSICALE.

In honor of Miss Minnie Helvenston, a charming young lady of Florida, Miss Hattie Lyman gave a delightful musicale on last Thursday evening. A select musical programme was rendered, including talent from many and various towns. Those participating in the programme were Misses Hattie Lyman, Lottie Neilson, Pauline Acker, Allie Rhodes, Minnie Helvenston, Lena North, Mary Kroell, Katie Kroell, and Daisy Canterberry. Miss Ivey, of Talladega, honored the occasion with two well delivered recitations. At a few minutes past ten a bountiful repast was served on the large, vine-covered veranda.

The time flew only too fast and the hours seemed shorter than usual. At 12 the crowd departed, having spent a most enjoyable evening.

BISMARCK DOTS.

The weather is extremely warm these days.

Miss Pattie Nelson, who has been visiting the family of Mrs. Little for a week, returned home to Bessemer last week.

Mr. Whit Thompson, one of Six Mile's distinguished gentlemen, was visiting his brother, W. S. Thompson, last Sunday and reports politics in Bibb flourishing.

Our baseball cranks seem to have lost interest in their favorite sport. You can't blame them, the boys have not had a victory to their credit this season. It's time to quit, ain't it, boys?

Three of our young gentlemen attended preaching at Brierfield Monday night and report a glorious time with some of Brierfield's fair sex.

Mr. R. L. Rice, of Gurnee, Ala., is home on a vacation, after working so hard during the campaign.

The school opened by Miss Mary Nichols on August 3d is progressing nicely and we predict still better success in the near future.

Mr. F. Farrington passed through the city Monday en route to Brierfield.

The "Independent Order of Never Sweats" is still progressing. Their newly elected and highly competent president, Mr. Sam Walker, of Maplesville, was in the city Monday shaking hands with the members, who believe their new president to be the best they ever had.

Dry Valley seems to be the chosen spot for one of our young men, who recently spent a week out there pulling fodder for his board, and went out there Sunday for another job, but was refused on account of his smallness.

Mr. Joe Thompson is equipping his cotton gin with a new water wheel and intends to lead the procession of quick and fine ginning this season.

We understand J. B. A. has a sweetheart in the city. Wonder who it is?

Well, as it's about cotton picking time, I will have to close. Yours,

Texas Jack.

OBITUARY.

The angel of death has visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. T. H. Griffin and taken their oldest daughter, Bessie, who was the joy and light of the home.

Bessie was a true Christian, an obedient daughter, a good sister and friend. She will be missed everywhere, and especially in her home. Everything seems to remind us of our loss, but we must bow in submission to the sovereign hand of God and say, "Thy will, not ours, be done."

We ask in our sorrow, why did God take her away so soon? Perhaps saw we were thinking too much of earthly and too little of our Heavenly home, but we must not love Heaven more for our darling's sake than for Christ's sake.

Bessie was conscious until the last and sweetly fell "asleep in Jesus." It is such a sweet consolation to feel that our darling is at rest and to know she will never experience the sad disappointments of this life. We ask God to bless especially the bereaved father and mother and sorrowing relatives.

SALOONS IN PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

A Resolution Looking to Their Removal Adopted.

At the recent session of the Lake county Sunday school convention, held at Carthage, Miss., the following resolution, offered by Hon. G. S. Ellis, mayor of Walnut Grove and editor of Dawn and Light, was unanimously adopted:

Resolved by the Lake county Sunday school convention, That our senators and representatives in congress be requested to use their best efforts to suppress the saloon business in all the public buildings owned and controlled by the United States, especially in the capitol and other public buildings at Washington, where all our federal laws originate, are interpreted and enforced, to the end that a government of the people, for the people and by the people may be ably and conscientiously represented by level-headed, clear-minded men, in the fear of God and in the love of truth.

Resolved further, That the secretary of this convention furnish each one of our senators and representatives in congress a copy of these resolutions.

Done in Carthage, Miss., in open convention, July 26, 1896.

On motion, the above resolution was ordered published in the Dawn of Light, Carthaginian, Yazoo Herald and the Mississippi Prohibitionist, and also recorded upon the minutes.

W. W. Burnett, Secretary.

Fate of a Murderer.

No more pitiable spectacle can well be imagined than that of Capt. E B Turpin, the slayer of William Carter, at Gallatin, Tenn., whose trial was a nine days' wonder at the time. He used to be a bright, quick, vivacious man, full of life and energy, and always ready to take part in any sport, particularly if it related to horses, and he then had the best half mile track in the south. Now he is paralyzed and cannot turn in his bed, and groans, curses and prays alternately. He imagines that his victim is sitting on the bed with him, and he begs those near him to take him away Occasionally he holds long conversations with his victim, and from the trend of his remarks it leads one to recall the saying of old, "Vengeance is mine. I will repay."

Severe Fracture of the Jaw.

In a runaway at 7 o'clock Saturday morning Miss Mason French, a beautiful and popular young lady of Gallatin, Tenn., visiting relatives in Tallahoma, Tenn., was thrown from a buggy and sustained a severe fracture of the jaw bone in the center of the chin, and all the lower front teeth were knocked out. The unfortunate young lady was promptly attended by Drs. D. D Saunders, of Memphis, and J. B. Cowan, of Tallahoma. She is doing well.

LIVE WASHINGTON NOTES.

Failure of the American National Bank Reported to the Comptroller.

REPORT OF MONEY COINED IN JULY

The Warship Maine, While Coaling at Key West, Toughes Bottom, Sustaining Slight Damages—Reports of Maximum Temperatures Shows Unusual Warm Weather.

New Orleans Bank Failure.

The comptroller of the currency is informed of the failure of the American National bank of New Orleans. It had a capital of $164,000, and according to the last report to the comptroller owed its depositors $350,000 and had borrowed $160,000.

Money Coined in July.

The monthly statement of the director of the mint shows the coinage at the United States mints during July to have been as follows: Gold, $2,918,200; silver, $1,092,000, of which $30,000 was in half dollars; minor coins, $21,000. Total, coinage, $4,031,200.

Accident to a War Ship.

The Maine, while coaling at Key West, touched bottom and slightly bent several of her plates. When docked at Norfolk today the plates were examined and the injuries found to be slight. No attempt will be made to straighten the plates at present, but as soon as the vessel is cleaned she will join the North Atlantic squadron.

Paying the Sugar Bounty.

The work of entering the sugar bounty warrants on the books of the treasurer's office was completed Saturday, and they were all sent to the internal revenue bureau. It was stated in that bureau that all, or nearly all the warrants would be mailed that evening. About ninety-five were sent out in the morning, up to which time about $3,000,000 had been paid out on account of the bounty.

Maximum Temperature.

Reports of maximum temperatures received by the weather bureau show that the present warm wave is very general, and probably is the most severe during the present summer. The officials say it is very unusual for the temperature to reach such a high point in so many parts of the country at one time. The heat is due to an area of high barometer which has been prevailing over the southern portion of the country and low barometer in the northern part, which results in great waves of the heat coming toward the north.

In Washington city the heat during the past few days has been intense, and Wednesday the thermometer reached its maximum point, registering 96 degrees, according to the official readings, though instruments in business houses and other places were 100 and above. Notwithstanding the intense heat there were no prostrations.

The predictions of the weather bureau are that the warm weather will continue from the middle and south Atlantic coast westward to the Mississippi river, though some relief may be expected from thunder storms in some sections.

Among the temperatures reported to the weather bureau Wednesday were: Little Rock, 102 (the highest in the country); Albany, 94; Philadelphia, 94; Charlotte, N. C., 94; Jacksonville, 92; Pensacola, 96; Montgomery, Ala., 96; Vicksburg, Miss., 98; New York, 90; Memphis, 100; Indianapolis, 94; Oswego, 96; Cleveland, 92; Chicago, 96; St. Louis, Kansas City, Dodge City, Ia., and Phoenix, Ariz., 98.

Thirty-one Prostrate—Eight Dead.

An epidemic of smallpox could hardly be worse than the present hot weather. Thursday night all records were passed. At midnight with the thermometer registering 81 degrees, the streets and parks of St. Louis were full of people seeking fresh air. Not a breath of air was stirring. The death roll had reached eight and prostrations reported over thirty-one.

Conferers of favors are themselves often responsible for the lack of gratitude which they so sorely lament. They forget that the chief value of what they bestow lies not in the thing itself so much as in the spirit of kindness and good-will which prompted it, and that it is that which draws forth gratitude in return. Gratitude, like affection, cannot be demanded or enforced; it withers under compulsion, but blossoms forth under the warm sunshine of a kindly nature. If that does not accompany the gifts or the favor, let not the donor fancy that he is entitled to gratitude, or feel defrauded if he receive it not.

Green Manure for Orchards---What is the Roup---Management of Burdocks---Horse Talk---Poultry Notes.

DISEASE OF DUCKS.

Ducks are subject to a disease known as anthrax, and similar to the disease of common fowls, by which the combs turn black and the birds lie about sleepily until they die. The disease is commonly called cholera. It is due to the overfeeding of the ducks on grain food. It is hardly of any use to try remedies. The only cure is to prevent it by feeding moderately and keeping the birds in clean, wholesome places.

GREEN MANURE FOR ORCHARDS.

One of the difficulties in using any of the plants commonly employed in green manuring for orchards is that the most valuable of all, red clover, requires two years' growth to get the best results from it, and that while it is growing the clover will absorb so much mineral fertility that it will rob the orchard, which needs that kind of fertilizing more than any other. The clover, both top and root, supplies plenty of nitrogenous plant food. This makes leaf and wood growth, but always lessens the tendency to fruit bearing. What most bearing orchards most need is a large supply of mineral plant food and very little nitrogen. A yearly growth of twelve to fifteen inches on the apple tree is better than more. This can be secured on any fairly rich ground if the tree is properly pruned.

MANAGEMENT OF BURDOCKS.

It is true that there is a time at which plants may be most easily killed on account of the special conditions of them at that time; but this time is wholly one of condition of growth, and not of any special condition of the moon or anything outside of this earth or the plant itself. Generally, the time at which plants of all kinds are most vulnerable is when they are in the most active growth, when, being deprived of the leaves by cutting them down to the roots, the root is so checked as to fail to recover, and so dies. The burdock has a large root and is a perennial, making many seeds, which are easily carried from one place to another, and thus spreads far and wide. An excellent way of dealing with these perennial weeds is to cut them low down by the roots, as far as possible underground. This is done by means of the spud described in these columns a short time ago. Perseverance in this has never failed of success with the worst of perennial weeds. But a sure thing is to pour a little sulphuric acid on the roots, or put a handful of coarse salt on when the spud is used. When the space is to large for this, plowing in the hot weather, turning the roots up to the hot sun, will, with a little additional work with the spud or sharp hoe, finish up the work.—New York Times.

WHAT IS THE ROUP?

How or why the name of roup came to be applied to that form of tubercular disease which is accompanied by a discharge from the nostrils, has frequently puzzled me, says Feathered World, England. I can quite understand why the name diphtheria is given when a filmy deposit of tubercle or masses of it are formed in the mouth or throat, for there is a very close resemblance between this condition and diphtheria as seen in the human subject. In fowls diphtheria is certainly as contagious as in the human being, and if we are to believe what we read about it in poultry, medical, and other papers, it has been in very many instances contracted by man from the inferior animals, and cases are on record where fowls have contracted the disease from consumptives.

The term roup serves a very useful purpose, if only applied when there is merely a discharge from the nostrils and mouth, or simply a thickening of the secretions, for it is very necessary for us to have distinguishing names for the different forms of tubercular disease. In all feathered creatures the disease germs of tubercle very frequently first attack the membranes lining the mouth. This is in consequence of their being in the bird's drinking water, or picked up with food that has been contaminated by the excrement of creatures affected with tubercle. The disease germs set up inflammation of the mucus membrane of the mouth, mainly due to the presence of the bacilli of tubercle. Miliary ulcers begin to be formed, sloughing of the tissues follow, and the waste products which are thrown off increase the thickness of the discharge, which now very quickly becomes decomposed and gives off a very offensive odor. This form of disease is known as wet roup; another form is known as dry roup, diphtheria, canker, etc.

The term canker is mostly applied to this form of the disease in pigeons. In them the tissues are very firm, and consequently, except in the case of young birds, the growth of tubercle and the formation of ulcers are, as a rule, slow processes, hence probably the term canker. In young pigeons the growth of the tubercle is sometimes very rapid, and large cheesy masses of it are frequently found in the throats of squabs before the owner has noticed they were even ailing. This is usually the case when the disease has been contracted from their parents when feeding them. The parents themselves may appear to be perfectly healthy birds, the disease in them being in a latent condition. I know nothing which more resembles fire in its mode of action than tubercle. Like fire, its spread depends almost wholly upon the material subjected to its action.

HORSE TALK.

The teased colt is the sire to the ill-tempered horse.

The man that would have sound, nicely-formed hoofs on his horses when he comes to sell them, must give attention to the hoofs of his colts.

The best-fed work horse has the heavy grain ration in the morning and at noon, and the bulk of his hay at night.

If the horse's shoulders are washed clean and bathed every evening with strong salt water (it is all the better if a little alum is added), only a very ill-fitting collar can make galls.

Stuff the pads with timothy hay—it remains springy. Cotton or wool becomes hard, and often forms into lumps.

Look out for the buffalo gnats, and grease the ears and other parts of the horses most infested.

When you have a good horse stick to him. He may not be fast, he may not be completely sound, but he does all you need of a horse, is safe and healthy. Why change, even if some jockey with a more showy horse does offer to trade? You know nothing of the other horse, and you do know your own is fully honest. The chances are that the man who deals in horses knows more about them than you do, and that you will make nothing by the transaction, and will in all probability lose. He is in the business for what he can get out of it.

We prefer to have the colt in the field with the mare. If the colt is shut in the stable both it and the mare will fret. Besides, the colt should suck every two or three hours.

Give the work horses a night pasture near the stables. After the day's work they should receive the same care in the stable as if they were to remain there—and after being cooled, fed and cleaned, turn them in the pasture or large paddock where they can get a generous bite of grass and roll and rest. They should receive the same amount of feed in the stable. It is cruel to expect them to work all day and pick around all night to satisfy their hunger.—Farm Journal.

POULTRY NOTES..

Chicks should not be allowed to roost until they are at least four months old. The roost should be four inches across the top and flat, and not over one foot high.

Remember to pick out the most promising cockerels and pullets of the birds to save for breeders another season. This is the way to build up your flock in general excellence—selling off those which develop and grow ahead of the others is the way to run down your stock. The latter method leaves the runts and inferior specimens to be bred from. Don't do it. Save the best, and use good judgment in selecting those to be retained.

Attention to poultry pays on the farm, and during these times, when country produce is selling at such low prices, there is no product on the farm that brings cash so readily as poultry and eggs.

If the chicks are in any way ailing look for the causes, for the prevention of the cause is a better way to "doctor" than to be dosing sick fowls

If you cannot manage a small flock of poultry and meet with a marked success, don't think of branching out on a larger plan.

Use every means possible to keep down the vermin in hot weather. Tobacco stems in the nests, tobacco dust and insect powder are good. Scatter air-slacked lime about, and see that houses and premises are kept strictly clean.

A lot of male birds running around after the breeding season is over is an unnecessary expense as well as a nuisance. Sell them at once.

Farmers should stop their theorizing that scrub poultry is as good as pure bred birds. Every desirable quality a scrub possesses can be traced direct to some pure bred sire. Prejudice often becomes a stumbling block to prosperity.

The man who knows it all and can learn nothing about poultry never makes his wonderful success(?) much of an object lesson. There are plenty of people whom he classes as "ignoramuses" who can give him pointers on success.

Take good care of the late-hatched broods. Many fanciers claim that the late chicks have the finest plumage, from a standard point of view. Late-hatched pullets will be the ones that wil be laying late in the spring next season, when the hens will nearly all be desiring to set.

Every farmer should use his influence to have his county fair give inducements to improve the poultry displays and to see that they are judged by poultrymen who are competent to make the awards.

The ideal summer shed for poultry is one not more than four feet high, set on four posts, and open on all sides. A six-inch wide board should be nailed on the post at the ground. Keep the earth under the shed spaded up, and the way the fowls will enjoy it will be ample reward for your labor.

The necessity for new blood is greatly felt where the earliest and best chicks are being continually disposed of because they will bring a little better price. Where there is a systematic selection observed to keep the best and sell the poorest, a flock's stamina and good qualities may be greatly improved.--Baltimore Sun.

THE STATE NORMAL COLLEGE, TROY, ALA.

This college is supported by state and Peabody fund appropriations for the training of teachers and is not a mere "Preparatory School" for some other, but is of college grade in every way, as a teachers' training school should be, and grants college degrees and diplomas, and its graduates receive state certificates for two, four and six years, or for life, from the state superintendent of education of Alabama, and these are the strongest testimonials of professional worth to a teacher. Indeed, the graduates of this college are in great demand as teachers and the college authorities take great pleasure in answering requests for trained teachers sent in by school authorities from all over Alabama and adjoining states.

It will be seen from the Normal Exponent that students desiring the usual college course may get it here at very low expense, too. Board is but $8 to $10 per month and tuition and incidentals low.

Persons desiring information as to this college or wishing to secure a good teacher should write to Dr. E. R. Eldridge, president, at Troy, Ala., for the Normal Exponent explaining everything.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

"I like the small package of Pearline," a lady says; "it lasts two weeks and does two washings."

2½ cts. a Wash

Then she admits that she has been using soap with her Pearline. Now this is all unnecessary. If you don't put in enough Pearline to do the work easily and alone, you bring Pearline down to the level of soap, which means hard work and rubbing. If you use enough Pearline, the soap is a needless expense, to say the least. Use Pearline alone, just as directed, and you'll have the most thoroughly economical washing.

Sunshine and Shadow.

When we walk in gladsome sunshine,
When on mountain tops we sing,
When the air is full of music,
And the flowers are blossoming,
We may joy in birds and blossoms,
Yet when summer days have flown
Find that buds and birds have vanished
And we stand bereft, alone.

But when in some gloomy valley
With a fearsome step we grope,
Hearing not a sound of music,
Seeing not a ray of hope;
If then, through the gathering darkness,
Some kind hand should meet our own,
And its firm and kindly pressure
Tells us we are not alone,
Then the step takes on new courage,
And the lightened heart can sing,
Knowing, even in the darkness,
Some bright flowers are blossoming.
—Mary Wood Allen, M. D., in Union Signal.

A FRIEND OF MINE.

We called him Mascot from the time we first had him. You see, we thought it was a great piece of good luck, my getting him, anyway. There he is now, nosing the earth over a bone at the root of that tall syringa. Bright? Smart? Well, I should think so; not that he knows tricks; he doesn't need any such superficial knowledge. It's general intelligence and wit that you want in a companion, and a great tender heart; eh? Well, I should say so; and I don't expect in this world to find more intelligence or a more loving heart than Mascot has. You may laugh if you want to, but I know what I'm talking about. You think some human being is having a second existence in his form, perhaps. Oh, no; no mere human being ever loved in that way; he's a dog, fast enough. Come here, Mascot; give a paw, sir.

Isn't he an ugly-looking fellow, with the rough hair standing up all over him, not long enough to droop and be graceful? He's one of the kind that's so ugly he's interesting. Scotch terrier with a few drops of bull-dog blood, I fancy; no thoroughbred, you see. But look at his eyes—strong and true and loving—that's enough. We've been the closest of friends ever since we met. I'll tell you how that was—or have I ever told you? No? My wife says I tell everybody two or three times over, and that she has noticed that all my friends are careful not to mention the subject of canines in general, lest I may begin on my particular one.

Sit down, Mascot, and lean against my knee. He likes to lie with his head on my foot, and I like to have him.

It's two years ago this spring. I was going down Clark street almost on a run to catch a train. There happened not to be many teams in the street, for it was not yet seven o'clock in the morning. I heard a sharp cry across the way. It was so sharp and agonized that I stopped involuntarily. On the other side was a group of boys with a dog in their midst. Though at the first I couldn't see anything distinctly, yet I knew directly that the boys were infernal little scamps, and that they were torturing the animal. Another cry—there was smoke rising from the center of the group, which was in a sort of alcove formed by two buildings. I forgot my train and ran across, dashing right in among the ruffians. When I see a certain kind of boy I'm ashamed that I'm a man, I swear I am!

They had this dog—lie still, Mascot!—they had him muzzled, his jaws tied together so tightly that the rope which bound them had gnawed into the flesh and was bloody, and a boy was at each side of his head gripping fast the cord; two other boys held him by hips and hind legs, and what do you think a fifth was doing? Holding one of those kerosene torches under the dog's body. Yes, and I smelt the burning flesh as I jumped on the pavement. The tortured creature made a terrible effort, but he wouldn't have escaped if my coming hadn't confused the villains—as it was, the dog dashed at me and leaped on me. What an agony of hope and appeal there was in his wild eyes! How he cried in his throat; for he couldn't open his jaws.

I wanted to kill every boy there was there. I did knock one over; the rest ran away. The torch was left smoking on the sidewalk; and then a policeman came along, sauntering from somewhere, stared at the dog, and asked if he was mad. I shook my head and walked off, the dog so eagerly at my heels that I had to be careful how I moved.

I hurried into a street where, at this time of day, there were still fewer people. I sat down on a step, took out my pocket-knife and cut the rope from the dog's mouth.

His gratitude was heart-breaking; it almost seemed at first as if he would die of it. And I cried; I couldn't help it, and you know very well I'm not one of the snivelling kind. Yes, Mascot, it's all right now; you needn't lick my face, and we're not going to part. There, lie down again.

Well, as soon as he became a little more calm, or I might say as soon as we became more calm, I looked at my watch. It was of no use to think of the train now; I couldn't possibly catch it. The dog kept his gaze on me as if he feared I should leave him.

We walked, he at my very heels, until we came to a hack stand. I took a carriage and I put Mascot—I had already named him in my mind—on the front seat; then I placed myself opposite, and told the driver to take us out to Northrup street—that was a good half-hour's drive.

So we started. Mascot didn't like to be as far away from me as the distance between the front and back seat. He was continually reaching out a paw, and presently I lifted him over beside me. I hurt his poor burned flesh as I did so, for he whined, then hurriedly licked my hand as if in apology and to assure me that he would allow me to hurt him if I wished to do so.

We lived here then, and my wife was in the garden when the hack stopped at the gate. She saw me with a smooch of blood, the dog's blood, on my face, and gave a little scream as she ran forward. She had believed that I was already miles away on that train.

"I'm all right," I hastened to say, "and I've come back because I've saved this fellow. I hope you'll like him."

I stepped out, and Mascot stepped out after me, or rather with me, in his fear lest he should get left.

He was not a reassuring object. His hair was full of mud and blood; there was a gash in his under lip; and he was now beginning to feel stiff and sore. He stood pressed against my ankle while I paid the driver.

Fortunately my wife had had a dog when she was a child, and if you have ever been intimate with a good dog, it makes all the difference in your feeling toward the whole canine race.

Having become convinced that I had met with no accident, Margaret looked at the new comer an instant, then she held out her hand and said softly:

"Poor fellow! What a hard time you've had!"

Mascot extended his head and licked the tips of her fingers; then he glanced up at me and said, "I'm going to love her, too—but not quite so well."

We took him into the kitchen and put him into the sink. We washed him, we cleansed his wounds with warm water and castile soap.

How gentle he was, and how he tried to bear it. Then we put an old blanket in the corner, and he sat stiffly down on it. He ate a basin of bread and milk, and then we left him. But he would cry. I went back to him three or four times, and he seemed perfectly happy while I remained. At last Margaret suggested that I leave him something of mine. I dropped my handkerchief beside him. He put his chin on it, and when we left him alone he didn't whine again.

I was glad I called him Mascot, for that very night one of the firm, to whom I had sent word that I was detained from starting on my business trip that morning, came out and said they had decided to put me in another department, with five hundred dollars more salary. He said that he knew I was able to fill that place, but he acknowledged that he shouldn't have thought of promoting me just now if his wife hadn't asked him if he couldn't do something for me.

"And what do you think made her ask?" he inquired. "Why she was in a carriage on Clark street early this morning, and she saw you rescue that dog. She was so thankful to see you do it that she said she knew you could fill a higher position in our house. That is a woman's way of reasoning, you know."—The Chap Book.

Eating a Menagerie.

During the siege of Paris, after all the supplies from without had been cut off (September 22, 1871), it was decided to sacrifice the inmates of the Zoological Garden, the Jardin des Plantes.

The sold animals were slaughtered and eaten. A list was kept at the time, and from this we learn that from October 18 to the end of 1870 the following animals were sold and eaten in the order given: One dwarf zebu, £14; two buffaloes, £12; two sambur stags, £20; twelve carp, £6; two yaks, £15 6s; three geese, £2 8s: one small zebra, £16; one lot of hens, ducks, etc., £34 10s; one lot of ducks, £4 12s; eleven rabbits, £4; four reindeer, £32; two Nilgau antelopes, £40; one doe, £12; two wapiti stags, £100; one antelope, £26; two camels, £160; one yak calf, £8; two camels, £200; two elephants, £1,080.

Most of the above were sold to an English butcher, who kept his shop in the Aveuue de Friedland well stocked all through the seige with all possible, and previously impossible, kinds of meat.

To killing of the elephants, Castor and Pollux, presented some difficulty. The former was fired at three times, and was at last dispatched by means of a steel bullet discharged from a Chassepot rifle. A single shot behind the ear brought Pollux to the ground.

The flesh of the elephant was sold at 50 to 60 francs a kilo; the trunk fetched 30 francs a kilo.

Trunk and feet were regarded as particular delicacies by the gourmands. The same butcher sold the flesh of a young wolf at 24 francs a kilo.

The flesh of the cassowaries was bought by Baron Rothschild, who was one of the butcher's best customers. —London Mail.

Fraudulent Pets.

Distracted dog-owners who object to the order of the muzzle may perhaps find a word to the wise in the following experience of a well-known Parisian society woman. This lady bought, recently, from a perambulating dog-dealer on the Champs Elysees, a ravishingly beautiful little toy poodle, whose feet especially attracted attention by their extremely delicate appearance. She took the treasure home into her salon, and was horrified in seeing it run at once up the curtain. The dog turned out to be a rat sewn into the skin of a baby poodle. This is an improvement on the story of the other Parisienne, who imported a most rare and expensive little toy dog from London, and found out, at home, that it was a joyful little mongrel sewn into the coat of a canine grandee. But why should not the distressed dog-owner of today go and buy a rabbit-skin to wrap the unmuzzled doggie in?—Westminster Gazette.

Extreme Praise.

She was a sweet-faced old woman, but her clothes showed plainly that she came from a part of the country where Sunday gown and bonnet are bought but once in ten years or so.

She had gone into a fashionable church and paid devout attention to the service, but when the congregation was dismissed she went forward, leaned on the chancel rail, and looked long and admiringly at the flowers. Finally the thoughts of her heart found their way to her lips, and she murmured:

"Well, I never! Why, they're almost as pooty as wax flowers!"—New York Herald.

Two Opinions.

"What I know about bicycle riding," said Scorchleigh, "would fill a good-sized volume."

"What you don't know about it," said the officer who arrested him for running down an old lady, "would fill a good-sized cemetery."—Puck.

CHERRIES.

Under the tree the farmer said,
Smiling, and shaking his wise old head;
"Cherries are ripe! but then, you know,
There's the grass to cut, and the corn to hoe;
We can gather the cherries any day,
But when the sun shines we must make our hay.
Tonight, when the work has all been done,
We'll muster the boys for fruit and fun."

Up in the tree a robin said,
Perking and cocking his saucy head:
"Cherries are ripe! and so today
We'll gather them while you make the hay;
For we are the boys with no corn to hoe;
No cows to milk, and no grass to mow."
At night the farmer said: "Here's a trick!
Those roguish robins have had their pick."

A MILLIONAIRE'S FIRST DOLLAR.

Among the millionaires of America there is none more eccentric than John I. Blair of Blairstown, N. J., who has built at his own cost over a hundred churches and yet limits his personal expenses to the last cent. This gentleman is ninety-three years old now, but he still recalls the first money he earned.

He earned this first money when he was eight years old by snaring rabbits. The snares were bent down saplings with an apple fastened to them. When a rabbit bit at the apple the sapling would fly up, strangling the little animal as it caught him by the throat. "Little John I.'s" first catch was sixteen rabbits. He sold the skins for a dollar, and carried home the money, nearly all in big copper cents.

A CAT'S FUNERAL.

A dog and a cat belonging to the same master were the best friends in the world, and spent their time in frolicking together. One day, while playing as usual, the cat died suddenly, falling at the dog's feet.

The latter at first did not realize what had happened, but continued his playful pulling, pushing and caressing his companion, but with evident astonishment at her inertness. After some time he appeared to understand the situation, and his grief found vent in prolonged howls.

Presently he was seized with the idea of burying the cat. He pulled her into the garden, where he soon dug a hole with his paws. He then refilled the hole with dirt and stretching himself out on the grave, resumed his mournful howling.

CRIPPLE WON THE RACE, TOO.

On one of the uptown cross streets five young girls were enjoying themselves on a recent morning. They were girls of a dozen or more years, and four of them were on bicycles. The fifth girl rode a tricycle which is propelled by handles at the side. She was pale and thin of feature, an invalid and a cripple. The other girls were round and rosy, the pictures of health. They were all in the roadway, the four girls skimming about the little cripple like so many light-winged birds.

"Wait, Julia," cried one of them, as she wheeled along the tricycle; "you're going too fast for Elizabeth?"

"Are you getting tired Elizabeth?" cried Julia, as she fell back.

"Not a bit," said a hoarse little voice. It's just lovely out here."

"Ain't it nice that Elizabeth can come out and ride with us?" said one of the girls. "She is getting so strong she can keep up with us as well as not."

"No I can't," cried the hoarse little voice, "an' you know it."

The thin, white hands gripped the handles tightly and the gray eyes filled with tears.

"Why Elizabeth!" cried the other girls.

"But you're awful good to me, anyway," said the cripple, as a faint smile ran about the pinched mouth.

"Let's have a race, girls," cried Julia, "and mind we don't give Elizabeth any head start."

And they fluttered about until presently that race began, with the cripple girl very much in the lead and the other girls laughing merrily as they held back their too eager wheels.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

NATIONAL FLOWER OF JAPAN.

The cherry blossom is the national flower of Japan, as the rose is of England, the lily of France, the thistle of Scotland and the shamrock of Ireland. On the mikado's flags, papers and carriages, and on the soldiers' caps and uniform, you will see the open chrysanthemum. But the flower of the people and of the nation is the flower of the blossoming cherry tree.

"Do not all cherry trees blossom?" you will ask.

Yes; but the Japanese cultivate all over Japan, by the millions, the sakura tree which is valued only for the beauty of its blossoms. Botanists call it Prunus pseudocerasus. From an entire tree you could not get ripe cherries enough to make a pie; but the blooms are massed together on the boughs like clouds, and the blooms are often as large as a rose. Picnics in Japan are called "Going to see the flowers." In June millions of the people go out to sing and sport and laugh and play under the cherry trees, or to catch "the snow-showers that do not fall from the skies." There are tens of thousands of stanzas of poetry about the cherry tree. Some of the people become so enchanted with the lovely blossoms that they actually say their prayers under them, or even worship the famous old trees.

A DOG IRON WORKER.

Keys, the canine employe of the Union Iron Works, met with an accident recently by which his front right leg was broken, says the San Francisco Examiner. Keys has been looked upon by the officers of the iron works as one of the regular workmen for about four years. He is a dog of no particular beauty, and his pedigree would not be considered by dog fanciers, but he possesses wonderful intelligence. He makes the Potrero Police Station his home, and he is the pet of Lieutenant Bennet, but nearly every workman in the ship building concern claims the friendship of the dog.

At the first tap of the gong every morning Keys has reported for duty at the gates of the Union Iron Works, and he has never left until a full day's work had been accomplished. He was particularly useful in the ship yard and in the boiler shop, and the foremen of these departments say he was more valuable to them than a man for doing certain kinds of work. He could crawl through small holes in boilers and about ships, and his particular work was to carry tools, bolts, nuts, rivets and other small articles needed by workmen who had crawled into such places, and to have them creep back and forth for which would have caused considerable loss of time. Keys thoroughly understood his work, and he was always on hand when needed. Recently a steamer was placed on the dry dock for repairs, and the dog, realizing that his services might be needed by the workmen, was climbing a ladder to the deck when he slipped and fell about twenty feet. The men picked him up, and making a stretcher of some pieces of canvas carried him to the police station, and sent for a physician to set the broken limb.

Largest Fire Engines.

The two largest fire engines in the world have recently been brought out in London. It is claimed that a body of 1,800 gallons of water a minute can be thrown by one, and 1,400 gallons by the other of these engines. The weight of the engines is three and a half tons.

President Faure, of France, remarked the other day that his greatest objection to his present position is that it leaves him no time to ride his wheel.

SCIENTIFIC SCRAPS.

A shoe that can be heated by means of an apparatus attached to the sole is among the latest curiosities at the Washington Patent Office.

The Medical and Surgical Reporter records a number of remarkable cures of diphtheria with calomel rubbed up with sugar and placed dry on the tongue Dr. Flick considers this a specific for that disease.

A Chinese firm has commenced the manufacture of wine and champagne on a large scale with the grapes of northern China, which are said to yield an excellent quality. Hitherto the grapes have been used only for eating.

M. Henry Boucher, French Minister of Commerce, is conferring with several savants for the purpose of organizing a competition to ascertain whether alcohol extracted from potatoes and beet root cannot be effectively utilized for lighting by incandescence.

Dr. Alfred Hettner expresses his belief that the golden age of Palestine will return next century. The country, he says, is admirably adapted to the growth of cereals, and is capable of supporting a population of 3,000,000, or four times as much as it contains at present.

The Frankfurter Zeitung calls attention to the great cruelty involved in the export of quails from African ports to London. It is estimated that at least 2,000,000 of these birds are sent to England annually, and that as only one-fourth of those caught arrive alive the number destroyed annually must be 8,000,000.

Experiments are being made in Dresden with storage batteries and underground conduits with a view to replacing the overhead system of railway propulsion in Chemnitz. The overhead trolley system has been very profitable. The system has worked perfectly for the past two years, and has much to commend it to cities bent on an overhead system.

Habits of Fish in Feeding.

It is a common thing for a fish to shake its live prey or other food as a dog might do, perhaps to kill it or tear it into fragments for eating. A dog can help itself by placing its feet upon its food. Of course a fish can't do this but it can shake very vigorously. In feeding the fishes in aquariums the food—excepting, of course, live food—is cut up into pieces of suitable size. Fragments of food thus prepared may hang together by a shred, or a little fish may seize a piece as big as itself; but whether the fish is big or little, if it gets a piece bigger than it can swallow, it is very likely to shake it, and to shake it powerfully, tearing off what it wants, or such part as may be detached by the shaking, and swallowing that, and then darting after the rest as it sinks in the water. There are many kinds of crustaceans, however, crabs and so on, which convey food to the mouth with their claws, as man carries food to his mouth with his hands.—New York Sun.

The Moving Mountain.

The lion of the hour is the Gouffre Mountain in the Gard, France, which is moving towards that river at the pace of five yards a day. Its advance has destroyed the machinery and pits of the Grand Combe Colliery, and destroyed nearly a mile of the Alais Railway. The great thing now is to prepare new channels for the Gard and Garden Rivers, which are sure, when the landslip comes, to be completely choked up. Six hundred persons have been obliged to leave their homes at the Grand Combe. The lower strata of the Gouffre Mountain, which rises sheer from a valley, are of grit and green marl. Both have given way owing to the infiltration of rain. recently 5,000 persons went from Nimes to see the moving mountain from the range fronting it. The noise it keeps on making is frightful. There are wide cracks in all directions. Nobody is suffered to go on the Gouffre or into the valley on which it advances.—London News.

Express trains have been placed between Berlin and St. Petersburg, Russia, which make the distance in thirty hours.

Montevallo must awake to the responsibility she has resting upon her shoulders and show herself equal to the occasion. The streets are in a wretched condition and a united effort should be made to get them in order.

The Industrial school will open on the second Monday in October. Tuition will be absolutely free. Board can be had at from $8 to $10 per month. The distinctive industrial features pertaining to this institution will occupy prominent places in its curriculum and a girl can be taught professions by which she can make her own way in the world. Truly the people of Shelby county have good cause to congratulate themselves over the success of Montevallo in securing its location in our midst. All praise to Captain Plowman, who never fails in anything he undertakes, and to Col. W. W. Wadsworth, the noblest Roman of them all, who has stood by us and fought our battles and won our victories. Montevallo will never forget them.

From the time Montevallo won the location of the industrial school, Messrs. Moody and Block have waged a bitter warfare on our town. Disappointed in their efforts to locate the school in their own towns, they have stopped at nothing to prevent its being a success at Montevallo. When the executive committee met here in January last to receive our nine thousand dollars, objections were immediately offered by Mr. Moody, on two grounds: first, he contended it was illegal for us to get the money from the county; second, it was after the time given us by the board to raise the money. When he was informed that we had a bond prepared for the nine thousand dollar building, which we had a right to do, he then said if we would pay them the money he would have no objections to it. It is well known how he submitted an argument against us after receiving the money and agreeing to let the matter drop.

After failing in everything he has undertaken with reference to taking from us the school, we hope he will now resign from the board. If he is not in sympathy with the school at Montevallo—and he clearly shows by his actions he is not—the sooner some good man is put in his place, the better for the school. Montevallo has done her duty and come up to every requirement in this matter, and if the gentlemen above named do not feel pleased over the decision of the board, we think their services can well be dispensed with.

The New York Herald says: Women are crowding men out of their places. They are doing it all along the line. The idea that a woman's sphere is in the kitchen or at the cradle has been exploded. Here is a Mrs. Pulsrell who has underbidden all competitors as a garbage collector in Denver, Col., and is making money out of the job. She is doing for less than $300 per month what cost the city formerly $900, and she is not only doing the work satisfactorily, but is clearing a good profit as well as cleaning the city. The horses are being driven out of the world by the cable and electricity, and the women are absorbing so many occupations that in the next century there will not be a man in existence.

The whole number of volumes in the Chicago Public Library is 217,203. The aggregate circulation of books and periodicals for the year ending June 1 was 2,542,244, of which more than half is registered at the delivery stations, thirty-one being in operation in the north division of the city, eleven in the south division and eleven in the west division. The cost per volume at the delivery stations has been only 2.31 cents. The three libraries next largest in respect of circulation are those of Manchester, England; Boston, Mass., and Birmingmingham, England. Chicago exceeds the first more than two-fold and the second and the third three-fold.

Using River Water.

Capital City Water company, which supplies the people of Montgomery with pure artesian water, however at a good stiff cost, has been forced, on account of the long continued drouth which has prevailed, to supplement their supply with water pumped from the river. The Alabama river water is not regarded as wholesome, and some sicking will probably result.

Two Men Cut in a Saloon.

In a difficulty in Echols' saloon in Gadsden, Saturday evening at 8:30, Bill and Jim Griffin received several knife wounds at the hands of Will Coleman. The affray was the outcome of a wrestling match between Bill Griffin and Coleman earlier in the evening. The wounds are painful, but not serious. The Griffin boys were drinking. Coleman has disappeared.

Terrible and Destructive Cyclone.

A terrible and most destructive cyclone swept over Augustine, Perry county, on Tnursday last, leveling everything in its path.

Twelve negroes and three white people were killed by houses falling in on them, and ten other persons more or less injured.

Twenty-four head of horses and mules were crushed to death by falling barns.

The cyclone was followed by the heaviest rain that has fallen in that section in fifteen years. Creeks and branches were converted into raging torrents, sweeping away cotton, corn and other crops, causing heavy losses to planters.

Terrific Storm in Lauderdale.

A terrific storm passed over Florence about 5 o'clock Sunday evening. Great damage was done, but no fatalities have been reported. The greatest damage was at the corner of Court and Tombigbee streets. There two frame houses were blown down, and awnings, chimneys and trees wrecked. Trees were uprooted all over town, and on Court street large plate glasses were broken by the fury of the wind.

The storm came from the north, the storm cloud being met by another black cloud from the southwest. It is thought that considerable damage has been done in the county. The storm lasted less than twenty minutes, and was accompanied with rain and hail.

Terrorism in Bibb.

The stable of N. L. Wilson, of Blocton, was burned, with its contents, including a pair of horses, Wednesday night about 12 o'clock. A local report of the affair says:

"There is no doubt that the fire was ignited by Thrasher. He had it in for Wilson. The latter is a brother-in-law of the late Deputy Sheriff Griffin Bass. Wilson also was hated by Thrasher because he on one or more occasions hauled Sheriff Latham and posse in his buggies while they were hunting for Thrasher or members of his family. Sheriff Latham was in Blocton at the time, but was unable to raise a posse. The people are afraid of the desperado, who seems to have two desperate men with him, and a large number of acquaintances as his friends and spotters.

Hell Has No Fouler Fiend.

Rev. Gardiner C. Tucker, rector of St. John's church (Episcopal), Mobile, and his family have been spending the summer at Battles Wharf, a resort on the eastern shore of Mobile bay, Alabama. At 2 o'clock Friday morning Mr. and Mrs. Tucker were aroused by a tapping at the back door of their home, and then a childish voice was heard crying out, "Please, mama, let me in." Astonished and alarmed, the parents opened the door to find their 6-year-old daughter lying on the steps. She was taken in, and soon told her awful story. In substance she said that a man had taken her from the house and into the woods, where he had injured her. She was out of the house about an hour. The man, she said, brought her back to the house, putting her down at the gate. She had dragged herself to the rear gallery and knocked at the door. She said that the man was short and thick set, of light complexion, and was a white man or a mulatto negro.

Mr. Tucker immediately aroused his neighbors, and searching parties were organized. By the light of torches, lanterns and lamps the country adjacent to Battles Wharf was thoroughly scoured.

By daybreak the whole community was on foot, but no definite clue could be obtained except that about 12 o'clock the children in the Catholic orphans' summer home, a half-mile away, had been alarmed by an intruder who came in at the window, and when the children asked what he wanted, replied, 'The sisters." Then he returned. He was seen to be a negro. The man who entered Tucker's went in at the window, picked up the child from a bed, on which lay also a 12-year-old daughter of Mr. Tucker. The little victim did not awake until she was out of the house. Reporters have gone to the scene, but as yet nothing has been heard from them.

CITY SHROUDED IN DARKNESS.

The Hot Wave Breaks in Storm and Flood.

The darkness that lowered over Pittsburg, Pa., at 8 o'clock Thursday morning was scarcely ever surpassed. For a short time the business part of the city was almost as dark as at midnight, and not a few timid people were appalled at the unnatural spectacle. This was followed by an electric storm quite as terrifying, and by a heavy rainfall, which continued until noon, the rainfall measuring 1.85 inches. All over the city sewers were filled to overflowing, and accumulations of mud and debris covered the streets. All of the traction lines were brought to a standstill, but aside from this no serious injury to life or property has been reported.

The Pittsburg and Western bridge at Pine creek, as well as one or two others, were swept away, while portions of the tracks were washed out in a number of places.

Dwellings, stables, fences and many domestic animals were carried off by the waters.

Portions of Sharpsburg and Aetna were flooded, and much damage to property was done.

There was a cloudburst at the hamlet of Delaven, on the Pittsburg and Western railway, seven miles from Pittsburg, and three lives were lost.

Wild West Show.

The Demopolis Driving and Bicycle Association have succeeded in arranging with Buffalo Bill's Trained Band of Indians to play a game of Indian ball and dance the celebrated Ghost Dance at their park in Demopolis on Thursday, August 27. It is needless to say that this will be a most novel and exciting entertainment. The Indians will be decked out in all their wild barbaric splendor and will give a wild west show that will thrill the nerves of every spectator. After the ball the squaws will dance the Ghost Dance with their weird songs and gesticulations, which is intensely interesting.

In order to place the performance within the reach of every one the management have decided to place the entire show at the price of one admission, that is to say 50 cents for adults, 25 cents for children and 25 cents for all colored people. The fare on all roads will be 1¼ for the round trip. Put aside your spare change and go to see this wonderful Wild West Show.

TENNESSEE'S REVENUE DEFICIT.

Governor Turney Calls the Legislature to Meet in Extra Session.

Governor Turney, of Tennessee, has issued a proclamation calling the legislature to meet in extra session on September 7, for the purpose of providing additional revenues to supply the deficit in the state treasury. It appears that the deficit is prospective and is expected to occur during next year and in 1898, as a result of a reduction of the assessments at the last session of the legislature in the change in the penitentiary system, and the setting aside by the supreme court of "an act to amend the criminal laws of the state," as unconstitutional.

Life-Destroying Torrid Wave.

Wednesday was the eighth of the present torrid wave, and as yet there is no indication of an immediate break. Early New York police reports show that fourteen deaths and sixteen prostrations from the heat occurred in that city after 2 o'clock Wednesday morning. The total deaths caused by heat during the seven preceding days is 326. Tuesday's record of 140 deaths is the largest.

Three Deaths by Fire.

The fire which destroyed three buildings at 465, 467 and 469 Greenwich street, New York City, proves not to be so fatal regarding the loss of life as was supposed Tuesday night. The number of lives lost was three.

NOTIFICATION OF THE NOMINEES.

Two-score of Thousands Gather to Witness the Ceremony.

The ceremony of formal notification of W. J. Bryan and Arthur Sewall of their nomination for the presidency and vice-presidency of the United States, came off according to programme at Madison Square Garden, New York, Wednesday evening.

At 7 o'clock the doors were thrown open, and, despite the efforts of the police to restrain them, the crowds on every side made desperate rushes for the entrances. In the struggles many women fainted and had to be carried away. The police finally began to use their clubs in an effort to restore order.

A wild scene of turmoil ensued at the main entrance. Men, women and policemen were jumbled together in an indiscriminate mob. Men tore each other and their own clothes in their frantic efforts to gain admission, and matters looked serious for some moments. Shriek after shriek came from the women in the struggling mass, and two or three of them fainted. Then the police rallied and with a vigorous use of their clubs soon formed a line, and thereafter there was a semblance of order.

Governor Stone, of Missouri, made the notification speech. Senator White, of California, having been unexpectedly detained at home. Mr. Bryan read his acceptance speech from manuscript, announcing in his introductory remarks that he would at an early day give to the press a formal letter of acceptance. The reading of his address occupied one hour and forty minutes. He pronounced the peroration without reference to his manuscript.

At the conclusion of Mr. Bryan's address, Governor Stone formally notified Mr. Sewall of his nomination. It was some time before order could be restored sufficiently for Mr. Sewall to be heard. His response is said to have been dignified and brief, following the same line of argument laid down by Mr. Bryan.

After Mr. Sewall's address, Mr. Bryan, accompanied by his wife, went to the Bartholdi hotel, where he spoke again from the balcony.

Besides the crowd at Madison Square Garden there were a number of overflow meetings, the attendance at which is estimated at 15,000, who were addressed from eight separate stands, by more than a dozen speakers. These meetings were held under the direction of the Bryan and Sewall club of single taxers and the Bimetallic League.

FILIBUSTERING EXPEDITION.

The Spanish and United States Officers Said to be Alarmed.

Beyond reasonable doubt Brunswick's tug Dauntless is en route to Cuban waters with a filibustering expedition, consisting of about 100 men and several hundred cases of small arms. The Spanish and the United States government officers have been greatly exercised, and United States Marshal Harrell arrived Thursday to aid in stopping it, but was powerless. The Dauntless is reported by Captain White, of the steamer Passport, to have steamed away from the Satilla river bridge, on the Florida Central and Peninsular railway, near sunrise with a cargo of Cubans, who left the train from Jacksonville at that point to board her. The name and home port painted on the Dauntless were covered with canvas, but she was recognized by many. For several days she has been preparing for the expedition; all her ballast was unloaded, and sacks of coal, together with boxes of munitions of war, were placed on her. With a picked crew of men under Captain Lomm and Engineer Devereaux she steamed up the Satilla, and there awaited the Cubans' arrival from Jacksonville. All her lights were out and the trip was made under darkness.

Failures in New York.

Henry A. Casperfeld, dealer in diamonds and jewelry at 144 Bowery, 859 Broadway, New York, and in Saratoga, N. Y., assigned Thursday to Morris J. Hirsch without preference. He has been in business for sixteen years, and succeeded Casperfeld & Cleveland in 1890. He claimed a capital of $200,000.

S. F. Meyers & Co., wholesale jewelers and dealers in bicycles at 48 Maiden Lane, are financially embarrassed, and Louis Clark, Jr., was appointed receiver Thursday with a bond of $200,000. The liabilities of the firm are $517,000 and the nominal assets $819,000. They have been in business sixteen years, and trade with 6,000 firms throughout the United States and South American countries. They are controlling stockholders in the Olympic Cycle Manufacturing company.

Wire Used for Cotton Ties.

The board of directors of the Charleston cotton exchange met Thursday and adopted the following resolution in regard to the bale of cotton bound with wire which was sent there to be tested a few days ago:

Resolved, That the bale received was tested and stood the strain of compressing; that so far as the exporting of cotton bound with wire is concerned this exchange cannot pass an official opinion in the absence of a majority of the exporters from the city, but as far as we can see at present we think the cotton baled in this way will be received by the exporters, provided the cotton is uncompressed and is wired as the sample bale sent us for inspection.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

If you have any cotton to sell, bring it to Montevallo, and not only get the best offers for it, but get goods at the lowest prices.

Capt. E. W. Booker passed through the city en route to Birmingham Sunday.

Rev. P. L. Abernathy preached two able and instructive sermons Sunday.

Harry C. Reynolds left for Blocton Wednesday.

Miss Fannie Boyd, one of Montgomery's sweetest young ladies, is visiting Miss Hattie Lyman.

Miss Maggie Johnson, of Selma, is visiting Mrs. Dr. Claughton.

Messrs. E. S. Lyman, H. C. Reynolds, P. L. Abernathy and W. B. Reynolds visited Montgomery last week in the interest of the Industrial school.

Mr. J. P. Nix, who is farming on the Killough place, stated to us that he had raised a stalk of corn which had thirteen ears of corn on it.

Surely you ought to be able to please yourself in a suit of first class tailor-made clothing, out of 650 samples. Call on H. C. & W. B. Reynolds and see M. Born's latest styles.

Mrs. E. S. Lyman visited Montgomery last week.

Montevallo's first bale of cotton, grown by Mr. J. T. Self, was brought in Tuesday, and sold for seven and a-half cents.

Mr. S. H. McCauley has bought the lot where Nero Brazier's house now stands, on the corner of Main and Church streets, and is having a neat building erected. Mrs. McCauley will soon occupy it with a nice line of millinery goods.

We have just received our new samples for the coming fall and winter season, from the well known tailoring establishments of M. Born & Co. and J. Solomon, and cordially invite you to inspect them. The line is exceptionally large and fine, and all goods will be made up in the best manner and very latest styles, at prices with which no other tailors can compete.

H. C. & W. B. Reynolds.

Mr. W. L. North, of Birmingham, spent the day here last Thursday.

It seems that the majority of the people bolted the meeting Monday night.

Considering the hot weather, the churches are very well attended on Sundays, but the attendance at prayer meeting is very small. The prayer meeting, it is said, is the index of a church.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed Miskelly spent a short while in town one day last week.

During the thunder storm last Sunday evening the lightning struck the house of Mr. J. T. Self and tearing the window casing away knocked a large hole in the floor. Mrs. Self, who happened to be in the room at the time, was badly shocked.

Miss Eunice Latham is visiting friends in Randolph this week.

Married at Sessions' Chapel last Thursday evening, Miss Nellie Reynolds to Mr. Frank Fallon. Rev. Mr. Herring performed the ceremony.

Miss Sudie Fancher is visiting the family of Mr. Clay Fancher.

W. B. Reynolds made a flying trip to Blocton Monday.

Miss Willie McGuire, of Glendon, is visiting her sister here, Mrs. A. B. Claughton.

We hope to see the sidewalks and streets soon in good order. Why can't we gravel all the main sidewalks, especially those leading from the depot and town to the school grounds. If every one would lend a helping hand the work would be very light. It will benefit you as much as any one else.

H. C. & W. B. Reynolds have just received their fall line of the old reliable Bay State shoes. They can easily fit you and your pocketbook.

Miss Ethel McMath accompanied Miss Lennie Curry home Friday and remained until Monday.

It would be a pity if all of that New Orleans sugar house, 35 cents syrup, at Reynolds' should happen to be sold before you got any. Call early and get your share.

Representative A. P. Longshore, of Columbiana, spent Sunday night and Monday morning in our city.

Mr. and Mrs. Val McClendon, with their daughter, Miss Bessie, were in town on the 12th.

"Post office" West was in town last week. P. O. has headquarters in West Calera now.

Mr. Joe Peters, of Columbiana, spent one day in Montevallo last week.

Mr. Abernathy is assisting the Rev. Dr. Davis in a revival at Dadeville this week.

You can find at Reynold's bowls, pie plates, bakers and nappies of very pretty and the most durable ware.

Mr. Fred E. Davis is in Centreville this week on important business.

Mr. T. J. Williams came up from Selma Saturday and spent Sunday with home folks.

Miss Minnie Helvenston, much to the sorrow of some of our young men, left last Wednesday, after a short visit to Miss Hattie Lyman. Miss Helvenston will be the guest of Miss Lena North, for a few weeks in Birmingham.

Mr. W. B. McMath returned Saturday, from his vacation tour. Burr is looking much better.

Mr. Clay Fancher spent Sunday at home.

Mr. Clay Fancher intends to improve his house, which he has recently bought, by the addition of several rooms.

They say it's a sure thing that we'll have a wedding in September. May be somebody has found the nerve to question the pop(a).

Mr. Carno Bell, of Montgomery, is visiting relatives here. Carno brought his wheel along, and, of course, is more popular than ever.

Messrs. H. C. Reynolds, P. L. Abernathy, E. S. Lyman and W. B. Reynolds, representing Montevallo, went to Montgomery Thursday and were present at a meeting of the board of trustees of the Girl's Industrial school. Miss Tutwiler, the president-elect of the school, was present and went before the board and immediately began to agitate the removal of the school to Mount Vernon. She contended the school should not open at Montevallo. In this she was warmly seconded by Messrs. Moody, Block and Dortch. This question was argued pro and con all the morning and it looked at one time as if Montevallo would lose the school after all. Mr. Plowman introduced a resolution that the school should open the second Monday in October. This was, of course, opposed by the gentlemen above named, and as five members of the board were absent it was clearly seen the vote would be close. About 5 o'clock in the evening a vote was taken and it stood 4 to 3 in favor of opening the school. The yeas and nays being called for the governor voted in favor of Montevallo, and so did Judge Purifoy, who came in during the evening session. This ends the matter, we hope, for good and all. Dr. Riley was tendered the presidency, but having a contract with the Georgia University he telegraphed that he could not accept. This question was then left open until the 10th of September, when a president will be elected.

Work will begin on repairing the old building at once and bids for the new building are to be opened on the 2nd of September.

DOGWOOD ITEMS.

We are pleased to say that the meeting at the Baptist church was a grand success, as several conversions were made.

Rev. F. H. Farrington, of Brierfield, assisted Bro. Martin in the good work done here during the meeting.

Misses Mamie and Tinie Woods, two of Jemison's most accomplished and beautiful young ladies, spent several days with relatives and friends in town.

Miss Emma Campbell, one of Ashby's most affable young ladies, is spending a few days with us—only a few days and she leaves for Ashby, much to our regret.

Mr. H. C. Allen, a former citizen of Dogwood, but now of Birmingham, spent several days in town last week. Clay is a jolly fellow, and we are always pleased to have him with us.

Miss Mattie Roebuck, one of Birmingham's most affable young ladies, is spending the week with relatives and friends at this place. We wish for her a pleasant stay while with us.

Miss Nona Wells, who has just returned after a protracted visit at Birmingham, expressed herself as having had a most exquisite time.

Mr. Pat Harrison went over to Blocton Saturday with the Aldrich boys to cross bats with Campbell town base ball team of Blocton. The game resulted in a score of 13 to 12 in favor of Campbell town.

We were pleased to learn that James Davis, who pitched the games of ball for Aldrich at Blocton last Saturday, held the Campbell town boys to a score of 13 to 12 in favor of Campbell town.

Two Hundred Persons Drowned.

A dispatch from Bombay to a news agency says that terrible floods have occurred through the overflowing of the river Kistna. The damage to property is immense, and thousands of persons have been rendered homeless, their houses having been swept away. Two hundred persons were drowned by the sinking of a boat near Tatara. The overflowing water from the river has washed out a breach seven miles long in the Nizam of Hyderabads railway.

COMMERCIAL-INDUSTRIAL,

Dun & Co.'s Report of Conditions and Known Results.

EFFECT OF THE TEMPERATURE.

Failings Fifty Per Cent More Than Same Week Last Year—Labor Difficulties Extending—Unfavorable Crop Report—Reduction in the Output of Iron.

Failures for the week have been 298 in the United States, against 196 last year, and thirty-six in Canada, against thirty-eight last year. An extraordinary spell of deadly hot weather has affected trade throughout the country and in the east speculative feeling was somewhat affected until Thursday by apprehension of the possible influence of the Bryan meeting. With cooler weather there came also on Thursday the perception that the meeting would not affect business unfavorably.

But other conditions were not stimulating. According to government reports the crops have sustained serious injuries. Labor difficulties extend and the closing of the establishments for want of work and the refusal of commercial loans by banks checked operations in many branches of industry and trade.

Iron production was reduced 20,764 tons weekly in July and has been further reduced since August 1, while unsold stocks increased 26,192 tons in July. The stoppage of a large share of the Connellsville Coke works and of many lake iron mines is a fair indication that the two combinations do not believe anything could be gained by reducing the prices of materials and the main difficulty is obviously the extreme narrowness of demand for finished products, which is so small that most transactions are at some concessions even from the current low prices. With Alabama No. 2 offered at $6.50 at Birmingham, equivalent to $10.25 here, against $11.50 for northern No. 2, the market is not large enough to support prices of either.

The boot and shoe industry is approaching the end of orders at hand and gradual advances in the price asked tend to the restriction of new orders. Leather is scarcely changed in price. The woolen manufacturer makes little change, with not more than a third of the machinery now running, and the demand for goods does not improve, although prices of some important grades have been further reduced. Nor has improvement appeared in cotton goods, although the curtailment of production for some weeks has been great.

It is a step toward recovery, not quite pleasant, but sure, that merchandise imports since July 1 are 18 per cent less, while exports are 16 per cent more than last year. It means depression of trade, but also decrease of foreign indebtedness.

BIG BANK ROBBERY.

Three Masked Men Enter, Take the Cash and Ride Away.

Word was received at Pocatello, Ida., August 13, from Montpelier, Ida., that about 3 o'clock p. m. three masked men rode into town on horseback, stopping in front of the bank of Montpelier. They dismounted and compelled six men who were standing in front of the bank to go inside. Two of them covered the men with revolvers, while the third went behind the counter and emptied all the cash in sight into their sacks. The robbers then mounted horses and rode out of town. Sheriff Davis organized a posse of thirty men, who went in pursuit of the robbers, thirty minutes behind.

It is believed they were heading for Jackson's Hole, and if they reach that place their capture will be uncertain, as the Hole is thought to be filled with a gang of desperadoes and renegades who will resist their capture.

The bank officials refuse to disclose the amount secured, but it is believed to be fully $10,000.

An Actor Killed.

GOOD NEWS.

Successful Treatment of Consumption by a Birmingham (Ala.) Physician.

Birmingham, Ala., Aug. 18.—(Special.)—Dr. R. M. Russell, of the Medico-Surgical Institute, of this city, has demonstrated, beyond a doubt, that the dread disease of consumption can be cured by the use of his Electro-Medical Apparatus, in connection with the X-Rays. This Electro-Medical Apparatus manufactures the same kind of electricity that makes the X-Ray, and this is used to conduct medicines into diseased tissues of the body. It was originated by Dr. Russell and has been in use in his Institution for about five years

By the aid of the X-Ray machine, equipped with one of the improved tubes of Dr. Russell's own invention, together with the Fluoroscope, he is enabled to locate, exactly, any defective organ of the body and then by the application of proper remedies, by means of Electro-Medication, he is enabled to successfully deal with the worst cases of consumption, having recently effected remarkable cures on more than twenty different persons. By the same means the doctor successfully treats all ovarian as well as pulmonary troubles. In the treatment of ovarian troubles and all chronic diseases of women, the doctor has been quite successful. He spent a large portion of last year in Europe, introducing his method of treatment in the hospitals at the great centers. Dr. Russell has persistently refused to let the announcement of his discovery go out to the public until now, for the reason that he wished to thoroughly demonstrate the fact that consumption could be cured. He is an untiring student and worker, and ranks high among the eminent scientists of the world.

STATE NORMAL COLLEGE,

Florence, Ala.—Its Low Rates—Its Excellent Training—The Demand for Its Graduates.

One hundred dollars will defray a year's expense, including board. Of this, not more than $15 will be required in any one month.

Its teachers are specialists. No institution in Alabama has a stronger faculty. The academic work of the several departments is of the highest order. In addition, careful attention is paid throughout to the Theory and Practice of teaching. Before graduating every student has a year's experience in teaching, under careful critics.

As a natural consequence, its graduates are in strong demand. There is no surer way to a good position in Alabama than to satisfactorily take the course. Furthermore, President Powers keeps track of all graduates and in many ways assists them to position and advancement.

Graduates of high schools and colleges and teachers of experience may take the professional course and graduate in one year.

These points should commend themselves to parents and young teachers. President James K. Powers will be glad to send catalogue and give further information on request.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address

ITEMS OF TIMELY INTEREST TO THE FARMERS.

How to Remove Rank Flavor---Sunflower Culture---Watering Horses at Work---A Word About Turkeys.

OILING HARNESS.

Mix one gallon of neat's foot oil, four pounds of the best newly rendered tallow, and two pounds of vaseline. Melt and stir in, while hot, one ounce of lamp black. Take the harness apart and wash thoroughly in warm water and Castile soap. Before the leather is thoroughly dry soak with the above mixture of oil, and the harness will be soft and pliable. This is also excellent for boots. It is suitable for the finest buggy harness.—New England Homestead.

WATERING HORSES AT WORK.

It used to be the rule to keep horses from drinking at noon or night after they had been working through the forenoon or afternoon, until they had eaten their feed, and had cooled down. This was considered necessary in order to prevent injury from taking cold water while the system is heated. But this is cruel to the horses, as they cannot eat what they should if they are parched with thirst. The better way is to give each horse in the middle of the forenoon a pail of water, into which a small quantity of oatmeal has been stirred. This will refresh and invigorate the horse without doing any injury, and will prevent him from being injured by drinking freely at noontime. The drink being nourishing, rallies the strength that enables the animal to do a greater amount of work without failure.

STORING APPLES IN BOXES.

Square boxes, with open tops, and separated by cleats nailed across the corners, so as to allow air to circulate over them, are better than barrels to store apples in. We saw some recently in the fruit cellar of Dr. Fisher, of Fitchburg. The apples are put in these boxes in the orchard, loaded into wagons, and are then drawn to the cellar, where they are piled, one above the other, nearly to the ceiling. The boxes are made to hold a full bushel each, and can be easily handled without disturbing the fruit. There is great injury to fruit, even from the most careful handling. When the bloom is off, it can never be exactly what it was before. The square boxes take less room that the same quantity of apples would in barrels, and are much better than if put in bins, where the natural heating of the apples piled one upon the other induces rot, which once started quickly spreads. The boxes are made of solid boards, and are, therefore, heavier, as well as more costly than the boxes used in harvest-

TURKEYS.

There are not nearly as many turkeys grown as there should be. There is never a year that turkeys are not more profitable than hogs, for they always bring a good price in the markets, and the supply is rarely equal to the demand.

The bronze turkey is the favorite with most breeders, as it grows to a large size, and is about the hardiest of all the varieties. The only rival it has that amounts to much in the West is the white variety, which is growing in favor because of its beautiful appearance when dressed, and the fine quality of the meat. It does not grow as large as the bronze turkey, at the same age, but is preferred by many consumers, and they are often willing to pay something extra to get one.

Young turkeys (poults is the proper name) are somewhat tender at first, and must be carefully looked after for the first few weeks of their lives, and early morning dews.

They should be fed for the first few days on bread, dampened (not soaked) in sweet milk. With this may be given cottage cheese, made in the same manner as for the table, but with less salt and more pepper in it. After they get started and begin to show the red corrugations about the neck ("shooting the red" this is called), they may be allowed perfect freedom, and they will roam widely, searching for insects, which is their favorite food.—Farm and Fireside.

BRAIN AND MUSCLE.

The man who uses both brains and muscle will far outstrip in the race of life the man who uses only his muscles. This is true in every calling in which men engage, but especially is it true in farming. The farmers who are getting along the easiest, other things equal, are those who mix brains with their work; who plan and systematize their work; do everything in its season, and in the most thorough manner possible. The farmer who, for instance, does not decide what crops he will plant till planting time comes, or the one who breaks his ground regardless of the condition of the soil, plants untested or doubtful seed in poorly prepared soil, cannot be said to have mixed enough brains with his work.

There is no doubt that many farmers would have better profits if they would rest, recreate, and read more and work fewer hours. There is such a thing as doing too much manual labor. The farmers, as a class, certainly cannot be accused of being lazy. The majority of them work too hard, at least during some seasons of the year. It is more than likely that many do not distribute their work well, and are, as a consequence, too busy at some seasons and have too much leisure at others. Here, again, is where the brains come in. The work should be planned with a view to doing it most economically. This can be done by a judicious distribution of work which will keep hands and teams reasonably busy during all seasons of the year, instead of hiring help and rushing at some seasons, and then taking it easy for a considerable spell.

The co-operation of brain and muscle on the farm, however, means more than merely to improve methods of farming; it means co-operation with brother farmers, and organizations for marketing to the best advantage and for purchasing in a way to be independent.—St. Louis Journal of Agriculture.

SUNFLOWER CULTURE.

The cultivation of sunflowers is being advocated as an agricultural industry. In support of this departure in Western farm crop enterprises it is asserted that the better varieties of sunflowers yield a gallon of oil to the bushel of seed, and that an average crop will produce from 40 to 50 bushels of seed per acre. The oil is high-priced, and sells on an equality with the oil of olives.

The wholesale price of olive oil is about $1 per gallon, thus indicating a profit in the sunflower crop which would at once admit it into the list of profitable crops for diversified farm industry.

The Russian sunflower is one of the largest in stalk and seed head, and has been recognized as a great producer of seed with excellent oily properties. A new variety, entirely white, is now a rival of the Russian, and is said to produce a much milder and better flavored oil, owing to its deficiency in coloring matter in the outer covering of the seeds.

The sunflower seed is a recognized valuable food for stock and poultry, and when properly understood will be in more common use on the farm for this purpose. The wild sunflower of the Western prairie country has created a prejudice against the name "sunflower," but, notwithstanding its persistency in maintaining its place as a weed on the cultivated farms, it is no means an objectionable indication to the quality and agricultural value of the lands it occupies.—akota Field and Farm.

HOW TO REMOVE RANK FLAVOR.

In reply to the question, "How can I remove rank grass taste from milk and butter," the Dairy Editor of the Prairie Farmer gives the following bit of experience, which may be helpful to some of our readers who have pastures that are full of weeds. He says: "I am spending a few weeks in Iowa, and studying, as usual, dairy problems. Here in Woodbury County is located Goodrich Brothers (one of whom is Professor De Witt Goodrich, who are in the creamery business. They have spent a great deal of time in investigating and trying to get rid of the disagreeable flavor caused by the cows eating weeds. The milk from many of the patrons whose cows were pastured on the bottom lands had such a disagreeable flavor that the butter could hardly be eaten. Last year they tried pasteurizing the milk, but this did not entirely remove the trouble. They have continued their experiments this season, and have, as they think, succeeded in discovering a method of entirely removing these objectionable flavors from the butter.

The milk, as it is received at the factory, is carefully examined, and any that is weedy or strong flavored is set aside and run through the separator by itself. After separation they add to the cream two gallons of water to one of cream, and in this water has been dissolved saltpetre in the proportion of a teaspoonful to three gallons. The water is hot, and in this way they raise the temperature of the cream to 160 degrees. They immediately run the diluted cream through the separator, same as if it was whole milk. They now have a cream without the least particle of weedy flavor in it. The cream is then cooled, turned in with the rest, and all ripened together. The result was a perfect butter, without any disagreeable flavor."

Commenting on the above, the editor of the Elgin Dairy Report says: "Here is an opportunity that will enable our practical creamery men to make the same experiments for themselves when they find they have this same trouble, which occurs more or less every year when cattle feed on rank grass and weeds. We give this for the benefit of our readers of that class, and will say that it certainly will do no harm to try it, even if it accomplishes no good.

"One of our creamerymen in southern Illinois had the same trouble, and asked our advice on this matter. The plan we proposed was for him to heat the milk to 160 or 180 degrees before running it through the separator, and diluting it with about one-quarter water at the same time. He did this and found the result was good. Very little, if any, of the bad flavor remained. The cream was cooled immediately, and ripened by means of a starter."

"The principle practically is the same as the one used by the Goodrich Brothers. If any creamerymen are troubled that way, we would advise them to undertake one or the other of the plans and see if it will work well with them.—Farm, Field and Fireside.

Electricity is said to have been successfully employed in a case of persistent hiccoughing. Such cases are usually fatal, under ordinary treatment, and if the electric current can be relied on to stop the paroxysms, as it is reported to have been done in a recent case in Elizabeth, N. J., it will be still another great triumph for therapeutical electricity.

A Masonic Sign.

A man is known by his motions—if the looker-on has the discerning eye of a fellow-craftsman. Such is the point of a street scene reported by a St. Louis newspaper. A stranger in Boston stood in front of a Columbus avenue apartment house in process of construction, apparently interested in what he saw, and picked up a brick, which he turned over in his hand one or twice.

"I will give you a job if you want it," said the foreman, who had observed the stranger.

"What kind of a job?" asked the other, as he shook the brick dust from his gloves.

"Laying brick, of course," was the answer. "I know from the way you picked up that brick that you are a brick mason, and we are short-handed, with the cold weather on us."

"Thank you," answered the stranger. "Once I would have jumped at your offer. Thirty-five years ago I wandered these streets looking for such a job, and couldn't find it, though I needed it as much as any poor fellow in the city. I took Greeley's advice and went West, where I have laid tens of thousands of bricks and employed men to lay millions for me. I don't need the work, but I am pleased that you recognied in me a member of the craft."

The stranger was one of the largest contractors in St. Louis.

The necessity, or the apparent necessity, of making a living may easily induce a strange habit of thought. If we find it difficult to get bread, we naturally look askance at whatever stands in our way. Edward Hoare tells in his "Autobiography," of going down to Ramsgate, where he became greatly interested in the English boatmen, two hundred of whom were entirely dependent on the chance of helping ships in distress off the Goodwin Sands. So poor were they, that it had become with some of them a habit of life to think more of their earnings than of the human beings they saved.

One bitterly cold morning, Mr. Hoare met an old boatman of his acquaintance, and said to him, after passing the greetings of the day:

"And how are you getting on?"

"Ah," said the man, "now that they've got their lights and buoys and chain cables, there's nothing left for an honest man to do."

"What do you mean?"

"Well, here's a case. There we were at the south end of the sands about three o'clock this morning, when up came one of those foreign chaps, and was running as pretty upon the Goodwin Sands as ever you'd wish to see, when, all of a sudden, he saw one of these here nasty staring buoys. Port helm and off!"

No one would guess from his tone of disgust that he had spent the best efforts of his life in trying to save from disaster the vessels for which he seemed to court it.

Our I's and Other Eyes.

Our I's are just as strong as they were fifty years ago, when we have cause to use them. But we have less and less cause to praise ourselves, since others do the praising, and we are more than willing for you to see us through other eyes. This is how we look to S. F. Boyce, wholesale and retail druggist, Duluth, Minn., who after a quarter of a century of observation writes:

"I have sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla for more than 25 years, both at wholesale and retail, and have never heard anything but words of praise from my customers; not a single complaint has ever reached me. I believe Ayer's Sarsaparilla to be the best blood purifier that has been introduced to the general public." This, from a man who has sold thousands of dozens of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, is strong testimony. But it only echoes popular sentiment the world over, which has "Nothing but words of praise for Ayer's Sarsaparilla."

THE HILLS OF HOME.

Sweet come the bells at evening, and clear the sparrow's cry,
And like two white swans floating, the stearners wander by;
But sweeter far the ringing of bells where cattle roam,
And dear the cry where kildees fly among the hills of home.

I long to leave the noises that make the ears so tired;
I long to give up striving for power long desired.
For peace comes in the ringing of bells where dun doves roam,
And in the cry where kildees fly among the hills of home.

—WILL T. HALE.

A DEBT OF HONOR.

"Who is the young fellow with the yellow hair, Duff?" whispered Captain Loraine, as he and his friend stood on the outer edge of the small circle gathererd round a couple of ecarte players at the Nebulus Club.

"Archie Lidyard——"

"Never heard of him; he's got the card fever pretty strongly, eh?" he added, as they moved away to the other end of the room.

"Young fool!" ejaculated Duff, as he flung himself into a seat, "he's just going the pace as fast as he can. I've known him since he was so high, all legs and Eton collar! His mother is a charming woman, but a great deal too weak to deal with a fellow like that."

"Ah!" remarked Loraine, without any great interest, "and who's the man he's playing with?"

"A friend of Val Travers; a colonial, I fancy. Mr. James Ruthven by name. Why will youngsters like Lidyard always choose such opponents?"

"You don't think——"

"Oh, no!" interposed Duff, hastily. "Everything is all square, I've no doubt, only Archie Lidyard's about as fit to hold a card against a cool-headed, experienced man, as I am to discuss the Apocalypse with the Archbishop of Canterbury. I say, waiter, can't that window be made to shut behind there?" he remarked, testily, to a servant.

"Yes, sir. I'll see, sir," replied the waiter quickly, as he jumped onto the window sill behind the couch on which the two friends sat, and began to tussle with the window.

"Is this young friend of yours rich?" asked Loraine, noticing that his companion was still watching the party at the card table.

"Archie Lidyard? I'm not sure that I should call him a friend of mine. I like his mother, but I've small patience with the young jackanapes. Rich? No, not at present, at any rate; the father was a big ironmaster who made a colossal fortune, and, unluckily for young hopeful over there, died half a dozen years ago; the man was tolerably clear-sighted, though, and left the bulk of his money to his wife, stipulating that Archie's minority should not terminate till he reached his 25th year, and that, until that time, his allowance should not exceed a certain figure. He has to get through a couple of years before he attains his majority, and, in consequence, poor Mrs. Lidyard lives in a chronic state of pulling her son out of the mire, paying his debts, and sending him on his way to sin no more! It's terribly hard on the poor woman. He's an only child, and, of course, there's nothing she wouldn't do for him."

"Very sad. But I say, Duff," broke off Capt. Loraine, "it does seem to me that the Nebulus Club is about the coldest place in London."

As he spoke a window went up with a sharp bang, and the waiter leapt down from behind them.

"You won't feel anything more of the draught now, I think, sir," he said, addressing Duff.

"Oh, is it shut now? You were a precious long time about it."

Some one near the card table called to the waiter, and he hurried there; at the same moment Archie Lidyard rose.

"No, I won't take my revenge tonight," he said, with an attempt at a laugh; "what's the amount of my debt, Mr. Ruthven?"

"Let me see, £500—yes, £555. But there's no hurry if you haven't your check book with you. You can send it round to my hotel any time to-morrow. I don't leave for Paris till the night mail."

"Thank you," said young Lidyard. "I'd sworn off cards or I should have had it with me. You are putting up at the Savoy, I think?"

"Yes, No. 49," replied Ruthven. "You may as well come and lunch with me?"

"I will if I possibly can," said young Lidyard; "but if not, I'll send a check round. Stay, though," he exclaimed, suddenly, "I can discharge a portion of my debt at once." The flush deepened on his cheeks as he fumbled in his pocket book and drew out a check; he glanced at it, and his hand shook a little as he held it toward Ruthven. "This is for £300," he explained; "you shall have the rest to-morrow."

Ruthven in his turn glanced at the check.

"To Eva Lidyard!" he read, half aloud, in a tone of some surprise.

"My mother," replied young Lidyard, a little sharply. "I think you will find the indorsement all right. I will give you an I O U for the balance."

He was about to call for the waiter, when the man, who had been standing at his side throughout the transaction, handed him the writing materials.

Archie Lidyard wrote the acknowledgment, spoke a few words to those around him, and then left the room; it was evident, in spite of the young man's calmness and unconcern, that the loss was a serious one and the evening's work no laughing matter.

But James Ruthven was naturally in a more cheerful mood. He was not a poor man, but he was far enough from being a millionaire to feel no slight satisfaction at the respectable sum of his winnings. Five hundred and fifty pounds was a total worthy of consideration, and it must be confessed that he looked at the slip of paper bearing the pretty signature of "Eva Lidyard" on the back with a certain amount of complacency before retiring to rest.

He was aroused next morning by a loud knocking at his door.

"Eh? Come in—what's the matter; what do you want?" he inquired, starting up.

"A lady to see you, sir."

"What?"

Ruthven admitted the servant, glancing at his watch as he passed; it was just 9:30; who could wish to see him so soon.

"A lady to see me, did you say?"

"Yes, sir."

"What sort of a lady?" inquired Ruthven, dubiously.

"I can't rightly say, sir; she's got a thick veil on, and she's all in black."

"Did she give you no card?"

"No, sir."

"Most extraordinary; go down and ask her if she can tell you her business."

In a few minutes he returned.

"It's a Mrs. Lidyard, sir, and she says her business is very private."

"Mrs. Lidyard!" Like a flash the pretty signature at the back of the check came back to him. "Ask her into the sitting room," he said, quickly. "Say I will be with her directly."

He dressed hurriedly; what could she want with him?

"You wish to see me, madam?" he asked as five minutes later he closed the door of his private sitting room behind him.

A tall, black-robed figure advanced to him.

"You are very good to come to me," she said, in a broken voice.

Ruthven glanced at her quickly; she looked particularly graceful and elegant in her sable draperies, and the voice was soft and pleasant, in spite of the evident distress and nervousness of the speaker.

"Pray sit down," said Ruthven, drawing a chair; but Mrs. Lidyard sank down in one nearer her, her back to the light.

"Will you tell me what I can do for you?" asked Ruthven, gently.

The small, black-gloved hands twisted a handkerchief desperately. Mrs. Lidyard made one or two ineffectual attempts to speak, and at last said:

"You won a large sum last night from my son at cards, Mr. Ruthven?"

"A considerable sum—yes."

"And he—he gave you a check for it?"

"For part of it, certainly."

Mrs. Lidyard uttered a groan. Ruthven's astonishment grew. What did it all mean? With what was evidently a great effort his visitor continued:

"A check drawn in my favor; purporting to be indorsed by me?"

"Yes."

"I—he—oh!" she broke down sobbing, "the wretched, wretched boy!"

The veil she wore was thick, but not so thick as to disguise her, and Ruthven could see that Mrs. Lidyard was still possessed of very great charms, and the glimpse he caught of her snowy hair only made the rest of her face appear more youthful. Grief, under such circumstances, cannot fail to be touching.

"Pray calm yourself, Mrs. Lidyard," he said, soothingly. "You have not yet told me how I can serve you."

Mrs. Lidyard suppressed her agitation and continued:

"I must tell you eveything; I can do nothing but throw myself upon your mercy. Yesterday, on going through my acounts, I missed a check that had been sent me only the day before. I searched everywhere for it, and not finding it, I finally telegraphed to the bankers stopping payment. I did not at first suspect that—" she hesitated. "I am very unfortunately placed. My son has extravagant tastes, and an income quite insufficient to indulge them." She looked at Ruthven piteously.

"I think I understand," he said, gravely.

"I waited for my son, spoke to him of what I dreaded, implored him to tell me all! And—oh, Mr. Ruthven, have pity on me, and give me back that wretched check."

Ruthven rose immediately, and a second later returned.

"You can count on my discretion," he said, pityingly, as he placed the check in her hand.

"Oh! how can I thank you—how can I ever thank you?" she exclaimed, almost hysterically. Then, seeing a small writing table, she sat down hurriedly.

"May I write you a check here—?"

He smiled, and she drew a check book from the bag she carried.

"Mr. Ruthven, is it not?"

She began to write, and then turned to him quickly.

"But £300 is not the whole amount. "Will you tell it to me?"

Ruthven replied shortly. "Five hundred and fifty-five pounds." It was one thing winning money at the Nebulus from Archie Lidyard, a bit of a coxcomb and a great deal of a fool, quite another thing taking it here in the cold morning light from his mother, still quivering from the anguish she had undergone.

"Here it is," she said, rising. "You see the indorsement was not even a clever forgery," she added, with a little sob.

Ruthven glanced at it; there was a certain similarity in the signatures, no doubt, but the one he had seen last night was firmer, with a touch of masculinity, wanting in this.

No, as she said, it was not even a clever forgery.

"I don't think you know what you have done for me, Mr. Ruthven," she said, offering him her hand. "No, please,"—she continued, as he made a movement to accompany her—"I would rather go alone; thank you again, and God bless you!"

James Ruthven was not a sentimental man, but he was rather pleased with Mrs. Lidyard's parting words, though it was perfectly clear to him that he had done little to deserve them, for, after all, it was a clear gain to him to exchange a worthless bit of paper for a check for £555.

His complacency remained undisturbed for at least two hours. He breakfasted well, and read his paper with absolute serenity. Then he took a cab to the St. James's Square branch of the Westminster Bank.

The cashier took the slip of paper, and after looking at the signature, honored Ruthven with a keen glance before disappearing.

"Will you step this way?"

Ruthven looked up astonished, but obeyed, conscious that the clerks were watching him curiously as he was ushered into the manager's sanctum.

"I shall be glad if you will explain how this check came into your possession," said the manager, as Ruthven came into the room, while the cashier stood with his hand on the door.

"I really don't understand——" began Ruthven.

"No one," replied the manager, "of the name of Eva Lidyard has an account with this bank?"

"No account!" exclaimed Ruthven. "No account! Why, she wrote this check for me not two hours ago."

There was a smile about the manager's eyes as he renewed his request for an explanation of the circumstances by which the check had come into Ruthven's possession, and as he unfolded the story of the white-haired, tearful mother imploring mercy for her wretched son, it deepened there.

"I think it's a matter for the police, Simpkins," he said to the cashier, and turning to Ruthven he remarked, "I expect the check you parted with has been cashed by now. Do you remember the name and the bank upon which it was drawn?"

Ruthven's memory was not at fault, and driving thither he found that the manager had guessed correctly. The check he had parted with had been presented a couple of hours previously and paid.

Thus it happened that an hour later Ruthven was returning to the Savoy, though in a very different frame of mind from that in which he left it. In fact, he was in a very black humor indeed as he entered his sitting room, where, to complete his perplexity, Archie Lidyard was seated, with his heels on the mantel and a serene smile on his lips.

"Halloo," said Lidyard, "I've accepted your lunch, but if I'd known I should have had to wait so long for it I would have gone elsewhere."

Ruthven was too much excited to take any notice of the remark. He strode up to the young man and looked at him savagely.

"Where's your mother?" he demanded.

It was Lidyard's turn to look astonished. "Where's—my—mother. Why?" It suddenly occurred to him that his host had gone mad, and he grasped a chair as the only weapon of defence handy.

Ruthven's saw the look of fear in Lidyard's face. "I beg your pardon, Lidyard, a most extraordinary thing has happened. Your mother called on me this morning—"

"My mother is in Wales," said Lidyard, quietly.

"Then I've been swindled as neatly as ever man was," declared Ruthven. "There's only one thing to do."

"Lunch," remarked Lidyard, sententiously.

When lunch was finished Ruthven had recovered some portion of his serenity. "Nevertheless," he said, as he leaned back in his chair, "I think we'll try Scotland Yard."

And while Scotland Yard busied itself discussing the problem thus presented, a couple of passengers to Nice were comfortably seated in a reserved carriage of the night express.

"Not a bad morning's work, eh?" remarked one of them to his pretty golden-haired companion.

The girl laughed.

"If you don't break the bank at Monte Carlo, Bob, I think I shall go on the stage and play old ladies; that white wig was awfully becoming."

"You managed it beautifully, Nell. There's no knowing what we mayn't be able to do, with my wits and your looks; but any way, this is better than shutting windows for crusty gents at the Nebulus, isn't it?" he added, slipping his arm around her waist.—London Truth.

RACE OF MISSING LINKS'

Interesting Information About Some Curious Bushmen in South Africa.

Olive Schreiner, the clever authoress of "The Story of a South African Farm," gives some curious information in a magazine article about the strange little bushmen of South Africa, now nearly extinct.

Akin in race and speech to the dwarf races found in Central Africa, they are lighter in color. So small in size are they that an adult Bushman is not larger than an ordinary European child if eleven. They have tiny, weazened faces, the wool on their heads growing in little balls, with naked spaces between. They seem to resemble, we are further told, not so much a race of children as a race caught in the very act of evolving into human form—the missing link, in fact.

These small people had, it seems, no fixed social organization. Wandering about in hordes or as solitary individuals, without any settled habitation, they slept at night under the rocks or in wild dog holes, or they made themselves a curious little wall of loose bushes, raised up on the side from which the wind blew, and strangely like an animal's lair, and this they left again when morning broke. Their language is said to be so imperfect that the clear expression of even the very simplest ideas is difficult. They have no word for wife, for marriage, for nation. No member of the race has, in any known instance, been taught to read or write, or to grasp religious conceptions clearly, though great efforts have been made to instruct them.

Although in no known instance has a member of this people been truly civilized, yet they have "a curiously strong sense of gratitude, and are not incapable of a powerful affection of a dog-like kind," as an incident which came under Miss Schreiner's own observation shows. She says:

"Some years ago we came in contact with a Bushboy who had been procured from his mother for a bottle of brandy, and who was carefully tended in the hope of civilizing and rearing him. He, however, contracted consumption. On the day of the death of his mistress, seeing what his state was, bade him lie down in the little box which was the only bed he could be induced to use. Half an hour after we discovered him in the yard cleaning the knives, with the struggle of death already in his face and the rattle in his throat. Asked why he had come, he shook his head, and said he could not allow his mistress to have her dinner with an unpolished knife. We took him back to his box and gave him a sugar stick. He curled himself up, gave a look of unutterable gratitude and affection to his mistress, gave one suck at his sugar stick, and died—like a small, wild animal—but one capable of profound gratitude and affection."

These people, Miss Schreiner adds, have now almost disappeared; a few hordes in the northwest and solitary individuals hanging about the pale of civilization are all that is left of them.

Elba's Iron Mines.

The Iron mines of the Island of Elba appear to have been worked uninterruptedly for at least 3,000 years; local tradition says 4,000. According to this tradition the people of Syracuse were the first to work the mines. Later, as we know, the ancient Etruscans used them, and after that the Romans. They still appear inexhaustible to us, as they did to Virgil (Aeneid X., 173). Up to 1754 the amount of ore excavated annually is estimated at 4,000 tons. From that date until 1851 it is said to have been about 14,000 tons; from 1851 to 1881 about 120,000 tons, In 1881 400,000 tons were taken out. The government, fearing that at this rate the ore would soon be exhausted, fixed the annual maximum at 180,000 tons, at which it still remains. The ore is of the highest quality, but the methods of extraction used are still very primitive.

Hawaiian Huckleberries.

Near the Volcanic House on the island of Hawaii are great thickets of the ohelo, or Hawaiian huckleberry, says the Popular Science Monthly, which the natives consider sacred to Pele, the goddess who is supposed to preside over the famous crater of Ki'auea, and which, together with white pigs and chickens, are thrown by them into the boiling red lake during an eruption to appease the wrath of the aggressive dame and thus cause the rivers of lava to cease flowing on their destructive course.

These berries grow in clusters on low bushes right on the very brink of the brimstone beds, and are so numerous that a bushel may be easily gathered in half an hour. In appearance they somewhat resemble a cranberry, and the flavor is pleasantly suggestive of grapes.

KILLING THE BUFFALO.

UNPRECEDENTED SLAUGHTER OF THIS AMERICAN ANIMAL.

Upward of 6,000,000 in an Incredibly Short Space of Time. Not Over 1,000 Now Running Wild in North America.

William T. Hornaday, the Superintendent of the National Zoological Park, at Washington, a student and hunter of the buffalo in the old days, has interested himself in the question of preventing their extermination, and has done what he could to bring the matter to the attention of Congress. Unfortunately, all attempts at legislation for the protection of this animal have been in vain, and the result is that upward of 6,000,000 were slaughtered in an incredibly short space of time—nearly 4,000,000 killed in three years—until now there are not over 1,000 of these animals running wild in North America. Such a wanton destruction of a valuable beast, purely and distinctively American in its character, is unprecedented in the history of the world.

The familiarity of the Americans with the buffalo seems to have bred contempt, for the great number of these animals has led the people to think of them as animals which were valuable only for what their skins would bring in the market. But owing to the vast destruction of the herds, and the fact that the reduced number has increased the price of the skins and the other products, there has come a revulsion of popular sentiment in regard to them, and they have become very valuable in the eyes of the general public, and, it is needless to say, in the eyes of those surviving among the old hunters who can now get large sums of money for the robes and skeletons.

Of all the quadrupeds that have lived upon the earth, Mr. Hornaday says that probably no other species has ever marshaled such innumerable hosts as those of the American bison. It would have been as easy to count or to estimate the number of leaves in the forest as to calculate the number of buffaloes living at any given time during the history of the species up to 1870. Even in South Central Africa, which has always been so prolific in great herds of game, it is probable that all of its quadrupeds taken together on an equal area would never have more than equaled the total number of buffaloes in this country forty or fifty years ago. To the African hunter such a statement might seem incredible, but Mr. Hornaday says that it is fully warranted by the literature of both branches of the snbject. Mr. John Filson, in 1784, wrote of the Blue Licks in Kentucky: "The amazing herds of buffalo which resort thither by their size and number fill the traveler with astonishment and terror, especially when he beholds the prodigious roads they have made from all quarters, as if leading to some populous city." In 1770, where Nashville now stands, were immense numbers of buffaloes and other wild game. The country was black with them. Daniel Boone found vast herds of buffaloes grazing in the valleys of East Tennessee, between the spurs of the Cumberland Mountains. Between the Rocky Mountains and the States lying along the Mississipppi River and the west from Minnesota to Louisiana, the whole country was one vast buffalo range, inhabited by millions of buffaloes.

A volume could be filled with the records of plainsmen and pioneers who penetrated that vast region in the early part of the century, and who were astounded by the number of buffaloes they observed. Col. Dodge described a herd which he saw on the Arkansas River. According to his recorded observation, the herd extended along the river for a distance of twenty-five miles, which was in reality the width of the vast procession that was moving north and back from the road as far as the eye could reach on both sides. At a low estimate, the ground visible from the road where Col. Dodge was driving, which was covered by the herd, extended for a mile. This would give a strip of country two miles wide and twenty-five long, or a total of fifty square miles covered with buffaloes, averaging, at Col. Dodge's estimate, from fifteen to twenty to the acre. By the lesser number, fifteen, it is found that the number actually seen on that day by Col. Dodge was in the neighborhood of 480,000. If the advancing herd had been at points fifty miles in length, as it was known to have been in some places, by twenty-five miles in width, and still averaging fifteen head to the acre, it would have contained the enormous number of 12,000,000 head, but, judging from the principles which governed their periodical migrations, the moving mass probably advanced in the shape of a wedge, which would leave about 4,000,000 as a fair estimate of the actual number of buffaloes in the great southern herd. It is no wonder, therefore, that the men of the West of those days, both white and red, thought it would be impossible to exterminate such a mighty multitude. The Indians of some tribes believed that the buffaloes issuel from the earth continually, and that the supply was inexhaustible; and yet, in four years that southern herd was almost totally extinct. "With such a lesson before our eyes," said Mr. Hornaday, "confirmed in every detail by living testimony, who will dare to say that there will be an elk, a moose, caribou, mountain goat, mountain sheep, antelope, or black-tail deer left alive in the United States in a wild state fifty years from this date, or even twenty-five?"

If in the earlier days before the buffalo's almost complete extermination, the people had realized the immense money value of the great herd as it existed in 1870, the slaughter could probably have been stopped. At that time, 500,000 head of bulls, young and old, could have been killed every year for a score of years without appreciably diminishing the size of the herd. At Mr. Hornaday's estimate these could easily have been made to yield various products, worth $5 each, as follows: Robe, $2.50; tongue, 25 cents; meat of hind quarters, $2; bones, horns, and hoofs, 25 cents; total, $5. And the amount annually added to the wealth of the United States would have been not less than $500,000 on all the robes taken for the market, say 200,000. The Government could have collected a tax of 50 cents each, which would have yielded a sum doubly sufficient to have maintained a force of mounted police fully competent to enforce the laws regulating the slaughter. The American people, it seems, have not yet learned to spend money for the protection of valuable game, and by the time they have learned it, there will be no game to protect. Even despite the enormous waste of raw material that has been shown in the utilization of the buffalo product, the total cash value of all material derived from this source, if it could only be reckoned up, would certainly amount to many millions of dollars, perhaps $20,000.000 all told.—New York Times.

How the Successful Air Ship Will Be Built.

It is an old story now that the aeronauts of the day have abandoned the search for light materials and buoyant gases in attempts on aerial navigation. The flimsiness and large area of exposure that attend the use of such means place the aeronaut at the mercy of the elements. Their hope now lies in the principle of the oyster shell which boys sail to such gratifying distances with comparatively small muscular effort, and the laws which account for soaring birds like the buzzards. Professor Langley, Mr. Maxim and Herr Lilienthal are one in their reliance on this aeroplane theory. The mechanical peculiarity of the aeroplane's motion is similar to the gliding of a rapid skater over thin ice—the faster he goes the less danger is there of sinking. So Professor Langley has used in the building of this last and most successful machine substances actually a thousand times heavier than the air which promised to support them, and he relies entirely on the extensive area of the planes, shaped something like the wings of a hawk, and their angle to the currents of air, to achieve buoyancy. The oyster-shell analogy affords luminous explanation to every man who remembers the ecstacy of seeing the white disc soar away and up long after the earth should, by all experiences of stone-throwing, have claimed her own. The flatter and thinner the shell within the limits of weight, the more astonishing the flight that resulted, unless, indeed, the edge of the missile were inclined downward instead of slightly upward. In the former case the shell darted instantly to earth, and the throw fell as much short of the average heaving of a pebble as the more scientific skim would have exceeded it.

Wood-Pulp Shoe-Heels.

One of the latest adaptations of the wood pulp industry is the manufacture in Haverhill, Mass., of shoe-heels from that material, white pine and other kinds being used for the purpose. In carrying out this art the plan as described consists in reducing the wood in the usual way in digesters, after which the pulp is put into a tank and mixed with the substances for imparting to heel-stock the necessary requirements, such as alcohol, litharge, tar, degras and fish-glue, a thorough mixing of these with the pulp being followed by soaking the same day or two so that the fibre may be permeated, when another application of materials occurs. The object at this stage is to harden the pulp somewhat, so that it can be rolled into thick sheets and handled, shellac and borax accomplishing this, the pulp then having the consistency of cement. At this point slackened lime is put in, and, as this hardens when dry, the pulp must be rolled into sheets and cut into heels before the hardening takes place. The pulp is now drawn from the tank in sheets, it being just thick enough, there being specially arranged rollers and adjustments at the bottom of the tank for effecting this. A series of pressures through press rollers reduces the sheet to the right thickness, and the sheet is next placed quickly upon the bed of a cutter; the wheels are now started, and in a moment the platen falls, forcing a hundred or more cutters upon the sheet, each shaping out a heel.

EDITORIAL.

It is a matter of deep regret that we notice the fierce attacks made on those prominent in the sound money movement in our state. Bitter things are being said which in after years will be regretted. Among those whose actions are criticised and whose motives are impugned, is that noble and big hearted man, Jeff Falkner. It was our pleasure to wear the gray with this man, and we saw him tried as few men ever were. During those four years of bloody conflict he never faltered or wavered in his trust. Gallant, trusted, and true to his duty, we learned to know and to love him. Since that day has passed away we have known him in times of peace, and while we deplore his action in advocating principles that do not meet the approval of his party who have acted in convention, still we say Jeff Falkner is above suspicion. While others may cast slurs on him as to his railroad connection and claim that to be the power moving him, we raise our voice in his defense and say his loyalty and devotion to his country and his people in days gone by crushes the suspicion. His humanity, charity and good deeds to his fellow man will never be known to the public. He never parades them. No selfish motives ever prompt his actions. The principles he is now advocating he believes to be right and for the best interest of his people. A railroad corporation owning and controlling the political opinion of Jeff Falkner, perish the thought!

Work on the Industrial school building is progressing rapidly and before the 12th of October rolls around everything will be completed and the school ready for pupils. The school furniture is now being ordered and will be of the most improved patterns. The president, pro tem, has a herculean task on his hands, but he is rapidly systemiziug his work and will issue a prospectus of the school this week. Applications have already commenced to come in from pupils from all over the State. The people of Montevallo, realizing the great good to be derived from an auspicious opening of the school, are lending a helping hand and will inconvenience themselves that pupils may be accommodated. We see more and more what this institution means for Montevallo and we are not surprised at the great discomfiture of some of the disappointed aspirants for its location. Montevallo will prove to the world that she is equal to the occasion and our traducers may as well let up. The school is a go and the State will be proud of it.

Dr. Hopkins, of the agricultural experiment station at Morgantown, W. Va., who has given the subject much study, says there is great danger of the early destruction of the Ohio as a navigable highway, and along with it the Potomac, James and Tennessee Rivers. To save these rivers, representing 2000 miles in the aggregate, it is necessary to save the forests in a small part of Pennsylvania and Maryland, and a considerable part of West Virginia and Virginia. From the estimates given by Dr. Hopkins it appears that an area of about 1,000,000 acres should be reserved if we hope to save to posterity these immensely valuable highways of commerce.

Possibly one of the reasons for the low prices of wheat the past few years, suggests the American Cultivator, is that so many substitutes have been found for it as human food. We still use a great deal of wheat, but in cities especially wheaten bread is less the staff of life that it used to be. The use of oat meal has increased, and it daily forms part of the nutritive ration, and very good nutrition it is, too. We use far more fruit than formerly, and also more potatoes. The latter are not so good in nutrition as wheat, and for this reason their increased use is not for our advantage in health and strength. Like all other starchy foods, potatoes are difficult to digest, and should only be eaten in moderation, except by those whose digestion is strong.

Treasury Gold Reserve.

The treasury gold reserve at the close of business Friday stood at $101,110,019. The day's withdrawals at New York were $96,400. The net gold balance included the $500,000 in gold deposited at New York. The treasury is advised that $1,500,000 of gold was engaged today in Europe for export here. This makes the aggregate gold on the way here $11,000,000.

Made Great Speed.

Commodore Dewey telegraphed the secretary of the navy from Boston Saturday morning as follows: "The Brooklyn's speed, corrected for the tide, is 21.91." The official figures thus show that the Brooklyn came within a fraction of winning the $400,000 premium by reaching the twenty-two knots speed. As it is, she secures $350,000 by exceeding her contract 1 3-4 knots.

Minister Terrell's Report.

United States Minister Terrell, at Constantinople, cabled the state department that great bloodshed and rioting had occurred there. Last Wednesday night several hundred Armenians were killed, and at the time of cabling, Thursday morning, he states that all the houses in the city are closed. Dynamite bombs were exploded in the streets by Armenians and about thirty Turkish soldiers killed. The revolutionists were placed on board a steamer and conveyed to a foreign port.

J. Bull Bombards Bargash.

The department of state received the following cablegram Thursday morning from Dorsey Mohun, United States Consul at Zanzibar: "Khalid Bin Bargash, refusing to surrender, the palace was bombarded by the English fleet at 9 o'clock this morning, and totally destroyed. Many were killed. He took refuge at the German consulate. Afterwards Hamond was proclaimed Sultan. All Americans are safe." The bombardment of the palace lasted fifty minutes. The firing was done by the warships Raccoon, Thrush and Sparrow. The followers of Said Khalid were stationed behind barricades and kept up a steady fire upon the British soldiers and marines until their positions were carried.

War Ship Ordered to Constantinople

The president has declined to send a war ship to Constantinople and the little cadet practice ship Bancroft has been selected as the first American national vessel since the ratification of the treaty of Paris to pass the Bosphorus and anchor in the Golden Horn, opposite the gardens of the Seraglio. Existing treaties forbidding vessels of over six guns to enter the Bosphorous, the Bancroft alone was found available for this service. Having been designed solely as a practice cruiser for cadets. The Bancroft can carry only 200 tons of coal, and must therefore make port frequently on a cruise. Her main battery consists of four 4-inch rapid fire rifles and a number of small secondary weapons and two torpedo tubes. She carries ten officers and 120 men. In all respects she is a warship of the highest class in miniature, equal in appearance to the finest vessels in foreign navies. For her size she is probably the most formidable of United States naval vessels.

Uncle Sam Will Foot the Bill.

The report of Governor Foster, of Louisiana, upon the lynching of three Sicilians charged with murder and confined in the parish jail at Hahnville, St. Charles parish, just below New Orleans, in respect to which Baron Fava, the Italian ambassador, in the name of his government, has asked reparation from the United States, has just been received at the state department. The governor makes the customary reply in such cases, that the perpetrators of the deed are unknown to the authorities, who are taking all possible steps in the matter. This communication was communicated to Baron Fava with an expression of regret on the part of the United States government that subjects of the king of Italy should have been dealt with in this lawless manner. This apology will probably be followed by an offer of pecuniary compensation, as in the case of the alleged "Mafia" murderers shot down in the parish prison of New Orleans some years ago and the killing of three Italian miners at Walsenberg, Col., in 1895. But the action will probably have to be awaited as the annual appropriation "to meet unforeseen emergencies in the diplomatic service," out of which Mr. Blaine settled for the Mafia incident, is very nearly exhausted.

A Venezuelan Settlement.

Referring to a Washington dispatch stating that at the state department "an agreement upon Venezuela is expected before December," the London Chronicle says (August 15): "We are able to add from our own knowledge that the settlement will be arrived at by including the so-called 'settled districts' within the sphere of arbitration. This result having been at last reached, nobody will be inclined for a moment to further criticise the process. To Sir William Harcourt the thanks of both countries are due for the devotion and tenacity with which he has pursued this grave matter. He has profoundly studied the question and his feelings upon it were so strong that he was determined that the session should not come to an end without either the basis of a settlement being reached or the utmost publicity being thrown upon the dispute. Lord Salisbury feels the slightest doubt in his own mind of the wisdom of his course, he may be fully assured that every opinion worth having in Great Britain is behind him on the matter, and that when the record of his premiership comes to be finally summed up and weighed the settlement of the Venezuela boundary dispute on the lines of justice, peace and civilization will be regarded as its principal achievement. Being human we are constrained to add that the settlement now reached is absolutely and without any difference whatever upon the lines of complete arbitration ceaselessly urged in these columns since last December."

ILLINOIS NATIONAL DEMOCRATS

Adopt a Platform and Make Nominations for State Officers.

The Illinois state convention of the national democratic party was held in Chicago last Tuesday. A full ticket for state officers was nominated, headed by General John C. Black for governor, and delegates to the national convention to be held at Indianapolis September 2d were appointed.

The platform reported by the committee on resolutions and adopted declares that the democratic party is primarily and solemnly pledged to liberty regulated by law; to equal justice to all men of whatsoever condition or persuasion, religious or political; to economy; to peace and honest friendship with all nations and entangling alliances with none; to the payment of debts in honest money and to the maintenance of the public faith, and is opposed to class legislation and indorses "every act, executive, legislative and judicial, of the present democratic national administration."

The second section declares that the gold dollar is now and for more than sixty years has been the American standard of value fixed by democratic statesmen who were opposed to a debased and fluctuating currency, and it is the measure upon which private and public faith has rested and now rests, and declares unreservedly in favor of maintaining that standard.

Section 3 favors the use of silver as currency and the coinage and circulation of such quantities thereof as can be kept at a parity with gold coin, but opposes "the free and unlimited coinage of silver by the United States government as a measure certain to impair contracts, disturb business, diminish the purchasing power of the wages of labor, inflict irreparable injury upon commerce and industry and fasten an ineffaceable stigma upon the financial honor of the American people."

THE REVOLUTION IN CUBA.

The Insurgents Attack a Convoy of Spanish Troops.

A report has been received of an attack by insurgents upon a convoy of Spanish troops near Vinales. The Spaniards made a stout resistance, holding off the rebels until the arrival of assistance when the attacking forces were repulsed. Further Spanish reinforcements arrived and the insurgents were compelled to abandon the attack and disperse. The Spanish lost six killed and eighteen wounded, including one lieutenant. Four of the rebels were killed and many wounded.

ITALY AND BRAZIL.

Signor Martin Sent to Rio Janeiro on a Special Mission.

At Rome an official note has been issued announcing that owing to the gravity of the situation the government has decided to send Signor Martin, formerly Italian minister to Brazil, on a special mission to Rio Janeiro, on board the Italian warship Piemonte, armed with precise instructions to demand and obtain all measures which the dignity of Italy and the security of her subjects demand. After settling the claims arising from the recent disturbances, which must first be satisfied, he will arrange the former claims, which were recently rejected by the Brazilian congress.

Horrible Death of a Woman.

Mrs. George W. Hibbard, known professionally as Victoria Leroy, fell from her balloon Friday at Clayton Mo., a distance of 2,500 feet. At 5 o'clock p. m. she had ascended about 60 feet when her parachute became detached and fell to the ground. The balloon shot up rapidly. The woman, in an effort to catch the parachute, had partly fallen and was hanging with one arm hooked over the trapeze bar. When the balloon was almost in the clouds a dark speck was seen to drop from it, and the 3,000 spectators groaned in unison. The frantic husband rushed into the tent, and seizing a pistol attempted to shoot himself. He was seized and disarmed. The woman fell one mile north of the fair grounds, first striking a tree. Fragments of the body were left in the tree. The Hibbards are residents of some place in eastern Pennsylvania. Mr. Hibbard is delirious, and may never recover his reason.

CHINA TO AMERICA.

Li Hung Chang Welcomed by President Cleveland.

VICEROY'S FITTING RESPONSE

At the Home of Wm. C. Whitney the Reception Was Held—The Celestial Statesman, Arrayed in a Gorgeous Yellow Jacket, Makes a Good Speech.

Li Hung Chang, viceroy of China, was officially received by President Cleveland at the residence of Mr. William C. Whitney, Fifth avenue and Fifty-seventh street, New York, Saturday. The house for the time being was in the hands of the government and represented the official residence of the executive. Among those present were President Cleveland, Secretary Lamont, Secretary Olney, Secretary Carlisle, Assistant Secretary of State W. W. Rockhill, Gen. James H. Wilson, John Russell Young, Ex-Secretary of State John W. Foster and Mr. William C. Whitney. Li Hung Chang, his sons and secretaries of the highest rank were taken in open carriages from the Waldorf up Fifth avenue to the reception. Secretary of State Olney escorted Li Hung Chang from his hotel to the house. Li was escorted up the steps of the Whitney house by his secretary and at once taken to the large ball room just off the main hall. The interior of the house had been decorated with green palms, and the gorgeous tapestries, which had been removed some time ago for the summer season, had been hung for the reception. President Cleveland and the members of his cabinet who were present took positions in the center of the ball room, the president standing beneath a group of Chinese flags draped on either side with a gilded American eagle, above which were the stars and stripes. Private Secretary Thurber notified the guests of the fact. Li Hung Chang and his secretaries and members of his suite then entered and Secretary Olney introduced the viceroy to President Cleveland. The ambassador, who wore a new and far more gorgeous yellow jacket than that worn upon his arrival yesterday, bowed low and shook hands with President Cleveland. All present were standing and so remained throughout the ceremony, which was very formal. The secretary of Li Hung Chang, Lo Fung Huh, handed to his excellency a letter from the emperor of China to the president of this nation. It was a very elaborate affair, done in Chinese on parchment and wrapped in a yellow silk covering, upon which was the Chinese dragon, worked in red, blue, green and white. The parchment resembled a large music roll. Li Hung Chang presented this letter to Mr. Cleveland. He then made an address on his own account, which was interpreted by Fung Huh. The translation of Li Hung Chang's remarks are as follows:

CHANG'S SPEECH.

"Your Excellency: It affords me great pleasure to have the honor to be presented to your excellency. The reputation of your highly esteemed virtues is widely known throughout the world, and in you the citizens of the United States of America have invariably placed their confidence, consequently both the interior administrations and exterior relations of this great republic are in a state of prosperity.

"It will always be the desire of my august master, the emperor of China, to maintain the most cordial relations with America, whose friendly assistance rendered to the government of China after the China-Japanese war, and whose protection for the safety of Chinese immigrants in America are to be highly appreciated.

"I am specially appointed by my august master, the emperor of China, to present to your excellency the letters of credence and to convey to your excellency the assurance of his most friendly feelings towards the United States of America, in hope that your excellency will reciprocate his sentiments and co-operate with him to promote the friendly intercourse between our two countries for the cause of human kind.

"I trust that your excellency's government will continue to afford protection and kind treatment to the Chinese immigrants in America, and to render friendly assistance to the Chinese government when required.

"May the people of our two great nations enjoy the benefits of perpetual peace."

MR. CLEVELAND'S REPLY.

Mr. Cleveland replied as follows:

"Your Excellency: It gives me great pleasure to receive from your hand the personal letter from your august sovereign and to greet you as his personal representative.

"Since our two countries became better acquainted many incidents have occurred calculated to increase our friendly relations, and not the least gratifying of these are the kindly expressions contained in the letter of your emperor and the visit to our country of his most distinguished subject, who has been so honorably and prominently connected with public affairs in his own country, and with all that has been attempted in the direction of its advancement and improvement.

"Your visit to us at this time is made more impressive by the thought that it serves to join in one suggestion the most ancient civilization of the east and the best type of a newer civilization in the western world. Notwithstanding the widely different characteristics of the two countries, the welcome which is tendered you by the government and citizens of the United States illustrates in the strongest possible manner the kinship of the nations.

"We feel that in the arrangement of your tour you have not allotted to your sojourn among us sufficient time to gain an adequate observation of all we have accomplished as a nation.

"It will not, however, escape your notice that a rich and fertile domain has here been quickly created by those who were assured that they would reap where they had sown; that a strong and beneficent government has been here established by those who love freedom and that we have a patriotic and generous people, who love their government because it is theirs; controlled by them, administered for them and protected and saved from harm by them. We heartily wish that your stay with us may be most pleasant, and that at its close you may enjoy a safe and agreeable return to your home and your field of duty and usefulness."

After Mr. Cleveland finished his remarks he introduced Secretaries Carlisle and Lamont, Attorney General Harmon, Mr. Whitney and the other gentlemen present whom Li Hung Chung had not met. Ex-Secretary of State John W. Foster, who met the viceroy in Japan during the negotiations for peace between that country and China, was remembered and cordially greeted by Li Hung Chang. The official interpreter introduced two sons of the viceroy and the others who accompanied him to President Cleveland.

After this there was some informal talk and pleasant words exchanged. Li Hung Chang did not indulge his propensity for asking questions to any great extent, and at 11:20, half an hour after the arrival of the guests of honor, the reception terminated. The party again entered their carriages and, escorted by Uncle Sam's cavalry, drove back to the hotel.

CUBANS GET WAR SUPPLIES.

How Arms and Ammunition Were Sent from Our Shores.

General Roloff, Colonel Nunez and fourteen others landed on the south beach at Key West, Fla., Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock. It is rumored that they were landed from the steamer Dauntless. General Roloff states that he has landed three of the largest expeditions in Cuba during the past twelve days that ever landed on that island. Besides the men, they landed successfully four thousand stands of arms, two million rounds of cartridges, four cannons, three thousand pounds of dynamite and plenty of medicine. Roloff states that he expects to land four or five more expeditions, but as none of those lately landed was organized in the United States, he will pursue the same course in relation to the organization of the others. He says that he does not want to violate any laws of the United States. He refuses to give the landing places.

LAURADA AND DAUNTLESS LAND.

The tug Dauntless and the steamer Laurada have landed the largest amount of arms and ammunition in Cuba for the insurgents that has been landed at any one time, and the two steamers are now on their way back to American shores.

This information is by a gentleman who is in a position to know, and he added that the supposed fitting out of the Commodore in Charleston and the tug Three Friends in Key West for expeditions recently was only a blind to attract the attention of the revenue cutters Boutwell to watch the Three Friends and the Colfax to watch the Commodore.

The Commodore and the Three Friends were also used to keep the Spanish gunboats on the watch for them at the northern end of the island, while the two expeditions taken out by the Laurada and Dauntless were landed on the southern and western ends of the island.

The combined expeditions amounted to 140 tons of arms and ammunition, and among the ammunition was 53,000 pounds of stick dynamite, which is sufficient to blow up the entire island.

The expedition on the Laurada consisted of eighteen men under the command of General Roloff, and it was landed at Santiago de Cuba. The expedition on the Dauntless consisted of forty men and was turned over to General Maceo in Pinar del Rio.

Outlaw Bill Doolin Dead.

Bill Doolin, the last of the noted outlaws of the south, was killed in a battle with deputy marshals under command of Heck Thomas near Ingalls, fifty miles northeast of Guthrie, Okla., last Monday night. One marshal was also badly wounded. Doolin's body was carried to Guthrie in a covered wagon, where he was officially identified and then turned over to his wife for burial. The battle took place close to Doolin's old home, the marshals waylaying him as he was leaving from a visit to his wife's baby.

REFORMS FOR CRETE.

The Sultan Adopts the Proposals of the Powers With Slight Change.

A special from Athens says: Reliable information has been received here from Constantinople to the effect that the Sultan has adopted the proposals of the powers for the future government of Crete, with the addition that concentration of civil and military powers shall be in the hands of a governor general. It is believed that the conditions will be acceptable to the Cretans.

Cotton Gin Wrecked.

At Kopperl, Tex., Harris' cotton gin was wrecked last Saturday by a boiler explosion. Engineer Maxwell, James Carmichael and Charles Lightner were killed and Samuel Brown, Alex Holt and his son wounded.

OUR COUNTRY'S COMMERCE.

Increased Exports and Diminishing Imports Turn Gold This Way.

TEN MILLION DOLLARS AFLOAT.

Failures for Three Weeks More than Treble Those of the Same Period Last Year—Coke Production Decreased and Anthracite Coal Advanced.

Failures for the week have been 288 in the United States, against 186 last year, and 83 in Canada, against 42 last year. Clearing house certificates have not been issued, but instead gold is coming hither largely on the swiftest steamers, about $10,000,000 being already on the way. Higher lending rates bring it, notwithstanding foreign events, which disturb London markets, and growing confidence in the monetary future of the country helps. The shrinkage of merchandise imports and increase in exports also help. These tendencies all help to lessen the strain. Liabilities in failures for three weeks ending August 20 were $20,932,285, against $6,519,366 last year and $8,214,470 in 1894. The stoppage of Hilton, Hughes & Co. this week is, of course, not included in these figures.

The stoppage of work also continues, including among other iron concerns the Illinois steel plant at Hammond, Ind., and the Lakeside Nail works there. Disruption of the Tin Plate association results from inability of many concerns to go on paying wages demanded and will presumably be followed by the stoppage of some. Other iron works are getting very little new business and there is so little doing that quotations are almost nominal. Gray forge has sold for $9.25 at Pittsburg, but it is said that speculative purchases amounting to 100,000 tons of pig have relieved the Chicago market. The billet pool in session at Cresson Friday was expected to change its basis and fix prices on open hearth steel. Coke production at Connellsville decreased 10,000 tons last week, a further decrease being expected. Anthracite has again been advanced 25 cents September 1.

Boot and shoe shipments continue large. New business is scarce. No gain is seen in the demand for woolen goods. Cotton shows a stronger tone and in a few qualities slightly better prices, but the change has been in selling from store, without disposition to order ahead of current wants.

Speculation in products caused an advance of 1.62 cents in wheat, but by Thursday it had been lost, only to rise again and close at nearly the top. Heavy western receipts continue, low as prices are.

Extensive Plan of Counterfeiters.

The federal authorities at Waco, Tex., have discovered a counterfeiting system of large proportions and have captured a complete outfit for the manufacture of bogus silver dollars in imitation of the United States coins of that denomination. The first clew was furnished by Edward D. Ennis, who attended a revival meeting, and after professing conversion, rose in the congregation and stated that he was a counterfeiter. The arrest of Ennis was followed by the arrest of John Mitchell and H. S. Shanner. When these prisoners were arraigned Ennis repeated his confession and gave details which led to the finding of the camp near Hill county, at which place the metal, molds, rollers and crucibles were scattered around like common pots and pans. Ennis told Commissioner Fink that seven factories for the manufacture of the spurious coin existed in the United States. The syndicate was called the Royal Manufacturing company. It is stated by Ennis that agencies of the counterfeiting corporation exist in Canada and Mexico. He also says operations are going on in New York and Chicago. A consignment of 2,000 Mexican dollars was received in Waco a few months ago, it is said, and was used in the manufacture of the spurious coins. Another consignment of 10,000 Mexican dollars arrived here a few weeks ago, but was forwarded by Ennis to some other point.

SERIOUS FIGHTING IN CRETE.

Turks Defeated with Great Loss of Killed and Wounded.

The most serious fighting which has been recorded in Crete up to the present time occurred Friday, when the Christians in the mountains organized a strong expedition against a number of Moslem villages in the Heraklion district. A thousand well armed Turks left Heraklion to defend their property. In the pitched battle which followed the Turks were defeated, losing eighty killed and forty-seven wounded. The losses of the Christians were smaller. The Cretans captured an enormous booty, hundreds of rifles and thousands of sheep and cattle falling into the possession.

The news of the reverses terribly excited the Moslem population of Heraklion. The Mohommedans gathered in front of the palace of the governor and clamored furiously for arms. The governor refused to accede to these requests, but he was powerless to restore order. He therefore telegraphed the authorities at Canea warning them of the gravity of the situation.

Lawlessness in Michigan.

Two local companies of the Fifth Regiment State militia were notified Friday night by the governor to go to Ontanagon, on call of the sheriff there. The lawless element was reported to be in control of the burned town. An appeal was made for prompt action for the safety of the suffering residents of the stricken village and the governor issued the order accordingly.

Houses, houses, we want more houses.

Don't be uneasy, "pa;" your wagon still stands under the water oak tree.

Well, the sidewalks remain untouched. Why don't you wake up, old Croney, and make the town look a little better? The streets will soon be in such a condition that those who are not good "humpers" will have to stay at home.

People in our town are so wrapped up in business that they have forgotten politics, to our great pleasure.

Why don't some one come in and help us run this paper? They can sit and tell us how it ought to be done, and we venture to say that if some of them had to get out one copy they would think a newspaper man's life was tough enough. Pay for what you read, brother, and we will give you more of it.

Now we want a nice hotel. Accommodation at the one we have will soon be insufficient. Several letters received during the past week force us to believe that we will soon see a handsome hotel in our city. We answer the gentleman's questions in this issue and extend to him a hearty, and are sure the hotel business will pay here.

Can't somebody get up some kind of entertainment? We long for what we call an ideal entertainment, where chaperones are plentiful and where everything is quiet and such games indulged in as Thimble, Pencil, Mother Goose, etc. There must be no stealing partners, for that is too much like dancing. No couple must leave the room without a chaperone. The young lady must always take the young man's arm when walking with him and we would suggest the subject of temperance for them to talk about. Plenty of lights are necessary. Partitions must be built on all sofas and large chairs. The time of leaving shall be at 10 o'clock. Crowd must be arranged in alphabetical order and the chaperones bring up the rear. On reaching home the young man should turn the young lady in the gate, then close it before saying goodnight—he may then turn his back and say good bye. Refreshments must consist of water and chewing gum—any kind of gum except Kis-Me gum may be used, for to offer a young lady a piece of Kis-Me gum is an insult. Will some of our readers please offer a few more suggestions on our ideal?

Garden Party Gowns---French Flannel Dresses---Why Do We Like Frills?---Adieu to the Dairy Maid.

PERSIAN LAWNS FOR COUNTRY.

The prettiest of all summer gowns is white. Its daintiness adopts and is suitable for all occasions, and it can be made to have quite an elaborate air with very small expense. For these gowns this season Persian lawns and organdies are more used than the old time victorias to give the required airy effect.—New York Advertiser.

THE REIGN OF SCENT.

Sachets for trunks and boxes and drawers and closets have come into use again, and some of them are sewed into dresses as well. The sachets are usually made of eau d'Espagne, which resembles kid. It is cut into strips or squares, and it never loses its scent. Gowns are wrapped in yards of flannel steeped in extract of perfume, and the effect is refreshing and pleasant to the wearer. Altogether the reign of scent has come upon us with considerable virulence, but always in delicate suggestion.—St. Louis Star-Sayings.

OBJECT TO BARE FEET.

An amusing difficulty has arisen regarding the statue of Flora Macdonald, which is being prepared to grace the northern capital of Scotland. In the original design the sculptor has represented the loyal Highland maid with bare feet. The armour propre of her clansmen has been ruffled at the idea of a woman of gentle blood being piloried to all time as a "barefit" Highland wench, and the Clan Macdonald Society of Glawgow has actually requested the Town Council of Inverness to have the design altered. —San Francisco Chronicle.

WHY DO WE LIKE FRILLS?

It would be a most difficult matter to tell for what object women choose their dresses. Some wiseacres say women dress to excite the envy of the less fortunate; others say to attract the attention of men. Harriet Prescott Spofford says: "Women are actuated only by their perceptions of the beautiful," and this generous sentiment fills the case of the large majority of women. There are a few whose minds are so warped they can enjoy nothing which does not excite jealousy and envy in the hearts of others. But, taken as a whole, it is undoubtedly true that women dress themselves for the mere love of the beautiful, and because they have a keen sense of the fitness of things.

GARDEN PARTY GOWNS.

From across the water comes this description of two garden party gowns:

At one garden party, a tall, stately, fair woman wore a lovely gown of palest grey silk. The bodice was of silken muslin, in folds and tiny tucks, the latter edged with deep cream colored Valenciennes lace; these bordered a kind of pointed vest of accordion-pleated white chiffon, with inserted designs in Honiton lace. There was a folded girdle, drawn down slightly below the waist, of pale Chartreuse green-satin ribbon shot with gold, and straps of similar ribbon over the shoulders, caught with lovely paste buttons. The hat was of crumpled straw, the brim sewn with white Scotch roses, and high green ostrich feathers placed at one side.

Very attractive also was a dress, worn by a tall young countess in a bright pale shade of apple-green silk. The bodice was made with sleeves of chiffon veiled by cream colored lace, and had folds of chiffon drawn down the front and back and caught under a closely swathed girdle of green silk drawn into a diamond buckle at one side. A toque of rough black chip was worn, trimmed with black tulle, and with a high aigrette of black and pale green ostrich feathers at one side.

WOMEN PIRATES.

All the Amazons enumerated have been respectable women; we now come to two who were not—namely, Mary Read and Anne Bonny, who took to the piratical profession at the close of the seventeenth century. Mary Read, it seems, "growing bold and strong, and also having a roving mind, entered herself at thirteen years of age, on board a man-of-war." There she served some time, and, on quitting it, successively did duty with regiments of foot and horse, in all actions behaving herself with conspicuous bravery. After the peace of Rywick she shipped her self on board of a vessel bound for the West Indies, which was taken by pirates, and gentle Mary, instead of walking the plank, elected to become one of them.

Though she often declared that the life of a "pyrate" was what she always abhorred, no person among them was more resolute or ready to undertake anything that was hazardous. On the death of a pirate named Bonny, Mary Read took his widow, Anne, into partnership, and on one occasion they were the only "men" except one who kept the deck at close quarters. History does not relate what eventually became of them, but there is every reason to suppose that they escaped the yardarm, and on retiring from the quarterdeck lived comfortably on their ill-gotten gains.—London Globe.

FRENCH FLANNEL DRESSES.

For the negligee gown, yet good enough for the chance caller, one is thankful for the French flannels—those soft, bright stuffs that come in all prices, ranging from cheap to dear. Clever women are making a study of this material and its summer possibilities.

One of the French flannel dresses has a skirt of striped pink and white. The pink is a deep decided pink, to simulate the striped summer silks, and as the surface of the flannel is satiny, the resemblance is not far fetched. The skirt is lined with the same material, though if a slightly heavier grade of flannel had been employed no lining would have been necessary, not even a stiffening.

The waist is a very dark shade of extremely fine pink flannel. It has full sleeves to the elbow, then wrinkled, loose cuffs. The collar is in soft pink taffeta ribbon of a shade to match the stripes on the skirt. It can be left off on a hot day, and a small ruff of white lace basted in.

Around the neck is a handkerchief of white lawn, edged with muslin embroidery. The ends are very long, tying in a knot and leaving a fichu, whose ends hang nearly to the floor. They are edged with white embroidery, which, by the way, is delicate hand work. The sleeves are finished around the hand with a deep ruffle of soft pink ribbon like the neck.—Atlanta Journal.

ADIEU TO THE DAIRY MAID.

An English engineer, who has just returned from a visit to the annual exhibition or show of the Royal Agricultural Society, held this year in Leicester, writes that the poetry of the dairy is fast disappearing. In the future all the processes will be conducted by automatic machines, presided over by a professor, sitting in a bacteriological laboratory. The cows will be milked by machinery, and then the mammary fluid will run through pipes into sterilized vats for distribution to our homes, or into separators, which will, in a few minutes, convert it into butter and skimmed milk. The dairy maid will disappear, or will be converted into a young lady whose talk will be as full of scientific terms as that of a hospital nurse Our descendants will be aghast at our temerity in drinking milk straight from the cow, and will wonder what kind of digestion we had to dispose of the millions of bacteria which seem to make the farmyard their special haunt. Mechanical appliances were exhibited at the show for nearly every brand of dairy work. The sterilization of milk was made a prominent feature, and one of the exhibits illustrated a method of sterilizing milk in bottles or cans. The bottles have rubber-seated stoppers, and are filled with milk which has been strained and filtered. They are then put into steam-heated ovens and the milk raised to temperatures ranging from 100 degrees to 212 degrees; a temperature of 160 degrees maintained for an hour is said to be sufficient to kill all dangerous germs, but if the milk is intended to be kept for some time, it is necessary to allow it to cool and then heat it a second time. When the steam is turned off in the oven, the stoppers seat themselves tightly on account of the condensation of the vapor in the necks of the bottles.

Among the butter making machines was one which consists of a centrifugal separator delivering its cream to an inclined rotating surface, over which it moves slowly, being there subject to a continuation of the separating action. According to the inventor, the globules of fat here become disentangled from the watery particles with which they are associated and coalesce into butter granules, just as small globules of mercury will collect into larger ones. The apparatus is, in fact, a double separator; first the milk divides into cream and skim milk, and the cream separates into butter and skim milk. The size of the granules of butter can be regulated by the speed at which the milk is run into the apparatus. In a trial made at the show, eighteen gallons of milk produced five pounds and three ounces of butter, the process being conducted at the low temperature of sixty-three degrees Fahrenheit.—Boston Transcript.

FASHION NOTES.

Handkerchiefs made to match the shirtwaists are the latest feminine fancy.

The crown of this year's sailor hat is considerably higher and narrower than that of last year's.

Large leghorn hats still retain their old and popular favor. When artistically trimmed, nothing is so airy or becoming to the summer girl.

A very good idea is to have several sets of ribbons for one gown, as changing the ribbons will make it look like a different gown each time.

The newest evening coiffures are in 1830 style, with motives of jet and steel.

The link belts in enamel are much worn by those who possess pretty gold or silver trifles that can be hung from them by chains.

The newest sort of yoke is made of a close set, white cord, braided in an important pattern wide enough to cover the top of the bodice entirely to the bust. It is either of this fashion or else quite narrow, merely a band across the upper portion of the neck attached to a rounded drapery drooping over the arm.

Chic-looking zouaves attract the eye on many of the most stylish dresses of the year. Sometimes they are all lace, sometimes fine muslin as a groundwork to the minutest white embroidery. Occasionally they are made of grass lawn, worked all over with pompadour flowers of jewels, and embroidered glaces are employed for them.

Whatever attempts may be made to replace them, plain skirts still hold their own to the exclusion of any sort of trimmed ones.

Tulle veils in every shade and color are once more fashion. White ones are in large demand, but are becoming to very young faces only, and should be avoided by all others.

White satin for evening gowns is taking the place of all the more decided colors. It is used for every sort of occasion under muslin for morning wear, and garnished with silver paillette embroidery for more dressy occasions.

More and more garish becomes the floral sprays in pearls, garnets and ornamentation on foreign gowns.d. Gold net is to be had, worked with emeralds, and muslin even is incrusted with diamonds, rhine stones, pearls, sapphires or opalescent shells.

Revers are very much in vogue, and may be made out of any sort of lace or fancy trimming. Triple handkerchief corners and large embroidered handkerchiefs or hemstitchel handkerchiefs, or even the cashmere patterned ones, are used for this purpose.

Tulle and chiffon, with a satin edge, are sold by the hundred yards for neck ruches and frillings on capes, parasols and gowns.

Old-fashioned silk brocade is used for waistcoats, revers and cuffs, and white moire silk appears in this guise on white alpaca gowns.

Leather belts are embroidered with gold and silver beads, and white kid belts, set with blue enamel, traced with gold, are the latest fancy. Ordinary webbing is used as a foundation for elaborate embroidery and jeweled decoration.

Linen pockets and cases for night dresses and other toilet uses are easily decorated by using white Honiton and other lace braids and put on in a design of lovers' knots, festoons, and medallions. Blue linen looks best decorated in this way, as on white the pattern does not show to advantage. Table spreads of shadow silks made for small drawing room tables have full double frills of silk muslin for a finish.

Red is the accepted color for golf suits, and red serge made with a Norfolk jacket and skirt, finished on the edges with green leather, is very chic. Brown cloth skirts, with bright red blouse waists, are very effective, and Russian crash is the material for hot weather golf costumes.

There seems to be a growing love for flowers in London, and a new appreciation of their value for decorations. At a recent ball given the staircase was made beautiful with Louis XVI. wreaths of azaleas, orchids and roses, and ribbon bows, all in shades of yellow, and a yellow electric light in the centre of each. Sunshades, covered with roses, were presented to all the ladies in the cotillon.

DISTRIBUTION OF SEEDS.

How the Elements Carry Plants to Long Distances.

It is said that on a visit to the Island of Krakatoa, four years after the outburst of the volcano had destroyed every living thing, a traveler found 246 species of plants that had already found a home there. Essays have treated on this fact as inducing the wonderful power of the wind in carrying seeds long distances, and of the remarkable contrivances in the nature of wings by which seeds are enabled to be transported by winds.

Theoretically one might reason that wings are given to seeds to enable them to fly; but when the matter is tested practically, the result is a surprise. In the case of the linden, the seeds which manage to get any considerable distance will be found to be hollow. The sound, solid seeds are all under the trees, or at most but a little distance away. The dandelion and similar plants are continually used in illustration. If we watch a dandelion as the breeze floats over the crown of pappus, the seeds are seen to fall a little aside, and it snaps away from its fleecy crown, the latter floating away, leaving the seed behind. If we gather a head and give it a jar, the pappus does not separate, and we can see how awkwardly it floats away. It is indeed impossible by reason of the weight for the downy head to carry the seed far away. If one be caught on the wing and cut open, it will be found usually hollow or imperfect. In many pine seeds it will be found that only the hollow ones are carried any considerable distance. If we are to look for a single purpose only, it would be just as reasonable to conclude that wings were provided in order that the light seeds might be fanned out, in order that the good seeds might have a better chance to grow.

It is one of the weaknesses of modern scientific philosophy to imagine that nature has but a single purpose in view in the arrangement of things.

Nature is a grand instrument in which a few things can be made to produce an infinity of harmonious sounds. It is not fair to assume that any arrangement, however peculiar, was provided for any one purpose wholly.

As to the distribution of seeds on islands, the muddy feet of birds, their feathers, or even material for building nests, are more responsible for results than the winds. It would be interesting to know how many of the 246 species had wind-loving seeds.—Meehan's Monthly.

A Minister's Strange Experience.

Rector Evans, of Middletown, N. Y., had a strange experience on Thursday. At 7:30 o'clock in the evening he christened the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James E. Brown, of Englewood, N. J. At 8:30 o'clock he married Bruno Scheunard and Miss Emma Meafoy. At 9 o'clock he read the funeral service over the body of Mrs. John Buckhout. —New York Recorder.

Only One Way to Get Volunteers.

There had been a lack of men joining the ranks, and the colonel was visiting a recruiting station, inspecting the workings of his recruiting sergeants. Suddenly a terrible noise of shouting and shuffling of feet came through the open window. Now it came from the stairway, intermingled with sundry loud bumps and knocks, and the door burst open, showing a red-faced, perspiring little sergeant pushing, hauling and tugging at a big country lad. The latter was doing his best to escape the firm grip of the soldier. "Halt!" cried the colonel. "How is this?" he said to the sergeant. "Is this the way you secure recruits—by force, sir?" The red-faced sergeant looked up and down, then at the colonel, and blurted out: "Sure, sir, the only way to get them volunteers is by force, sir."

The Ladies.

The pleasant effect and perfect safety with which ladies may use Syrup of Figs, under all conditions, makes it their favorite remedy. To get the true and genuine article, look for the name of the California Fig Syrup Company, printed near the bottom of the package. For sale by all responsible druggists.

Pleasant Attraction for Guests.

A man to hang by the neck thirteen days and nights was the attraction at a Montmartre cafe recently. The doctors, however, stopped the performance at the end of the fourth day, the man being in a critical condition. His name is Durand.

There are three things women should not do: Spit in public, yawn in public, or blow their nose in public.

Pistols and Pestles.

The duelling pistol now occupies its proper place, in the museum of the collector of relics of barbarism. The pistol ought to have beside it the pestle that turned out pills like bullets, to be shot like bullets at the target of the liver. But the pestle is still in evidence, and will be, probably, until everybody has tested the virtue of Ayer's sugar coated pills. They treat the liver as a friend, not as an enemy. Instead of driving it, they coax it. They are compounded on the theory that the liver does its work thoroughly and faithfully under obstructing conditions, and if the obstructions are removed, the liver will do its daily duty. When your liver wants help, get "the pill that will,"

The Mendicants.

We are as mendicants who wait
  Along the roadside in the sun.
Tatters of yesterday and shreds
  Of morrow clothe us every one.

And some are dotards, who believe
  And glory in the days of old;
While some are dreamers, harping still
  Upon an unknown age of gold.

Hopeless or witless! Not one heeds,
  As lavish Time comes down the way
And tosses in the suppliant hat
  One great new-minted gold today.

But there be others, happier far,
  The vagabondish sons of God,
Who know the by-ways and the flowers,
  And care not how the world may plod.

They idle down the traffic lands,
  And loiter through the woods with spring.
To them the glory of the earth
  Is but to hear a bluebird sing.

They too receive each one his Day;
  But their wise heart knows many things
Beyond the sating of desire,
  Above the dignity of kings.

One I remember kept his coin,
  And laughing flipped it in the air;
But when two strolling pipe-players
  Came by, he tossed it to the pair.

Spendthrift of joy, his childish heart
  Danced to their wild outlandish bars;
Then supperless he laid him down
  That night and slept beneath the stars.

One Woman's Judgment.

BY MABEL M. THOMPSON.

In a pleasant room, where the soft glow of a shaded lamp cast its warm light, were two people, a man and a woman. The woman was twenty, perhaps, and tall and slender. Her face was unusually pretty, with its round, girlish outlines, and the sweet curves of the mouth; but the gray eyes were thoughtful and dreamy, telling of the exalted ideals and noble purposes that are ours in the springtime of life. The man stood near her, looking down with a gentle yet amused smile. He was thirty or more, and his face hinted of battles fought and won, of manhood which had struggled with the world and yet retained its tenderness.

"What is it, Ruth? What is this terrible something which may come between us and separate us forever? Tell me, and let me show you that it is made only of April snows, and will melt away."

"You mustn't treat it so lightly, Richard," she answered, with a troubled look. "It's a very serious question, and one which is growing in importance, and—we women must do our duty at any cost. Miss Rogers told me that."

"Oh, bother Miss Rogers. I beg your pardon, but what has that estimable old maid to do with us? What is the question, Ruthie? You quite make my hair stand on end when you call be Richard in that tone."

"'Dick' is much too frivolous," she said, "and Miss Rogers is a very intellectual, advanced woman, and a friend of mine."

"Indeed!"

There was an absolute silence for a moment, then Ruth observed:

"I think 'indeed' is such a horrid word. I wish you wouldn't fling it at me."

"I am sorry. I suppose I should have said of course. See here, Ruthie, I want to know about this barrier affair."

"Well, Richard, it's this," she began, folding her hands primly in her lap, and studying the pattern of the carpet. "I want you to think, to think over your whole life—you know what mine has been—and see if there is anything in your past you could not tell me, anything you would not be willing to have paralleled in my past. Indeed, I am serious—no, don't try to stop me. I'll give you fifteen minutes to think about it."

There was a rustle of silken petticoats, and Richard was alone. He stared absently into the fire, and gradually his face changed and hardened. His mouth grew set and stern, and the lines, which had scarcely been visible, deepened and muliplied. The moments passed, the clock ticked on, one of the logs on the fire broke and fell in showers of sparks. Again there was the swish, swish of a woman's skirts, and the tread of slippered feet. He turned to her coldly.

"Do you mean," he said sternly, "that if I cannot truthfully say that my whole past is just and pure and white as your own, you will retract your promise? That you will break with me?"

"It's my duty, Richard," she answered, nervously twisting her rings.

"Then listen. There are things in my past which I am thankful you can never know. My life has not been blameless, free from sin; it has been a long, hard fight, with many blows given and received. I know this, that every time I have been beaten, I have risen with new strength, and with greater knowledge of the battle I was waging. I see that you have judged me—that in your heart you have already told me to go. You stand there and judge me. You! What can you know of sin—of temptation? You, who from childhood have been shielded from any knowledge of the world, whose purity has been carefully guarded, whose life has been lived among the people whose every thought is for you and of you? What can you know of a man's life, of the sin that surrounds him everywhere, of the temptations resisted as well as those yielded to? Do you not know that there is no strength in mere innocence—untried virtue? With a temptation overcome, a sin repented of, comes the only real strength of manhood or womanhood; and I am a purer man today, worthier of you in every respect, than I was ten years ago, when there was nothing in my past which might make you shrink from me. My love is a purer love, less selfish, than I could have offered to you then. Oh, Ruth, you cannot know the bitterness of repentence, the anguish of self contempt, nor the somber strength which it brings! Some day, perhaps, you may know and understand." He paused; then, as she mad no reply, threw back his head defiantly.

"I see your decision," he continued. "If this is what you call your love—you may keep it. Good night."

He closed the library door behind him, and stood alone in the great, dimly lighted hall. One of the rugs was twisted, and he stooped mechanically, to straighten it as he buttoned his coat.

"What's the use in telling any woman the real and candid truth?" he muttered, and turned to go; but some one called in a half-choked voice.

"Oh, Dick, come back."

She stood in the doorway with both her long white hands stretched out to him in pleading invitation.

"You are right, Dick," she faltered. "I dare not judge you!"—Munsey's Magazine.

Texas's Big Hog.

Texas is not only the biggest state in the Union, but lays claim to the biggest hog ever raised in the United States. The hog weighs 1,430 pounds and is 8 feet 3 inches long. He measures 6 feet around the neck, 8 feet around the body, and stands 4 feet 1 inch high. His feet are as large as a common ox, and the leg bone larger than that of the largest steer. He is Poland china and red Jersey. He eats corn like an ox; takes the whole ear in his mouth at once and eats the cob as well as the corn, eating from forty to fifty ears at a time. There seems to be no surplus flesh on him, and physicians who have examined the hog say he can easily be made to reach 5,200 pounds. The present owner, T. Ratigan, paid $250 for the hog, and has been offered $1,500 for him. He has a fire policy on the animal for $5,000. No other hog, it is said, ever reached such tremendous proportions.

Tea in Venezuela.

"If you call for tea at a restaurant in Caracas." says a traveler, "the proprietor will send to the nearest drug store for it and express regret that you are ill. Tea is looked upon by the native Venezuelan as a most unpleasant beverage, and to be used only medicinally. It is not kept in any of the hotels, and when it is specially ordered the guest is sorry he did it, for the quality is abominable. It tastes like a dose of senna."

Many Precedents.

"Some folks thinks this Venezuelan affair will be settled without trouble, but I'll be dog-on if I do," said Mr. Jason, as the crowd about the grocery store made room for the old man. "I never see one of these here line-fence quarrels yit that didn't wind up in a fight!"—Indianapolis Journal.

Photographing Thought.

It might be rash to pronounce that anything is beyond the photographer's art. But the communication just made to the Paris Academie de Medicine by Dr. Baraduc is so astonishing that if he had made it before Dr. Roentgen had rendered his discovery public, very few people would have been inclined even to inquire into the matter. Indeed, Dr. Baraduc affirms he has succeeded in photographiug thought, and he has shown numerous photographs in proof of his assertion.

His usual method of proceeding is simple enough. The person whose thought is to be photographed enters a dark room, places his hand on a photographic plate, and thinks intently of the object the image of which he wishes to see produced. It is stated by those who have examined Dr. Baraduc's photographs that most of them are very cloudy, but that a few are comparatively distinct, representing the features of persons and the outlines of things. Dr. Baraduc goes further, and declares that it is possible to produce a photographic image at a great distance.

In his communication to the Academie de Medicine he relates that Dr. Istrate, when he was going to Campana, declared he would appear on a photographic plate of his friend, M. Hasden, at Bucharest. On August 4, 1893, M. Hasden at Bucharest went to bed with a photographic plate on his feet and another at his head. Dr. Istrate went to sleep at Campana, at a distance of about three hundred kilometres from Bucharest, but before closing his eyes, he willed with all his might that his image should appear on the photographic plate of his friend. According to Dr. Baraduc that marvel was accomplished. Journalists who have examined the photograph in question state that it consists in a kind of luminous spot on the photographic plate, in the midst of which can be traced the profile of a man.—London Standard.

The Betel Nut.

The use of the betel nut among the Hindoos of India is declared to be almost general. The nut grows on a tall palm. Before being chewed it is wrapped in a betel leaf, which grows on a vine and has nothing more to do with the betel nut than cream has to do with strawberries. The chewing of the nut increases the flow of saliva, and as the resultant juices are red, it makes the chewer apparently spit blood. Many of the public buildings in India are painted red several feet from the ground, so that the expectorations of the betel nut chewers will not be so noticeable.

The devotees of the betel-nut chewing habit claim to derive much comfort and enjoyment from it without any deleterious effects. The Mohametan religion condemns spirits, and Brahminism forbids anything that intoxicates or stupefies. No great religion condemns the betel nut, and it may be used by all. No European has ever been known to acquire the habit, and its soothing effects, if such it has, affect only the Hindoo constitution.

The nut is used as an ingredient in a popular tooth-powder, and it is said to harden the gums. It has no further utility except in India, where it is grown in immense quantities purely to be chewed.

"Unlucky" Opals.

It is not "fashionable" to be superstitious about wearing opals. Ten years ago the woman who wore an opal was a brave woman indeed. Today, experts admit, more opals are bought than any other stones except diamonds. It was Sir Walter Scott who helped, in 'Anne of Geierstein,' to arouse the fears of the superstitious concerning the wearing of that very beautiful stone, and it was a German dealer in gems who fostered that fear very successfully, for other ends then those of romance, He came to England years ago, we are told by a lady jeweler, to fill an order from one of the royal families in Germany—a wedding order, if I remember rightly. Opals were then high. He had printed the story that opals were unlucky, and spread the report diligently. In a short time the prices went down, and he was enabled to fill his order and make a handsome profit.—Westminster Gazette.

FOR A LITTLE GIRL'S GARDEN.

I'm going to make a garden,
I'm going to make it very quick,
I'm going to make it all myself,
I'm going to plant it very thick,
I'm going to plant it all with berries,
And great big pears and plums and cherries!

FANS OF CHINESE BOYS.

What would strike an American boy or girl as very odd if he went to China would be the universal use of fans by the Chinese children. Almost every child in the empire carries a fan. They are the playthings of Chinese babies, as our babies delight in rattles. Chinese nurses amuse their young charges with their fans, which they too are never seen without. The children learn to handle their fans very expertly, for the fan in the hands of a Chinese has a certain language of its own. Rich and poor alike, every boy and girl, must have a fan. A poor little Chinese boy who has scarcely a whole garment and who rarely gets a good meal, will still have a fan and use it constantly. Not, of course, that they are expensive, for they can be had there for next to nothing; the idea of a little street gamin, such as are seen in America, caring to use a fan is what seems curious.—New York Times.

A PET LAMB'S SAGACITY.

Having read from time to time in your pages notable instances of the sagacity of dogs and cats, it has occurred to me that the following well-authenticated record of the intelligence of a sheep may possess at least the interest of novelty. Two years ago a lamb owned by a gentleman whose farm lies close to Lough Foyle was left motherless. A yardman in charge of the flock nursed and fed the little orphan. She became very tame, and was petted by her master's children. Last year she had grown into a young sheep, with a lamb of her own. One day some dogs ran through the pasture grounds, and the frightened flock scattered and fled through the field, which was a large one, sloping toward the shore. The yardman, Aleck, banished the intruders and collected the sheep, as he supposed, into safety.

An hour or two afterward the pet sheep rushed past the dwelling house apparently in great distress. With piteous bleatings she went to the lodge gate, where Aleck was sitting at his noonday meal, and coming close to him, seemed to seek his help. As he rose from the table she ran out of the house and straight through the pasture to the shore. He followed her, and soon saw the cause of her alarm. Her lamb, terrified by the dogs, had fled to a little peninsula among the rocks, which the incoming tide had transferred into an island. Of course, it could not cross the strait, and the mother could not save it, therefore she appealed to the power and sympathy of her human friend. Her trust in his help was not disappointed, and she and her rescued offspring were soon safely reunited.—London Spectator.

LITTLE DAN'S FIRST VOTE.

Arbor day the children in Jennie's room voted on a choice of "Illinois tree," and "Illinois flower." Jennie took her little brother Dan to school with her that day; and Dan understood what they were doing. He had learned to read and to write at home, and when he saw the other children puzzling with paper and pencil before him he looked at Jennie with wide eyes, and she nodded.

So Dan pulled a bit of paper toward him, rummaged among twine and tops and marbles and lucky stones in his fat coat pocket, and found a bit of lead pencil. He wrote the name of his favorite flower, and it went in with the rest, while Dan trembled, for he knew he was at the threshold of great things.

Just before school closed for the evening the teacher said she would read the result of the voting, and every one sat up intense in interest.

"There are eighteen for the pansy," said the teacher, consulting her record, "and six for the lily of the valley. There are two for the violet, and two for the rose, and two for the golden rod, and there is one——"

Dan was holding his breath, and his eyes were getting wider open every minute.

"And one for the Dutchman's breeches."

The children almost screamed with laughter, but the teacher looked so suddenly serious, and lifted her hand so protestingly that they were silent instantly. And she said:

"It is spelled very nicely—'duchman brechs'—and the child that wrote it loves the flower very much. In the books this is called 'viletes cortes,' but it is commonly called by this name, 'Dutchman's breeches.'"

And she said it all so gently that the pupils understood, and although they knew little Dan was at the verge of tears they did not trouble him.

But Dan wasn't quite sure when he went home in the evening that he liked voting in school, after all—Chicago Post.

A WISE OLD SENTINEL CROW.

A naturalist who is much interested in birds says that the crow is the wisest of all feathered animals. He has made a number of experiments recently and declares that an ordinarily well-educated crow can count to twenty, and that he has found a sentinel crow, very old and very wise, that can count to twenty-six. He made these discoveries in a very interesting way.

Last summer he spent much time in the mountains, where a cadet company of boys was camped. One day he found a flock of crows gathered around a dead animal that lay near a little old shanty in the woods. They flapped away when he approached. So he hid himself in the old shanty and waited, but they would not come back. Then he went out and walked on up the mountain, and they all settled down again to the feast. That afternoon he took four boys from the cadet camp with him, and the five marched into the little building and waited. No crows came back. Two of the boys went out. Still no crows. Then the other two went out and only the naturalist remained. But the old crow sentinel crow had evidently counted them as they went in, and he knew they had not all come out. So he sat on a dry pine stump and said "caw, caw," quite derisively. At last the naturalist left the building, and straightway all the crows returned. This experiment was repeated a number of times with varying numbers of boys, but the crows kept count, and would not come down until the building was entirely empty.

At last a whole platoon of the cadets, twenty-six boys in all, and the naturalist marched into the old building. Then slowly twenty of them went away. The crows did not stir. Two more, four more, five more went, but the old sentinel warned his companions that the men had not all gone. Then the twenty-sixth cadet marched away, leaving only the naturalist. In a very few minutes there were a number of hopeful caws and a flapping of wings and the crows returned. The old sentinel could evidently count twenty-six, but numbers beyond this puzzled him. The experiment was tried several times more, and it was found that the crows could keep the count without difficulty up to twenty, but beyond that they were uncertain. This shows that the crow is a very wise old bird.—Chicago Record.

SCIENTIFIC SCRAPS.

The members of the Boston Aeronautical Society have decided that the kite is an instrument of value.

Beinald Renault, the French scientist, has discovered fossil microbes in the earliest geological formations.

Compressed air has been successfully applied to the signals of the lightship in Vineyard sound, off Cape Cod. Hitherto the signals have been blown by steam.

M. Girard has informed the Paris Academy of Sciences that the common belief that fine white bread has less nutritive power than coarse, brown bread is wrong, as both qualities contain practically the same amount of gluten and phosphates.

Wells estimates the total annual deposit of dew on the British isles as being in the neighborhood of five inches, or about one-seventh of the total amount of moisture received from the atmosphere. This means 22,161,337,355 tons of dew a year, reckoning the ton at 252 imperial gallons.

Mr. Fabre claimed that after sixteen years of cultivation he secured a variety of wheat from a common grass, the "Aegilops Ovata," which grows abundantly all over the south of Europe. Others, however, claim he was mistaken, and that the flowers of the plants in his experiments were hybridized with wheat.

English bicycle makers are experimenting with a metal composed of ninety-six per cent. of aluminum and four of alloy. The cycle frames are cast in one piece in tubular shape, and without joints. The tests have shown that the tubes could withstand a pressure of 3,000 pounds without deflecting, and the metal is said to be of equal strength to the best wrought iron, but only one-third of the weight.

Earthquake experts propose to establish a number of stations for seismological observations round the earth. Starting from Japan, where is the most complete system for studying earthquakes in the world, the stations will be Shanghai, Hong Kong, Calcutta, Sydney, Rome, Tacubaya in Mexico, Port Natal, Cape of Good Hope, Santaigo in Chili and Rio de Janeiro, all communicating with a central station at Strasburg.

Land of Paradoxes.

Australia is really the antipodes of the remainder of the world in all respects. Summer time comes during the time of European winter; the rising barometer indicates rain, and the falling the opposite; the swans are all black and the eagles white; the native dogs never bark; the serpents have tails like fishes and wings like bats; the prickly pear grows to be a tall tree, and the poplars and oaks seldom grow above five feet in height; the elm has hairs in place of feathers; the birds are without song; the sun is in the north at noon; the chief rivers run inland; the pear trees grow a fruit that is beautiful to look upon, but which when ripe, is as hard as though fashioned from the wood of the tree itself; the leaves of the trees all stand edgewise and cast no shadows; the stone or pit of the cherry is on the outside, and must be cracked in order to get at the meat; the opossums fly like bats, the king-fisher never catches fish, but lives on fruits; the peas are poisonous; the oaks bear no acorns; the chestnuts are without burr, and, in many instances, the trees are hollow, with bark on the outside.—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

The Porcupine and the Inflated Tire.

A Marquette bicycler was riding along a country road when he saw a small animal in the path, and as it showed no signs of turning out as he approached, he ran over it. It was poor judgment on his part, though, mighty poor judgment, for the animal was a porcupine, and when the cycler took an inventory of the damage, he found his tire so full of holes that a sieve was nothing in comparison. He is more careful what he runs over with his new tire.—Detroit Free Press.

The Washington Star reports a hailstorm in which the hailstones were like goose eggs. This is a new departure that, in the opinion of the New York Tribune, will mightily surprise veteran newspaper readers. From time immemorial hailstones have always fallen the size of hen's eggs, according to the reports in the papers. People finally came to believe that some mysterious law of nature caused all hailstones to assume that size; and now their belief is rudely upset by an iconoclast who brings in a goose-egg standard. Certainly this is a revolutionary age. The first thing we know, hailstones the size of ostrich eggs will be falling, and then where will we be?

There is a great difference in the compensation of the Governors. New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey pay their Governors $10,000 a year, and the two former States furnish mansions for them. Ohio and Massachusetts pay $8000 a year. Illinois and California pay $6000. Colorado, Indiana, Kentucky, Minnesota, Missouri, Virginia and Wisconsin pay $5000. Maryland pays $1500. Eight States pay $1000 a year. The remaining twenty-one States pay miserably small salaries to their executives. In Vermont and Oregon the Governors receive only $1500 a year—hardly enough to pay a capable private secretary. In Michigan the salary of the Governor remained for several years at $1000. This restricted the office to rich men, for no poor man who was competent could afford to take it. The salary in that State now is $4000.

One reason why the boys leave the farm is that the whole system of education in our public schools is to fit them for almost any trade, business or profession except agriculture, declares the American Agriculturist. This fact has been emphasized by discussion at farmers' institutes all over the country the past winter. The feeling that our system of education needs to be reformed in this respect is becoming irresistible. New Jersey has already started an effort to teach the rudiments of agriculture in the common schools. The Connecticut State Grange has courteously requested the State Board of Agriculture to try the plan, and if it declines to do so, C. P. Augur and others interested propose to carry the matter into the Legislature next winter. A similar state of public sentiment exists wherever the public school system has been highly developed, especially in the West. The more one looks into the complex and "advanced" system in vogue in our more "progressive" schools, the more the impression grows that the tendency of the system is partly wrong, if not all wrong. The public schools should educate youth to be workers, not dudes.

A movement is on foot to have a universal census taken at the beginning of the next century. It had its inception at the biennial meeting of the International Statistical Institute recently held at Berne, Switzerland. At the instance of Dr. Guillame, Director of the Statistical Office of the Federal Government of Switzerland, a committee was appointed by the institute to collect information as to the possibility and best method of taking a synchronous census of each civilized country in 1901. The committee will also consider the best method by which uniformity can be introduced into the collection and tabulation of data so that facile and creditable comparisons can be made. The committee thus far has made one report which recommends that the opinions of the leading statistical experts of the different countries be obtained on these points and laid before the next meeting of the institute in 1897. The committee will then decide whether or not to advise the carrying out of the project. It is believed that such a census, taken as it is proposed in 1900, would prove of the greatest value to the various Governments, to social economists and scientific men generally. It is not believed that the scheme, though a difficult one to carry out, is impracticable. Fourteen Nations have already fixed either 1900 or 1901 as the year in which the next enumeration of their population will be taken.

EVENTS IN ALABAMA.

Carefully Collated and Condensed for Our Readers.

SHERIFF KENNEDY ACQUITTED.

J. G. Morgan, of Gate City, Killed by a Dummy—Greenville Visited by a Destructive Fire—Democratic Campaign Committee Getting Ready for Work—Other Notes.

Sheriff Kennedy Acquitted.

The Kennedy murder case which has been on trial before Judge Winters at Montgomery for several days went to the jury at 8 o'clock Tuesday night. At 10:30 the jury brought in this unique and apparently contradictory verdict: "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty as charged, but insane at the time he committed the crime." The effect is to absolve Kennedy of the charge of murdering Percy Wood, but to commit him to the state insane asylum for insanity until he shall have been adjudged sane by a competent board of examiners.

Fire at Greenville.

Four frame buildings, three dwellings and one hall, all occupied by negroes, were destroyed by fire, which occurred about 12:30 p. m. Tuesday at Greenville. Everything is exceedingly dry, the buildings were close together and situated almost beyond reach of the department; hence the number burned. The department responded to the alarm promptly, however, and notwithstanding the many disadvantages under which they labored, including considerable wind, did good work in preventing a further spread of the flames. The loss will probably reach $2,500; insured for about $1,300.

Democrats Ready for Work.

The democratic state campaign committee, recently appointed by State Chairman John B. Knox, held its first session at Birmingham Monday and organized by electing ex Congressman Charles M. Shelly chairman and N. L. Miller secretary. General Shelly managed both the state and national campaigns in Alabama in 1892. The following is the campaign committee: First district, S. B. Lyons; Second district, A. D. Sayre; Third district, E. A. Evans; Fourth district, H. S. D. Mallory; Fifth district, A. J. Driver; Sixth district, A. B. McEachin; Seventh district, R. B. Kyle; Eighth district, W. R. Brown; Ninth district, J. W. Tomlinson; state at large, C. M. Shelly. The committee held a prolonged session, working out the plans of campaign.

Republicans Nominate Hundley.

The Eighth Alabama district republican convention assembled in Decatur Monday. F. J. Kilpatrick, of Bridgeport, Ala., called the convention to order and was made its permanent chairman. A platform was adopted by the convention embodying and indorsing the features and candidates of the republican St. Louis convention. John A. Steele, of Colbert county, was chosen presidential elector, and State Senator Oscar R. Hundley, of Huntsville, Ala., gold standard democrat, was nominated for congress over F. J. Kilpatrick, the regular republican candidate of the district. On the call of counties it was apparent that Kilpatrick would lose, Hundley leading his opponent four to one. Before the call of Jackson county's vote was reached Kilpatrick moved the convention to make Hundley's nomination unanimous, which was greeted with tremendous applause, the motion resulting in the election and declaring Mr. Hundley the nominee of the convention.

Killed by a Dummy.

A distressing accident occurred at Gate City Monday night, in which Mr. J. G. Morgan, a teacher at that place, lost his life under the wheels of a dummy coach. The train was under control of Conductor W. S. Sigsby and Engineer James Wright. Mr. Morgan was a passenger returning from Birmingham. The train had pulled up past the main line at Gate City terminus and had come to a halt in order that the fireman who had stepped off at the proper place might throw a switch. Conductor Sigsby was on the front end of the car and when he got a signal of all right from the fireman, ordered the engineer to back up. The train commenced backing on the "Y," as is the custom, no stop being made for passengers to alight until reaching the station back on the track of the "Y." Just after the train started back a man was seen to tumble from the back platform of the car directly in front of the cars moving backwards. The train was brought to a stop as quickly as possible and an investigation showed Mr. Morgan under the wheels. The wounds consisted of his right leg being crushed and his right side and head mashed. Death came in thirty minutes after the accident. Mr. Morgan was quite an old man, being about 65 years of age. He has a wife living, it is stated, but no children.

NEWBERNE THRASHER CAUGHT.

Bad Bart's Younger Brother Languishes in Jail.

Newberne Thrasher, younger brother of Bart Thrasher, the noted outlaw, was captured in the neighborhood of Pratt City early Monday morning by C. H. Cole and Deputy Sheriff Ball. Thrasher was carried and put in the county jail. On the docket opposite his name was written: "Murder; wanted in Bibb county." Newberne Thrasher, it will be remembered, was arrested some months ago in Bibb county on the charge of the murder of a negro and brought to this county for safe keeping. He was taken back to Bibb county and, it is stated, had a preliminary trial and was discharged. It is said that the grand jury have since found a true bill against him for the above alleged crime and it was upon a capias upon that indictment, it is stated, that he was arrested. He will be taken to Bibb county to stand trial. Mr. Cole is one of the posse who slew Elisha Thrasher, another brother of the outlaw, and whom, it is stated, Bart has sworn to kill for that reason.

TENNESSEE'S YOUNG BAPTISTS.

The State Convention In Session at Chattanooga.

The state convention of young Baptists of Tennessee was called to order Friday at the First Baptist church in the city of Chattanooga by Dr. George A. Lofton, of Nashville. After a scriptural lesson had been read by Dr. E. E. Falk, Dr Lofton made the introductory address. He paid a glowing tribute to the enterprise and progressiveness of the young Baptists of Chattanooga. He gave a history of the movement to organize a state union, and spoke of the benefits that would accrue from such an organization.

At the conclusion of Dr. Lofton's address the question of organizing a state union and the adoption of a constitution was considered, and it was finally decided to organize at once. Dr. M. D. Jeffreys, of Knoxville, was elected chairman of the convention, and Emmet H. Rolston, of Knoxville, was elected president of the union for the ensuing year, and E. H. Rolston, of Chattanooga, was made secretary.

At Saturday's session the organization was completed by electing the following officers: Vice-Presidents—For East Tennessee, Rev. B. B. Garrett, of Chattanooga; for Middle Tennessee, J. O. Bush, of Nashville; for West Tennessee, W. T. McCullough, of Memphis. Stacy Lord, of Chattanooga, was elected treasurer. The following executive board, with headquarters at Chattanooga, was chosen: R. F. Motley, of Cleveland; C. C. Pierce, of Chattanooga; F. B. Stapp, of Chattanooga; W. A. Moffit, of Hill City, and Phil McGuire, of St. Elmo. The place for the next meeting was left to the selection of the executive board, and after discussing matters relative to the success of the newly formed organization, adjournment was had, the date of the next meeting to be announced later.

ON JESSE JAMES' PREMISES

The Skeleton of a Man Found While Excavating.

A St. Joseph, Mo., special to the St. Louis Republic says: A big sensation was produced here today by the finding of a skeleton on the premises occupied by Jesse James in this city at the time of his tragic death at the hands of Bob Ford. The James house is located on an eminence in the southern part of the city. While excavating in the rear of the lot today, James Kelly, a teamster, dug out the skeleton of a man. It is presumed that either some offending member of the gang was planted or some detective who paid the penalty of his intrepidity. The James house remains intact as it was the day Jesse James was shot. This is the first change or improvement made on the premises since. The skeleton was about five feet under ground. An investigation will be made.

ACCIDENTALLY KILLED.

A Cartridge Substituted for a Dummy in Working a Hotchkiss Gun.

Charles B. Miller, a popular young member of the Lafayette artillery, naval reserves, was fatally shot by a comrade in the company's hall, at Charleston, S. C., about 9 o'clock Monday night. The company had assembled for a supper and while waiting for some guests the workings of the Hotchkiss cannon were being executed. A cartridge was accidentally substituted for a dummy, and Miller, who was standing near the gun, was pierced by a 44-calibre ball. died in a few minutes.

Alabama at Tennessee's Centennial.

H. L. McKee, of Selma, Ala., president of the Alabama Commercial association, composed of the local commercial and industrial bodies of that city, returned from a tour embracing the principal mining and manufacturing centers to work up an interest in an exhibit of Alabama products and minerals at the Tennessee centennial. He will call a meeting in Birmingham at an early day to formulate plans for the consummation of the work. An agricultural exhibit is also contemplated. President McKee reports that he met with great encouragement everywhere and the exhibit will undoubtedly be made.

A Georgia Schoolhouse Burned.

The new schoolhouse, in course of erection, at Tennille, Ga., was entirely destroyed by fire at 2 o'clock Saturday morning, as was also the old schoolhouse adjoining. Work was almost completed, but had stopped for the past two weeks on account of a flaw in the bonds. The fire caught in the cupola and was beyond aid when discovered. It was the work of an incendiary. Insurance, $5,000. The house was being erected at the builder's risk by H. D. Atkinson, contractor. No clew.

Fire at Yorkville, S. C.

The house of Mr. S. R. Moore, one of the prettiest of the ante-bellum frame mansions of which this town is so proud, was destroyed by fire Saturday morning. The fire originated in the kitchen at about 2 o'clock. Owing to the state of water pressure and the small size of the main at that particular point, the fire department was unable to accomplish much. The loss amounts to about $3,000, with no insurance.

MR. BRYAN'S LETTER

Of Acceptance to the Notification Committee.

A CLEAN CUT, TERSE DOCUMENT.

He Stands Squarely Upon Every Plank of the Chicago Platform and Discusses it Pointedly and Briefly—The Party's Position Very Clearly Put.

Lincoln, Nebraska, September 9.—Mr. Bryan made public his letter of acceptance of the Democratic nomination today. Its full text is as follows:

Hon. Stephen M. White and other members of the Notification Committee of the Democratic Party.:

Gentlemen:—I accept the nomination tendered by you on behalf of the Democratic party, and in so doing desire to assure you that I fully appreciate the high honor which such a nomination confers and the grave responsibilities which accompany an election to the Presidency of the United States. So deeply am I impressed with the magnitude of the power vested by the constitution in the Chief Executive of the Nation and with the enormous influence which he can wield for the benefit or injury of the people that I wish to enter the office, if elected, free from any personal desire, except the desire to prove worthy of the confidence of my country.

Human judgment is fallible enough when unbiased by selfish consideration and in order that I may not be tempted to use the patronage of an office to advance any personal ambition, I hereby announce, with all the emphasis which words can express, my fixed determination not, under any circumstances to be a candidate for re-election in case the campaign results in my election. I have carefully considered the platform adopted by the Democratic National Convention and unqualifiedly endorse every plank thereon.

OUR INSTITUTIONS.

Our institutions rest upon the position that all men being created equal are entitled to equal consideration at the hands of the government. Because all men are created equal follows that no citizen has a right to injure another citizen. The main purpose of government being to protect all citizens in the enjoyment of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, this purpose must lead the government, first, to avoid acts of affirmative injustice, and, second, to restrain each citizen from trespassing upon the rights of any other citizen. A Democratic form of government is conducive to highest civilization because it opens before each individual the greatest opportunities for development and stimulates to the highest endeavor by insuring to each the full enjoyment of all the rewards of toil, except such contribution as is necessary to support the government which protects him. Democracy is indifferent to pedigree—it deals with the individual rather than with his ancestors. Democracy ignores differences in wealth; neither riches nor poverty can be invoked in behalf of or against any citizen. Democracy knows no creed—recognizing the right of each individual to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, it welcomes all to a common brotherhood and guarantees equal treatment to all, no matter in what character or through what forms they commune with their Creator.

Having discussed portions of the platform at the time of its adoption and again when its letter of notification was formally delivered, it will not be necessary at this time to touch upon all the subjects embraced in its declarations. Honest differences of opinion have ever existed and ever will exist as to the most effective means of securing domestic tranquility, but no citizen fails to recognize at all times and under all circumstances the absolute necessity for the prompt and vigorous enforcement of law and the preservation of the public peace. In a government like ours law is but the crystallization of the will of the people; without it the citizen is neither secure in the enjoyment of life and liberty, nor protected in the pursuit of happiness. Without obedience to law, government is impossible. The Democratic party is pledged to defend the constitution and enforce the laws of the United States and it is also pledged to protect and defend the dual scheme of government instituted by the founders of the Republic. The name United States was happily chosen. It combines the idea of national strength with the idea of local self-government, and suggests "an indissoluble union of indestructible States."

LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT.

Our wise forefathers fearing the tendency toward centralization, as well as the dangers of disintegration, guarded against both, and national safety as well as domestic security is to be found in the careful observance of the limitations which they impose. It will be noticed that while the United States guarantees to every State a reform of government and is empowered to protect each State against invasion, it is not authorized to interfere in the domestic affairs of any State, except upon application of the Legislature of the State, or upon the application of the executive when the Legislature cannot be convened. This provision rests upon the sound theory that the people of the State, acting through their legally chosen representatives are, because of their more intimate acquaintance with local conditions, better qualified than the President to judge of the necessity for federal interference. Those who framed our constitution wisely determined to make an application of the principles of local self-government as circumstances would permit and we cannot dispute the correctness of the position taken by them without expressing a distrust of the people themselves.

ECONOMY.

Since governments exist for the protection of the rights of the people and not for their spoliation, no expenditure of public money can be justified unless that expenditure is necessary for the honest economical administration of the government. In determining what appropriations are necessary the interests of those who pay the taxes should be consulted rather than the wishes of those who receive or disburse public money.

BONDS.

An increase in the bonded debt of the United States at this time is entirely without excuse. The issue of interest-bearing bonds within the last few years has been defended on the ground that they were necessary to secure gold with which to redeem United States notes and treasury notes; but this necessity has been imaginary rather than real. Instead of exercising the legal right vested in the United States to redeem its bonds in either gold or silver, the executive branch of the government has followed a precedent established by a former administration and surrendered the option to the holder of the obligations.

This administrative policy leaves the government at the mercy of those who find pecuniary profit in bond issues. The fact that the dealers in money and securities have been able to deplete or protect the treasury according to their changing whims shows how dangerous it is to permit them to exercise a controlling influence over the treasury department. The government of the United States when administered in the interest of all the people is able to establish and maintain its own financial policy, not only without the aid of any syndicates, but in spite of any opposition which the syndicates may exert. To assert that the government is dependent upon the assistance or good will of a portion of the people other than a constitutional majority, is to assert that we have a government in form, but without vital force.

NATIONAL BANK CURRENCY.

The position taken by the platform against the issue of paper money by national banks is supported by the highest Democratic authority, as well as demanded by the interests of the people. The present attempt of the national banks to force the retirement of United States notes and treasury notes in order to secure a basis for a larger issue of their own notes illustrates the danger which arises from permitting them to issue their paper as a circulating medium. The national bank note being redeemable in lawful money has never been better than the United States note, which stands behind it and yet the banks persistently demand that these United States notes which draw no interest shall give place to interest-bearing bonds in order that the banks may collect the interest which the people now save. To empower national banks to issue circulating notes is to grant a valuable privilege to a favored class, surrender to private corporations the control over the volume of paper money, and build up a class which will claim a vested interest in the national financial policy.

The United States notes, commonly known as greenbacks, being redeemable in either gold or silver at the option of the government, and not at the option of the holder, are safer and cheaper for the people than the national bank notes based upon interest-bearing bonds.

THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

A dignified but firm maintenance of the foreign policy first set forth by President Monroe and reiterated by the Presidents who have succeeded him, instead of arousing hostility abroad, is the best guarantee of amicable relations with other nations. It is better for all concerned that the United States should resist any extension of European authority in the western hemisphere rather than invite the continual irritation which would necessarily result from any attempt to increase the influence of monarchial institutions over that portion of America which has been dedicated to republican government.

PENSIONS.

No nation can afford to be unjust to its defenders. The care of those who have suffered in the military and naval service of the country is a sacred duty. A nation which, like the United States, relies upon volunteer service rather than upon a large standing army, adds to its own security when it makes generous provision for those who have risked their lives in its defense and for those who are dependent upon them.

THE PRODUCERS OF WEALTH.

Labor creates capital. Until wealth is produced by application of brain and muscle to the resources of this country, there is nothing to divide among the non-producing classes of society. Since the products of wealth create the nation's prosperity in time of peace and defend the nation's flag in time of peril their interests ought at all times to be considered by those who stand in official positions. The Democratic party has ever found its voting strength among those who are proud to be known as the common people, and it pledges itself to propose and enact such legislation as is necessary to protect the masses in the free exercise of every political right and in the enjoyment of their just share of the rewards of their labor.

ARBITRATION.

I desire to give special emphasis to the plank which recommends such legislation as is necessary to secure the arbitration of differences between employers engaged in interstate commerce and their employes. Arbitration is not a new idea—it is simply an extension of the court of justice. The laboring men of the country have expressed a desire for arbitration, and the railroads cannot reasonably object to the decisions rendered by an impartial tribunal. Society has an interest even greater than the interest of employes and has a right to protect itself by courts of arbitration against the growing inconvenience and embarrassments occasioned by disputes by those who own the great arteries of commerce on the one hand and the laborers who operate them upon the other.

IMMIGRATION.

While the Democratic party welcomes to the country those who come with love for our institutions and with determination and ability to contribute to the prosperity of our nation, it is opposed to the dumping of criminal classes upon our shores and to the importation of either pauper or contract labor to compete with American labor.

INJUNCTIONS.

The recent abuses which have grown out of injunction proceedings have been so emphatically condemned by public opinion that the Senate bill providing for trial by jury in certain contempt cases will meet with general approval.

TRUSTS.

The Democratic party is opposed to trusts. It would be recreant to its duty to the people of the country if it recognized either the moral or the legal right of these great aggregations of wealth to stifle competition, bankrupt rivals and then prey upon society. Corporations are the creatures of law and they must not be permitted to pass from under the control of the power which created them; they are permitted to exist upon the theory that they advance the public weal, and they must not be allowed to use their powers for public injury.

RAILROADS.

The right of the United States Government to regulate interstate commerce cannot be questioned, and the necessity for the vigorous exercise of that right is becoming more and more imperative. The interests of the whole people require such an enlargement of the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission as will enable it to prevent discrimination between persons and places, and protect patrons from unreasonable charges.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

The government cannot not afford to discriminate between its debtors, and must, therefore, prosecute its legal claims against the Pacific railroads. Such a policy is necessary for the protection of the rights of the patrons as well as for the interests of the government.

CUBA.

The people of the United States, happy in the enjoyment of the blessings of free government, feel a generous sympathy toward all who are endeavoring to secure like blessings for themselves. This sympathy while respecting all treaty obligations is especially active and earnest when excited by the struggling of neighboring peoples, who, like the Cubans, are near enough to observe the workings of a government which derives all its authority from the consent of the governed.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

That the American people are not in favor of life tenure in the civil service is evident from the fact that they, as a rule, make frequent changes in their official representative when those representatives are chosen by ballot. A permanent office-holding class is not in harmony with our institutions. A fixed term in appointive offices, except where the Federal constitution now provides otherwise, would open the public service to a larger number of citizens without impairing its efficiency.

THE TERRITORIES.

The territorial form of government is temporary in its nature and should give way as soon as the territory is sufficiently advanced to take its place among the States. New Mexico, Oklahoma and Arizona are entitled to Statehood and their early admission is demanded by their material and political interests. The demand of the platform that officials appointed to administer the government of the territories, the District of Columbia and Alaska should be bona fide residents of the territories or districts is entirely in keeping with the Democratic theory of home rule. I am also heartily in sympathy with the declaration that all public lands should be reserved for the establishment of free homes for American citizens.

WATERWAYS.

The policy of improving the great waterways of the country is justified by the national character of these waterways and the enormous tonnage borne upon them. Experience has demonstrated that continuing appropriations are in the end more economical than single appropriations separated by long intervals.

THE TARIFF.

It is not necessary to discuss the tariff question at this time. Whatever may be the individual views of citizens as to the relative merits of protection and tariff reform, all must recognize that until the money question is fully and finally settled, the American people will not consent to the consideration of any other important question. Taxation presents a problem which in some form is continually present, and a postponement of definite action upon it involves no sacrifice of personal opinion or political principles; but the crisis presented by financial conditions cannot be postponed. Tremendous results will follow the action taken by the United States on the money question and delay is impossible. The people of this nation, sitting as a high court, must render judgment in the cause which greed is prosecuting against humanity. The decision will either give hope and inspiration to those who toil or "shut the doors of mercy on mankind."

In the presence of this overshadowing issue, differences of opinion upon minor questions must be laid aside in Killed a Drunken Brute.

John Theurer, who keeps a blacksmith shop in New York city shot and instantly killed Michael Murphy, a drink-crazed man who staggered into his house Monday. Murphy attacked Mrs. Theurer and her sister, Mrs. Kate Steigner, and tried to throw them down stairs. Theurer was defending the woman and himself when the shot was fired, according to all the testimony.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

Mrs. L. H. Lyman and daughter, Miss Hattie, left Tuesday evening for Connecticut, where they will spend a month with friends and relatives.

Dr. Trammell was shaking hands with friends here last week. The Dr. has moved from Blocton to Gurnee.

Mrs. Hoskins, Mr. and Mrs. Cobb, Misses Stein and Lewis, and Messrs. Ed and Joe Hoskins, of Aldrich, came in to hear Dr. Eager Tuesday evening.

We clip the following from the Birmingham News. Miss Helvenston is very pleasantly remembered by a score of friends made while visiting here: "Miss Minnie Helvenston, who has been the guest of Miss Lena North, on Third avenue and Twenty-third street, for several days, left for her home in Florida, taking with her the good wishes of a large circle of friends made during her visit."

Why are some of the property owners of our town trying to run the thing in the ground now, just because houses are in such demand? Some of them, we notice, are asking three prices for their houses. Now if you ever want Montevallo to amount to anything, don't try to rob people by charging such exorbitant prices for your old houses which have stood for lo these many years, and last year you were glad enough to get $5 per month for them and now you want $15. The future of our town is now brighter than ever before in its history. Will you check the progress by putting such a price on your property that the people for whom this school was inaugurated cannot afford to pay? Don't do that, but let's all pull together "for once" in the history of Montevallo and try to be at least reasonable. Don't think that in twelve months that we will have electric car lines or a population of fifty thousand and that your old red hill will soon be worth $500 per square foot, for if you do we are sure you will soon realize "What fools we mortals be."

Work on the Industrial school building is still progressing rapidly. Under the management of Mr. Pulls the old building will soon have a different appearance and be ready for the many pretty girls who are coming here to enter the school.

Mr. H. G. Fancher is to build another story to his house.

Miss Pauline Acker is visiting friends and relatives near Helena.

Dr. Eager, of Montgomery, delivered a very able sermon at the Baptist church Tuesday evening.

The monthly business meeting of the Y. P. S. C. E. was held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. T. M. Allen Monday evening. New officers were elected and the usual routine of business gone through with.

We regret to learn that Mr. H. C. Fancher will soon leave us and move to Six Mile.

Mrs. Bost calls on her customers to come and inspect her line of millinery, which she will sell at very low prices.

Miss Daisy Canterberry, who went up to Columbiana to be present at the marriage of Mr. James Dykes, returned home Saturday.

It looks as if Montevallo will be well represented at Howard College this year.

We hear that the Baptist church will soon be repainted.

At the close of a protracted meeting at the A. M. E. church Sunday, fifteen were baptized.

James Wooley, of Starksburg, paid us a visit one day last week.

Mrs. Gaylard, of Brierfield, quietly passed away Friday, after a long and painful illness, and was buried Saturday in the Brierfield cemetery.

Rev. Harry Wheeler, of Birmingham, who has a host of friends here who are always glad to see him, preached at the Methodist church Sunday morning, and, as usual, delivered a very excellent sermon. Mr. Wheeler is now conducting a series of meetings at Concord and we wish him the greatest success.

We regret exceedingly to chronicle the illness of Brother Abernathy and hope he will soon recover.

Messrs. James and Phelan Oakley, of Ashby, were in the city Saturday.

W. A. Brown, of Selma, was among the visitors here last week.

Messrs. Henry Latham, Jr., and Henry Fancher represented Montevallo at the Shelby county Baptist association last week.

Mrs. Augusta Wilson and Joseph Peter, Jr., are visiting Columbiana this week.

P. O. West made the sun shine brighter in our town by a visit a few days since.

Miss Bessie McCary, who has been on a visit to friends and relatives at Maplesville, returned home a few days since.

Mrs. M. E. Hargrove has returned to her home in Tuskaloosa, after spending a few days in our city.

Miss Lennie Curry, who has been here for quite a while taking music lessons, has returned to her home. While here Miss Lennie made scores of friends, who very reluctantly bade her good-bye.

Mrs. J. L. McConaughy has returned home after a very pleasant visit to Anniston.

Sheriff Kennedy, of Dallas county, was released on a plea of insanity. The News readers are already familiar with the charge against Mr. Kennedy.

The young ladies of the Methodist church are requested to meet at Mrs. C. W. Cary's this afternoon for the purpose of organizing a Young Lady's Aid society. All the young ladies of the church are earnestly requested to be present.

The Christian Endeavor continues to do good work. This is indeed a great work in which all should feel an interest.

Mr. Charles Lenoir, the popular salesman of the old and reliable firm of Cawthon and Coleman, of Selma, was in the city one day last week.

Mrs. McCauley says she will have the prettiest line of millinery this fall that has ever been brought to Montevallo.

Miss Ethel McMath is at home again after a week's absence.

Mr. S. S. Allen, the efficient manager of H. C. & W. B. Reynold's "Smith Hill" store at Blocton, spent Sunday in our town en route to New York to buy his fall and winter stock. Sam is a hustler and we predict that his many customers will have the choicest lot of goods to select from that has ever been brought to Blocton.

The farmers know a good thing when they see it, consequently they are rushing in here from every direction with cotton and other produce. Montevallo has made a record as a cheap market which she is going to hold and this year will be a record breaker for goods will be sold there cheaper than ever before.

Several deaths are reported in Calera last week.

The time is near at hand for the Industrial school to open, and from reports we are lead to believe that the town will be full of pretty girls. But while reading over the announcement we were very forcibly struck with the following: "The young ladies will not be allowed to receive the attention of young men at any time." Some of the boys are not half as anxious for it to open as they were before seeing this.

It is rumored that the Knights of Pythias will give an entertainment of some kind. If there's anything to eat in it, brothers, please don't forget us.

News comes to us that those in charge of the meeting at Concord are meeting with great success.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

We, your committee, appointed to draft resolutions in memory of one of our teachers of Six Mile Cumberland Presbyterian Sunday school, beg leave to report the following:

Whereas, It has pleased our Heavenly Father to remove from our midst our much esteemed friend and teacher, Miss Battie Trott, who departed this life August 26, 1896, and

Whereas, From our association with her during this life, we had learned to appreciate her great local and moral worth.

Therefore be it resolved, That in the death of our sister and teacher the Sunday school has lost one of its most devoted members, one whose seat was never vacant unless kept away by sickness—one who was always delighted to work for the school.

2. That we will keep in remembrance the history of our much esteemed friend and teacher, ever keeping before us the fact of her beautiful promptness and praiseworthy devotion to God's cause and especially to her duty in the Sabbath school.

3. That we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well, feeling comforted by the blessed assurance that our loss is her eternal gain, for the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away, blessed be the name of the Lord.

That we tender to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy in the sad hour of their afflictions and pray that he who said, "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God," may lead them safely along the path of life and finally receive them in an unbroken family in the haven of eternal rest.

That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the family and also a copy be sent the Montevallo News and Alabama Baptist.

FRANK PARKER.

Little Frank, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Parker, after a lingering illness, fell asleep in Jesus September 4. For seven years the tender bud had been watched with all the love and solicitude of devoted parents. But as the frosty breath of autumn began to wither the sweet flowers of earth, the chilled hand of the dark-winged angel touched this pure white blossom and the child slept.

His little mission here how well fulfilled!
What sweetness round his memory twines!
The light his childish presence ever gave,
How radiant and beautiful it shines.
God comfort you and bless you here on earth,
And help you bear your burden great,
Until heaven's glory gleams upon your sight,
And Frank meets you at Golden Gate.

We wonder why a poor, sad-hearted little girl stands at the window just at twilight and sings: "His Noble Form I Cannot See?"

Mr. J. S. Little, of Bismarck, is coal mining at Mayline, and Jim says it is "nights of labor and days of labor, too."

NO BATTLE ABBEY.

The Rouss Movement Takes the Form of the "Confederate Institute."

The movement inaugurated by Chas. B. Rouss to perpetuate the history of the Southern Confederacy was promoted by the action of the board of trustees, whose first session was brought to a close Thursday night on Lookout mountain, near Chattanooga. The idea of a battle abbey has been abandoned as impracticable, and the structure to be erected will be called the "Confederate Memorial Institute." Col. Robert C. Wood of New Orleans, will continue to act as general manager. The Fourth National Bank of of Nashville will be designated as treasurer and depository of funds. General Jackson of Tennessee, Col. Robert White of West Virginia, General Briggs of Kentucky, and General Ross of Texas, were constituted an executive committee. The plan for raising the necessary funds provides for the appointment of agents in each county to make a thorough canvass in every state in the south. Fifteen states, the District of Columbia, Oklahoma and Indian Territory are represented on the board. The charter holds good for fifty years. It is estimated that the institute will involve an outlay of at least $50,000 before its completion. Its chief mission will be educational in character by collecting together the correct facts at issue in the history of the late war. The location of the memorial hall will not be considered until after the money has been raised.

Leg Cut Off.

Mr. James Forbes, foreman of the government works at Riverton, Ala., was struck by a passing freight train Saturday in the yards of the old Sheffield railway at Bridgeton. His left leg was thrown under the wheels and severed just below the knee. Mr. Forbes was taken to his hotel almost immediately, and surgical attention was given him. It is thought his wound will not be fatal.

THE STATE NORMAL COLLEGE, TROY, ALA.

This college is supported by state and Peabody fund appropriations for the training of teachers and is not a mere "Preparatory School" for some other, but is of college grade in every way, as a teachers' training school should be, and grants college degrees and diplomas, and its graduates receive state certificates for two, four and six years, or for life, from the state superintendent of education of Alabama, and these are the strongest testimonials of professional worth to a teacher. Indeed, the graduates of this college are in great demand as teachers and the college authorities take great pleasure in answering requests for trained teachers sent in by school authorities from all over Alabama and adjoining states.

It will be seen from the Normal Exponent that students desiring the usual college course may get it here at very low expense, too. Board is but $8 to $10 per month and tuition and incidentals low.

Persons desiring information as to this college or wishing to secure a good teacher should write to Dr. E R. Eldridge, president, at Troy, Ala., for the Normal Exponent explaining every thing.

AN OPEN LETTER

From Dr. Eldridge to Alabama School Teachers and Others.

STATE NORMAL COLLEGE, Troy, Ala., Sept. 8, 1896.

The State Normal college, at Troy, grateful for the increasing confidence and support of the state and the Peabody board, desires to show their gratitude by extending the benefits of teacher training to counties remote from the college, in order to equalize, as far as possible, the advantages of the college for the training of teachers for our public schools. They therefore propose the following plan to-wit:

A. To issue to each representative the authority to nominate one or more teachers, from his county; preference being given to superiority of certificate, or license, in selecting between rival candidates, the county superintendent of education attesting such superiority of qualification and endorsing one such nomination to the state superintendent of education, who may, if his judgment so approve, issue a full tuition and incidental scholarship for two years, valid so long as the holder may continue in attendance within the two years, under the laws, rules and regulations governing the college. Forfeitures and expirations of such scholarships under college law, rules, etc., to be entered upon the college books, and due notice given the state superintendent of education, who may cause the place to be given to teachers already in attendance from the given counties, who shall always be given preference over all others, or filled again, in the manner before mentioned; Provided, That no appointment to such scholarships shall be made from any county adjoining Pike county, wherein is located the State Normal college, nor from any county adjoining such counties, or in which is located any state educational institution.

B. To issue to each senator the authority to nominate one or more candidates for a one half tuition, incidental and board scholarship, all of which shall be valued at twelve dollars per month, that when presented with the balance of $12 ($6) per month in a cash payment for one term in advance, shall entitle the holder to be enrolled term by term, during the limit of his scholarship; Provided, That such senatorial one half scholarships shall be governed by all the conditions of appointment and tenure by the provisions of representative scholarships, before mentioned, under A.

C. Nominees for benefices should at once file their certificate of nomination by the representative or senator with the county superintendent of education, and the successful applicants, on receiving their appointment by the state sueprintendent, should report at the college on the day and date specified in the certificate of appointment from the state superintendent, equipped as per directions following this, viz:

A. Persons accorded representative scholarships will receive tuition and incidentals, free, under college regulations. They should bring such books as they may have on the course they expected to study, but are not advised to buy any new books until they find out just what they need.

C. Senatorial scholarships entitle to one-half tuition, incidentals and board at table and all necessary heavy furniture. Students need to furnish their own bedding, fuel, lights and toilet arrangements.

Send for applications at once and apply to your representative or senator.

Issued by authority of the State Normal College, the state superintendent, Hon. John O Turner, Montgomery, Ala., approving.

Attest: E. R. ELDRIDGE, Pres., Troy, Ala.

ADVERTISES HIS INJURY.

A Kansas Farmer Bound to "Get Back" With the Railroad.

Farmer Jake Stoddard of Doniphan County, Kansas, believes in telling the world of his grievance. He has been wronged and he is determined that all who whirl by his house on the Burlington road shall know all about it. Uncle Jake's troubles are told by a signboard which stads near his house by the side of the railroad tracks. The passenger on the Burlington, if he is a lover of the romantic scenery which abounds in northwestern Kansas, may observe form the car window as the train from Atchison approaches Fanning station a large sign covering a board one by five feet, nailed to a pole twelve feet high, which reads:

This Man Has Been Wronged By The Railroads.

When the road was built it suited the convenience of the company, according to a local correspondent, to lay the track within ten feet of the corner of Farmer Stoddard's house. The construction gang plowed through his barnyard, removed his hen house and cut a wide swath through a fine young orchard which was the pride of Farmer Stoddard's heart. The agriculturist fixed his damage at a high figure! so high in fact, that the company compelled him to go into court and take what he regarded as a ridiculous sum.

It was not long until the trains were running. When the first excursion steamed out of Atchison the passengers, when the train reached Farmer Stoddard's place, observed the sign in bold, black letters, with a background as white as snow. Stoddard had painted the sign himself, and, while it was not executed in the highest style of the art, it could be distinctly read.

Farmer Stoddard has raised a large family of boys and he has taught them to hate corporations. Not less than a half dozen dogs of a doubtful breed can always be found on the Stoddard place. The dog, too, are taught to hate the railroad, and when a train passes the entire pack runs out and barks at it. The old farmer feels that he is in a measure getting even. Brakemen on freight trains have great sport throwing pieces of coal at the dogs as the train passes. Stoddard figures that he gathers up almost enough coal around his premises to keep one stove running through the winter.

This Rat Catches Birds.

A rat that catches and eats birds is the latest novelty on the West Side. Under a sidewalk at Twelfth and Loomis streets lives a rat. From the size of the rodent and his gray whiskers it is evidently an old resident in the neighborhood. Unlike some other rats, it does not depend on cheese and bread for his living, but prefers a nice, juicy sparrow.

On the corner stands a building occupied as a saloon, and in front of the saloon is a watering trough, where teamsters allow their horses to slake their thirst. The teamsters also find the place a very convenient one to feed their horses while they sample the proprietor's free lunch and lager beer. As a result, the pavement is thickly strewn with oats pushed out of the feeding sacks by the hungry horses.

An army of sparrows has been attracted to the place, and each morning the pavement is covered with the little fellows eating their breakfast.

The rat, having cultivated a taste for sparrows, now has one for breakfast every day. Hangers-on around the place have come to watch the manoeuvres of the rat every morning. Soon after daylight the sparrows make their appearance, and the rat slyly crawls out of its hole. After looking around to see that the coast is clear the rat selects a plump sparrow, and, while the bird is busy filling its crop, the rat makes a spring and secures its prey.

The bird is dragged under the sidewalk, and nothing more is seen of the rat until the following morning, when he comes out for a fresh victim. So expert has the rat become that those who have seen it say it can catch and kill a bird as cleverly as a cat.—Chicago Chronicle

Lumber Used in Box Making.

In a discussion of the amount of lumber consumed in the making of boxes, Barrel and Box, a paper recently started at Louisville, is authority for the statement that a certain Chicago soap concern uses every year $105,000 worth of white pine soap boxes in Chicago and $80,000 worth of cottonwood boxes at St. Louis. The total number of boxes used by this company last year was 1,541,666. Another Chicago concern uses 1,500,000 boxes every year. The firm operates its own box factory at Rhinelander, Wis. There are fifty other soap manufacturers in this country, and Barrel and Box estimates that altogether 150,000,000 boxes are used in packing soaps alone. Two of the larger soap manufacturers expend each year $400,000 for boxes. If 3,000,000 boxes cost $400,000, 150,000,000 boxes would involve the expenditure of $20,000,000 for soap packages alone. Continuing the calculation through the vast range of packing-box demand, which involves almost every industry known to man, we can imagine how enormous is the expenditure in its grand total, and what an amount of lumber is consumed in its manufacture. It is evident that the making of boxes furnishes the largest percentage of the demand for the coarser and common grades of lumber, and that, as the years pass, there will be a sure outlet for low grade white pine, cottonwood, yellow pine, and all other lumber that can be worked into boxes.—Northwestern Lumberman.

Met an Army of Rattlers.

Mrs. D. O'Dell had an exciting experience with a mass meeting of rattlesnakes on the Eagle Valley road while she was on her way to Highland Falls, N. Y. But for the timely help of Wm. Carpenter, the serpents would undoubtedly have enjoyed a morning meal on the contents of her farm wagon.

Mrs. O'Dell started early in order to avoid the heat. She had several crates of plump chickens which had been ordered by families in the village. Sure-footed and docile as a mountain mule was the pony that carried Mrs. O'Dell and her treasure. Wild birds fluttered and screamed in the dense woods through which the road lay, but the pony heeded them not. Suddenly, when emerging from the Pond road, the animal stood still and seemed stunned with terror. Almost at the same instant a peculiar rattling, rasping sound filled the air, and an army of serpents began crawling toward the wagon.

Mrs. O'Dell thinks there were a hundred snakes advancing to attack the pony. They came from every direction. She almost fainted with terror, while the horse shook almost hard enough to shed his harness. Mrs. O'Dell's voice came to her aid at this trying moment. She screamed loud enough to be heard a mile away.

William Carpenter was driving to his farm when the cries of distress reached him. He was soon on the spot and a lively battle began. The snakes attacked Mrs. O'Dell's horse and tried to get at the chickens. With a stout spade Carpenter slaughtered eight and the rest fled. The horse is still alive, although bitten in a dozen places. The dead snakes are on exhibition in a drug store.—New York Times.

How the Cricket Saved the Ship.

Just as Alvar Nunez's vessels were almost on the rocks a cricket commenced to sing, which cricket a sick soldier had put into the ship at Cadiz, being anxious to hear its music; and for the two months which our navigation had endured no one had heard it, whereat the soldier was much enraged; and as that morning it felt the land (sintio la tierra) it commenced to sing, and its music wakened all the people of the ship, who saw the cliffs, which were distant almost a cross-bow shot from where we were; so we cast our anchors and saved the ship; and it is certain that if the cricket had not sung, all of us 400 soldiers and thirty horses had been lost.

Some of the crew and soldiers accepted the occurrence as a miracle from God, but Nunez himself is silent on this head, being a better observer of natural history than a theologian.

But, "from then and sailing more than a hundred leagues along the coast, always every evening the cricket gave us his music, and thus with it we arrived at a little port beyond Cape Frio, where the Adelantado landed and unfurled his flag, and took possession of the country for his majesty."—Nineteenth Century.

How Muskrats Breathe Under Ice.

W. Spoon, the naturalist, asserts that the muskrat, when obliged to go beneath the ice from one side to the other of a pond, has a curious mod of taking along his air supply. Instinct teaches him to take in a deep breath before starting, but even this he knows will be insufficient for the trip. Accordingly he halts occasionally and exhales the exhausted air from his lungs. This air, being confined by the ice in the shape of a bubble, and in full contact with the icy water, becomes almost instantly reoxygenated. When the transformation is completed the wise rat again takes in his old breath, which is now a fresh inspiration. Thus rejuvenated, he again dives out of sight and begins swimming for the other side, only coming up against the ice as often as it is necessary for him to refreshen that valuable little bit of air. But few hunters and trappers are aware of the muskrat's odd plans of changing his poisonous breath into a fresh inspiration, but those who are take a mean advantage. By striking a heavy blow on the ice the air is dispersed, and the little animal dies of asphyxia.

Alaskans Astonished by Horses.

A prospector in Alaska took some horses with him. At the first Indian village the sight of the horses drove all the dogs howling into the woods. The children dropped their rude playthings and fled crying into the huts. The men and women stood their ground, although in open-eyed wonder. After much inducement they were finally prevailed upon to approach the horses, and their wonder knew no bounds. No amount of persuasion would induce them to mount. These were the first horses they had ever seen.

The movement of the cotton mills to the cotton fields is the logical result of the increased economies that have been enforced on business of every description, and this is a movement that must continue to increase.

Increasing the Issue of Books.

The cheapening of devices for printing has had the effect of increasing the issue of books to a figure never before attained or probably never dreamed of by our ancestors. In 1894, for instance, there were issued in the United States 4,484 new works, while in Great Britain during the same period the new books numbered 5,300, while there were 1,185 new editions of books previously printed, a total of 6,485, and for the two countries of 10,969. It is quite probable that not less than 1,000 copies were printed of each work, and it is more probable that of the whole number not ten will be remembered, even by name, in 1904.

"Uncle Billy" Hubbell of Bath, N. Y.

From the Advocate, Bath, N. Y.

Residents of Bath, N. Y., have taken a great fancy of late to Lake Salubria, which lies just outside the village, and during the past two years a score of new cottages have gone up on its shores. Choice locations are becoming scarce and the early settlers are careful now to keep what dooryard they have left. Your correspondent visited the Lake recently and dropped in to see "Uncle Billy" Hubbell in his comfortable cottage under the pines. Mr. Hubbell established himself at the Lake before the boom commenced, and has one of the prettiest locations there.

Mr. Hubbell said that this was the first spring in twenty years in which he had been free from his old enemy, sciatic rheumatism. He thought he had contracted this disease while running as express messenger on the Erie and other railroads between 1849 and 1859, although he did not feel its acute symptoms until some fifteen years later. Mr. Hubbell is now the second oldest expressman in the United States and recalls many interesting reminiscences of these early days. In 1876 he went to the Western frontier, and has suffered from sciatic rheumatism ever since. Speaking of the many efforts he had made to get relief from this painful ailment, he said that while in New Mexico he visited the Las Vegas and Hamms springs, and later he tried those at Manitou, Colo., and Little Rock, Ark. Coming east he tried the White Sulphur Spring, Ohio, St. Catherine, Can., and Clifton and Avon, in New York, but without being able to get the slightest relief. As he advanced in age, his trouble became more painful. "Why," he exclaimed, pointing to the farm house of William Burleson, about six hundred feet distant, "I would yell so when those twinges caught me that they could hear me down there."

William H. Hallock, owner of Hallock's bank, in Bath, is a nephew of Mr. Hubbell, and last winter he insisted that "Uncle Billy" should try Pink Pills for Pale People for his rheumatism. Mr. Hubbell is free to say that he had no faith in the pills whatever, and only tried them because of the insistence of Mr. Hallock. He had already tried "more than a million remedies" before he came to Pink Pills and as none had rendered him the slightest benefit, he was pretty well discouraged. However, to please Mr. Hallock, he got a box of Pink Pills. Since then (some three or four months), Mr. Hubbell has not felt a single trace of rheumatism, and is now on his fourth box of the pills. He cannot explain how this marvelous relief was effected, but feels sure it was the pills which did it, and is now as enthusiastic in their endorsement as was his nephew, Mr. Hallock. Mr. Hubbell now comes into Bath almost every day, and says he could ride a bicycle if he only had some one to help him on and off.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 22d day of May, 1896.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

VOL. II. MONTEVALLO, ALA., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1896. NO. 23.

The readers of the New York Sunday World were asked recently to send in their idea of the most significant word in the English language. The choice of the greatest number fell upon Life, which is probably the word of deepest meaning to the great majority of people. The word that ranked second was Love, while God and Money each received the same number of votes for third place.

Trials of evil-doers "en masse" are not infrequent in Italy. At Palmi a process was lately going on in which sixty-seven persons were accused of belonging to an association of thieves who infested the district. The accused showed a revolting cynicism, and from the barred dock cast threatening glances at the witnesses, of whom there were forty cited against them. The witnesses for the defence numbered 124.

Some careful experiments which have been made in England prove that the life of a locomotive is about 500,000 "train miles." In other words, that a locomotive of the latest approved pattern will run 500,000 before wearing out so as to be useless. In making this run of 500,000 miles the firebox will have to be renewed three times, the wheel tires five or six times and the crank axles from three to five times.

Gold and silver were first used as money fashioned into rings or beads, which were weighed at each transaction just like flitch or sausage, until it occurred to a genius in Lydia, nearly 8,000 years ago, to cast the metals into disks of convenient size, the public weigher or some other functionary putting his official mark on them as a guarantee of their weight in order to dispense with the use of a scale at each exchange. This is the origin of coin money.

A foreign naval officer of high rank once said that if the United States had not a single warship afloat it still would be a naval power as long as it kept up Annapolis. What this country mostly needs now, and of that there is an imperative need, is an increase in the number of men in the navy, observes the New York Press. At present there are not enough to man the fleet properly. The cost of maintaining a modern navy and keeping it up to the standard is enormous. England's estimate for the naval program of 1895-6 called for $98,000,000.

Hiram S. Maxim, the inventor of the Maxim gun, who is now studying the subject of air ships, writes as follows to the London Times: "I think I am safe in asserting that until a very recent date the greater part of the experimenters on flying machines have been little better than charlatans and mountebanks. It is only recently that men of science have actually taken the matter into hand, and during the last six years a great deal of valuable information has been obtained, not based upon theory, but upon actual experiments. I feel sure that it is now possible to make a successful and practical flying machine which will at least be a valuable adjunct to the offensive and defensive powers of civilized nations who are able to make and operate delicate and complicated machinery."

Near the close of the fifteenth century the greatest of ocean navigators of his time discovered the Western Continent and opened a new field of energy and development to the civilized nations of the earth. As the nineteenth century draws towards its end there are indications, announces the New York Herald, that it will produce a new Columbus, who will show the way to the navigation of the air, as Isabella's admiral led the way to a more extended navigation of the sea. Already some degree of success with flying machines has been achieved, and such men as Maxim, Langley and Chanute are pushing on the trials of their devices for aerial flight. Possibly new inventions in design or the motive power will change the present plans of these experimenters, but enough is now known to enable us to foresee the solution at an early day of the problem of flying through the air in a practical and useful manner.

SMILES AND TEARS.

The smiles that light some kindred face,
To cheer us when by sorrow bowed,
Are like the glory beams that chase
The darkness from the summer cloud;
Dear, radiant gleamings of the soul,
The sunshine of affection's sky,
They lift the heart from grief's control
And wipe the tear from sorrow's eye.

The tear-drops on some kindred cheek,
When joy is mingled with despair,
Our spirits' gloom can lift and break,
And leave joy's light unclouded there;
Can lift and thrill the trembling heart,
And soothe us in life's saddest hours,
And sparkle on the soul as clear
As dews that sleep on fainting flowers.

Love's holy smile and Pity's tear,
Like angel footprints from the skies,
They lift us o'er the mortal sphere,
And give us gleams of Paradise.
Oh, Smiles and Tears, by these a'one,
Had we no higher rapture given,
The heart might hope for glory's zone—
The soul might wing its way to heaven!

—C. D. Stuart, in Ledger.

BATTERSBY'S FORTUNE.

THE High street of Moxford was interested this June day in the funeral of old Carmel Battersby, whose picturesque hobble and long gray locks would never again enliven the street.

He had kept the curiosity shop for about fifty years. The old spinning wheels, sparrow-legged chairs, carved oak bureaus, china, of all sorts, war medals, watches, coins, etc., would, no doubt, now go to the hammer. Moxford would miss the attractive window of No. 59 almost as much as the quaint form of its late owner.

Peter Battersby and Mrs. Peter were early on the scene, in decent black.

They had extremely comfortable expectations. To be sure, for the last ten years they had not interchanged many words with the late Carmel, who was Peter's only brother; but as Mrs. Peter remarked when the news of her brother-in-law's death arrived, "he couldn't for shame leave his money to any one else."

Young Walter Battersby, Mr. and Mrs. Peter's only son, did not conceal his joy in his uncle's demise. He told his boon companions at the Hen and Chickens that he was in for a good thing.

"Blood, you know, as the saying is, is thicker than water," he said, as he drained his fourth pint on the evening of his avuncular bereavement.

Nor was the three daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Peter without discreet maidenly elation. Their uncle, while he lived, was such a figure that they never called to look at him. Besides, he hadn't a very civil tongue; liked to be caustic about their high-heeled shoes and extensive bonnets and hats, and to be very rude with his inquiries why three Mr. Rights did not press for the honor of their small gloved hands.

It seemed unlikely indeed, that a single tear would be shed for the old curiosity man.

Of course, there was his little servant girl, Joan Smith. But she was only "a workhouse hussy," to borrow Mrs. Peter's elegant expression.

With his usual eccentricity, old Carmel had taken a girl from the Moxford Union after the death of his elderly housekeeper, Mrs. Roberts. Joan was that servant, and she had served him truly for the last six years, being now but twenty-two. A quiet, shrinking, dark-eyed little creature, who had revered her dead master quite unaccountably, and devoted herself to him heart and hand and soul. Save for Seth Perry, who worked for the Moxford tin plate company, she had had no one else to care for.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter found No. 59 nicely prepared for the funeral. There was also a rather clumsy wreath of wild hyacinths and buttercups on the coffin.

"The idea of such a thing as that!" exclaimed Mrs. Peter, touching the wreath with the tip of her parasol.

Joan was near at the time. She burst into tears at these words.

"Please, ma'am," she said. "I should so like it to go with him. I picked them all myself."

"It shall do nothing of the kind, then; and your place is in the kitchen, not in the parlor," retorted Mrs. Peter.

Joan retired, crying bitterly; and Mrs. Peter flung the wreath into a corner.

"The hussy ought not to be allowed to leave this house, Peter," she said severely, "without being searched. The idea of her being with all these valuables—all alone, too."

But Peter was not as cruel as his wife.

"Cameron says she is entirely to be trusted," he replied, "and it's for him to act as he pleases, he says."

Mr. Cameron was the Moxford lawyer who had charge of the old curiosity man's affairs.

Two or three others now arrived, including the lawyer, Mr. Hurst, the Methodist New Connection minister, and old Craven, the silversmith.

Then the High street enjoyed its little sensation as the hearse and three coaches solemnly passed along it to the cemetery on the hill.

Joan viewed the start from the back entry with tearful eyes. She was periodically convulsed with sobs. She watched the procession as long as ever she could. The void in her life was immense.

So much so indeed, that even the soothing voice of Seth Perry, who had come upon her unawares, had no effect on her at first.

"Never you mind, lass," said Seth "things'll all come out right."

She answered him only with tears.

"He's boun' to ha' left you summat, Joan, my lass, to remember him by; and, whether or no, you've only to speak the word, and theer's one as 'll be proud to have you."

"Seth, I can't talk with you now," she said, showing him her damp face and bright eyes.

"Nor come home and take your dinner with my mother, Joan?"

"No, no. I mustn't go yet. They'll turn me out soon, I know; but I must stay till then."

"Well, lass," said Seth, "you know best; but I'm fair aching for you, and this night as is I'll fetch you to home."

He took her in his arms in the passage, up which so many antique articles had traveled during the last half century, and kissed her wet cheeks.

"And now I mun get back to work," he said.

It was a hot day even for June, and when the funeral party re-entered the house, Mrs. Peter's face was extremely red.

Here they were met by Walter Battersby and the three girls.

This was Mrs. Peter's arrangement.

"The more witnesses there are the safer it'll be," she had said, alluding, of course, to the reading of her brother-in-law's will. "Besides," she added, "they may hear something nice for themselves."

As far as he was concerned, however, young Walter had fully intended to be present, even if his father and mother objected.

Joan continued alone in the kitchen. The tramp of strange feet in the room over her did but make fresh tears well up from the bountiful source inside her.

And so the funeral party and the others sat round old Carmel's table and waited for Mr. Cameron to begin. The lawyer did not keep them waiting. He smiled rather dryly and drew forth the paper from its official blue envelope.

Never was there, in Mrs. Peter Battersby's opinion, a more horrid and disgraceful last will and testament.

Certainly, her husband was to receive a fourth of the proceeds of the sale of the deceased's goods; but what was a mere fourth?

The other three-fourths were left—of all things—to the Moxford Union, "to help them to train up more girls like Joan Smith." Those were the very words.

To the three girls of Mr. and Mrs. Peter the three largest mirrors in the establishment of No. 59 were bequeathed without comment. Mr. Walter Battersby was not even mentioned, nor was Mrs. Peters.

Mr. Cameron received a hundred pounds, and so did the deceased's old friend, Mr. Craven.

Lastly, Joan was mentioned. She was to have a year's wages, all the furniture of her own bedroom, and the old scrap book for which she had so often plied scissors and paste, and which contained curious items of newspaper intelligence during the last thirty years.

"There, gentleman and ladies, that is all," said Mr. Cameron; "and now you must excuse me. I leave you with my co-trustee, Mr. Craven."

"One moment, sir," interposed Mr. Peter, to whom his wife had whispered much. "What's become of all his money in the bank? He must have had thousands."

"The balance to his credit on May 31," answered Mr. Cameron, referring to a note, "was just £45 8s, 10d. After the funeral expenses are paid—"

"What's he done with it?" cried Mrs. Peter, redder of face than ever.

"I cannot tell you, madam. Good morning," said the lawyer, who then wisely left them to fight the matter out among themselves. But before he went he, with his own hands, carried to Joan in her kitchen the unwieldy old scrap book, and told her that it was her property as well as the furniture of her room.

"Come, cheer up, my girl," he said at parting. "Your master was fond of you, and he would rather see you bright than downcast. And remember that I am your friend if you should happen to want one."

Joan thanked Mr. Cameron, and then, having reverently kissed the old book, put it one side.

Mrs. Peter, before she parted, thought well to trespass in the kitchen and say some cruel things to Joan. But somehow the girl did not mind them very much now.

Then Seth looked in again, and said she was to come up to his mother's that evening. If she didn't he should fetch her. And to make sure of having her he carried off the big scrap book.

Mrs. Peter Battersby did something else before she left No. 59.

Together with her disappointed son and darling Walter, she climbed the stairs to Joan's little attic, and took a hammer with her.

"It's the very kind of spiteful thing he'd be likely to do," she said, "but I'll not stand it—robbing his own flesh and blood for a workhouse brat."

Mr. Peter left her to her own devices. He, Mr. Craven, and the three vexed (indeed, insulted) girls went away together.

Then Mrs. Peter studiously searched Joan's attic from wall to wall. She turned out the girl's one tin box, looked in the drawer of the washstand, ripped up the palliasse outrageously and threw the straw all about and treated the bolster with equal brutality.

There was also a handsome old oak wardrobe that would have graced even a royal bedchamber. This was for Joan's three or four poor frocks.

It was quite laughable to see how mother and son tapped and probed this antique piece of furniture. They even knocked off the head of a lion in relief at the top of it, to see if there was a secret cavity behind the head.

But the wardrobe taught them no more than the palliasse and the bolster.

"Well, I'm off to the Hen and Chickens," said Walter Battersby at length. "I've had enough of this."

So, too, had Mrs. Peter, for there was not an article in the room that she had not thoroughly tested.

The sun was still well above the cemetery hill when Seth called at No. 59, in his workaday grime and his workaday grease.

"Art ready, my lass?" he inquired of Joan.

The girl began to make excuses.

"It's not right, Seth, to leave the house with no one in it. He wouldn't have liked it," she said.

"It's not right, Joan, to make a promise and not keep it," retorted Seth. "Come, now, I'm not going to leave you to mope your eyes out. Do you mean to make me marry you?"

She was persuaded with difficulty.

Then it was a revelation of character to see how she looked one door after another and pocketed the different keys.

"Anybody 'ud think the things were all yourn, Joan," said Seth admiringly.

"It's the same to me as if they were," she answered, with the tone of fresh tears.

But Seth hurried her off before she could break down again, and soon had her in the little red brick cottage he shared with his mother.

Old Mrs. Perry had, in her younger days, been a servant herself. She had a true woman's sympathy for Joan, and discernment enough to know that her son might do far worse than marry such a girl.

It was as comfortable a meal as any in Moxford, with the cat purring on the hearth all time.

Afterward the talk turned solidly upon old Carmel and his singular bequests to Joan.

"The money and the furniture 'll be useful to you, child," said old Mrs. Perry; "but the idea of leaving you a thing like that!" pointing to the scrap book.

"I used to be so fond of it," stammered Joan. "The times we've sat together, him pasting and me cutting what he'd marked!"

She rose and lifted the big book on the table, untied its strings, and opened it.

"Why, what's this?" exclaimed Seth, as a bank note for £100 appeared.

Joan turned pale as she took it up. It was endorsed on the back: "Pay to Joan Smith and no one else."

Ere they had finished looking through the book they found twenty-one other notes of exactly the same kind.

"They are certainly yours, my girl," said Mr. Cameron, when Joan called on him in the morning; "and I shall have great pleasure in telling Mrs. Peter Battersby what has become of the money to her brother-in-law's credit at the bank."—Cassell's Saturday Journal.

A Colony of Vegetarians.

At Oranienburg, near Berlin, a colony of vegetarians was started some years ago, and is growing slowly but steadily. Founded in 1893 by seven enthusiasts on the subject, there are at present forty-seven homesteads, where thirty-seven families and ten single men have built houses and raised their cabbage. Outside of the vegetables necessary for their own food, they have planted 35,000 fruit trees, and 15,000 berry bushes, and have fenced in the entire property, with a hedge of hazel nuts. From a financial standpoint they are doing very well, because they realize excellent prices for the products of their truck farms, the quality of the vegetables raised by them being the best to be obtained.

How the Illinois Found the Rock.

Dredgers have begun the work of removing what is know as Illinois Rock, which is in the Delaware River, about 3000 feet from the pier head line at South Chester and opposite the new oil dock at that place. The rock is so named because the Red Star Line steamer Illinois some years ago discovered the existence of such an obstruction by striking it.—Philadelphia Ledger.

THE FLORIDA EVERGLADES

A MYSTERIOUS REGION THAT IS STILL UNEXPLORED.

Weird Sights and Sounds Greet All Who Penetrate Its Dense Tangles —Rare Animals and Birds.

THE southern extremity of the peninsula of Florida is one huge marsh of forest, mud and jungle, known as the Everglades. The swamp proper has an area of about 9000 square miles, which is drained by Lake Okechobee, and it covers nearly the entire counties of Dade and Monroe and a portion of Manatee.

The general composition is a wilderness of tangle growth, immense regions of morass, dense stubble of cane and scrub palmetto, and a tropical paradise of sweet shrubs, beautiful flowers and delicate ferns. The swamp is overflowing with animal, reptile and bird life, which here find little to disturb them save the everlasting quarrels among themselves, which often end in their own destruction.

Strange cries are sometimes heard coming from the depths of this inaccessible domain, the fierce lashings of the water, accompanied by savage bellowings and screams from birds in midair, bear testimony to some sanguinary conflict between huge saurians or other brutes of the jungle.

Of animals we know of, the swamp conceals the largest alligators and rattlesnakes on the continent, besides bears, wildcats, deer, wild hogs, catamounts, lizards, chameleons, turtles, gophers, turkeys, quail, many kinds of fish and every species of water fowl known to the tropical regions of the United States.

The largest alligator ever captured of which any record remains was taken in the Everglades nine years ago by an old hunter named Hickman. It measured twenty-two feet six inches from end of nose to tip of tail, and weighed much more than a full-grown ox. The writer has killed rattlesnakes in different parts of the swamp ranging from six to nine feet in length, and saw the skin of one, owned by a Seminole Indian, that must have been twelve feet long in life.

The biggest frogs on earth find a home in the Everglades, and it is not uncommon to run across Jumbos of the family weighing anywhere from six to ten pounds.

The Everglades is the true home of the ivory-billed woodpecker, a bird that is almost a rarity to naturalists and museums. It can be easily located by its call, which sounds very much like the cry of a hurt child.

The Indians have great respect for the bird by reason of its powerful beak, which is used as a mechanical tool or weapon of attack, as occasion may require. The Seminoles, like our Western Indians, must wear a charm of some kind, and the beautiful ivory bill, polished and pierced, answers for them the same symbol as elk teeth do for our Western tribes.

Perhaps the most interesting of all feathered creatures found in this great waste of nature are the family of humming birds, which the Seminoles very suggestively call "sun birds."

The black bear is quite a well-known inhabitant of the Everglades, and while he is, in this section, neither as large nor as fierce or strong as his cousin of other latitudes, yet he surpasses all others of his kind in keen shrewdness, ingenuity and innate rascality when a meal is the object sought for.

The proper time for a white man to visit the available portions of this great swamp is in midwinter, and even then myriads of huge, black mosquitoes assail you at every step, and dangerous reptiles under foot threaten movement in every direction.

But look above on any bright day that you can see the sunlight, and a glance will reveal thousands of busy insects shooting like bullets through the air, and all engaged on a single commendable mission. These are the innumerable colonies of bees that by years of industrious accumulation have made the Everglades the greatest honey depository in the world.

Enterprising settlers near by have set out desirable box homes and workshops for them, and thus secure all the honey they require, with practically little trouble and no expense.

The only human beings that can enter the Everglades, either in the winter or summer, without fear or annoyance or disaster are the Seminole Indians, who claim this vast, dismal waste as their birthright. Mosquitoes and reptiles have few terrors for them, and as for the heat of midsummer, it seems that the hotter it gets the better they like it. There are about 500 of these interesting natives left, who in bands of from forty to fifty have heretofore led a nomadic life, living for the most part by hunting and fishing, and in a few cases cultivating small patches of ground. The bucks also gain a small income by killing and selling "plume birds," and the squaws by weaving fancy basket and fern work from the material so ready at hand.

The Indians live under the name of Seminoles, but each have their own tribal chief under a separate tribal name, such as the "Miamis," "Tallahassees," "Cow Creek," "Cypress," etc., and each is under the control of its own chief, chosen annually at the green corn dance, which is in reality the red man's Christmas, or yearly season of jollity and plenty.

The whole nation, however, acknowledges the general sovereignty of Robert Osceola, a grandson of the famous half-breed Powell, better known as Osceola.

They are clean people, both personally and morally. A marriage between persons having a drop of the same blood in their veins is considered highly improper; and as there are not more than 500 all told, counting men, women and children, a young fellow matrimonially inclined has to do some tall hustling to get a wife.

One well-to-do buck has two rather pretty daughters, who can't get married because all the eligible young men are akin to them. So rigidly is this rule carried out that you may sometimes see a husband of twenty with a sixty-year-old wife, or vice versa. A half-breed is unknown among them. Hunters and sportsmen are gradually encroaching on their rights, and so the Seminole begins to nurture a hatred for the white man, and isolates himself more and more by retiring to the intermost fastnesses of the Everglades, where he chooses to remain in hiding.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

The Melon Tree.

Professor Hilgard of the Agricultural College at the University of California has succeeded in growing melons on a tree. The strange horticultural combinaton is in the university conservatory, and has been photographed and labelled "melon tree" in the album of the Agricultural College. It stands about ten feet high, has large green leaves, and would create wonder in the eyes of any farmer.

Professor Hilgard says that attempts have been made for some time to secure fruit on this particular tree, but all efforts had failed until recently. Among scientific men the tree is known as the papaya, and is a product of the tropics. From it pepsin is extracted, chiefly from the leaves. In California the tree has been fruitful in the open air in Santa Barbara, but none has approached the growth of the specimen at the University of California. Professor Hilgard regards it as one of the most peculiar and interesting illustrations of what can be done with growths from the tropics.

To show the effects of the peptinine contained in the melons and leaves, several experiments have been made. Tough beefsteak when placed within the melons or between the leaves, undergoes a change that would bring joy to the boarder. In fact, the toughest beef can be made to rival the tenderest in a few hours, says Professor Hilgard.

The melons are similar in shape to the ordinary elongated melon that grows on a vine, and are pleasant eating, resembling the watermelon in taste. It belongs to the same family, and its growth from the flower progresses in the same manner. Hereafter Professor Hilgard says he expects to make the tree bear every year.—Baltimore American.

Languages of the World.

Among both Hebrews and Christians language has been regarded as the gift of heaven to man.

It is said by Hebrew scholars that the same word in ancient Hebrew signifies blessing or cursing.

In ninety years the Spanish-speaking people of the world have increased from 26,109,000 to 42,800,000.

The German and Spanish languages are remarkable for one fact, that every letter, has a uniform sound.

There were in 1801, 230,000 persons in the United States who spoke French; there are now over 1,000,000.

T. Hewitt Key, and many other writers on the subject, attribute the invention of language to Adam.

Horace, Cicero, Lucretius and other Roman philosophers, and poets, regarded language as a human invention.

According to Max Muller, there are a few simple and fundamental roots which are found in every language.

It is estimated by Grove that the idea of the pipe organ was borrowed from the human chest, mouth and larynx.

At the beginning of this century the Portuguese language was in use by 7,480,000; in 1890 it was spoken by 13,000,000.

The human wind-pipe is composed of sixteen or eighteen cartilaginous rings, united by exceedingly flexible ligaments.

Within the limits of the United States in 1801 there were 5,250,000 English speaking people; now there are 70,000,000.

Irving's Wigs.

Shortly before Sir Henry Irving went to America he exhibited the wig he wore when he played Bill Sykes, a wretched thing with broken springs, imitation hair and badly made. It was made thirty years ago. The hair alone of his new Macbeth wig is worth $15. Clarkson, the famous English theatrical wigmaker, says that for Sir Henry's recent American tour he supplied no less than 1100 wigs. The wig which Mr. Tree procured for his Svengali in "Trilby" cost $50. The dearest wig Clarkson ever made cost $200.

The iron ore mines of the Lake Superior regions have, since their discovery, produced nearly 1,000,000,000 tons of ore. Sixty-two per cent. of this vast amount has been mined and converted into iron and steel within the last ten years.

A long and elaborate article by Mr. John Morley, the late Chief Secretary for Ireland, in the Nineteenth Century, on "Arbitration," is attracting considerable attention. Mr. Morley contends that, while the line of difference between Secretary Olney and the Marquis of Salisbury is narrow, yet one British non-possumus would easily convert it into the risk of a fraticidal war. He strongly opines that what is to be done must be done quickly, and dreads the result of fatalistic confidence in the wisdom of Downing street. Mr. Morley adds that for the Foreign Office to leave arbitration alone would be nothing short of a disaster to "one of the greatest causes now moving the Western world. If Lord Salisbury fails, the question will be set back many years."

A good many men are bothered about the etiquette of the road with respect to salutations, especially to women. Last year, when most riders were novices, it was well understood that no man need lift his hat on meeting a woman of his acquaintance. Nowadays, however, so many men are expert riders and can go about "hands off" as well as on, that those who cannot do so are put in an awkward position sometimes when, while riding, they wish to be particularly deferential. More than one young man has come to grief in the cause of gallantry because he felt that he could not remain covered in the presence of a woman he knew, forgetting at the same time that neither could he retain an upright position on his wheel unless he had both hands on the hand bar. As a matter of fact, even those who write about rules of etiquette have kept off the subject of the proprieties of the bicycle, and the New York Post thinks it is safe assumption that there are none that is in conflict with prudent riding. The man who bends his head over until he can reach his hat without relinquishing his hold on the handle bar in greeting a woman has only contributed to the list of things that had been better left undone.

The Street Railway Journal contains a number of interesting and valuable statistics in regard to street railways in the United States. Pennsylvania leads the list with 110 operating lines. Most of these are under electrical management, as nearly all of the old horse cars have been banished from the State. But while the lead belongs to Pennsylvania on account of the number of lines which she has in operation, New York claims by far the greatest number of electric cars in actual use. Of these New York has 4559, while Pennsylvania has only 3715. Pennsylvania's electric mileage, however, is 1451 miles, against only 1382 miles of railway in New York. Strange to say, comments the Atlanta Constitution, New York City has no electric street railway system and has continued the use of horse cars longer than any of the great American cities. It has 295 miles of this sort of track, on which as many as 2058 cars are drawn. In the whole State of Pennsylvania there are barely more than a dozen cars pulled by mules or horses. New York's principal systems are operated by steam and cable power. In the group of Southern States, Georgia is easily first, with a mileage of 238 miles, operated by electric power. Tennessee comes next with 208 miles of track. Taking the entire field, there are 916 street railway organizations in the United States. The mileage of the horse car roads is 1219 miles, operating 5333 cars; the electric mileage is 12,133 miles, operating 23,242 cars. Nearly six-sevenths of all the street railway mileage in the country is operated by electric power. These figures are specially interesting when the fact is remembered in this connection that locomotion by electricity is barely more than a dozen years old.

THE NATION'S CAPITAL.

Pension Roll Shows a Slight Decrease.

OLD SOLDIERS DROPPING OUT.

From This Time Forth It Is Expected to Show a Marked and Steady Diminution.—Reported Massacres in Turkey.—Consul Gibbons Dies in Syria.

Dominic I. Murphy, Commissioner of Pensions, has made his annual report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1896, to Secretary Francis. He says: There were added to the rolls during the year 40,374 new pensioners, and there were restored 3,873 who had been previously dropped, a total of 44,247. During the same period the losses were 29,393 by death, 1,141 by re-marriage (widows), 1,684 by legal limitation (minors), 2,552 because of failure to claim pension for three years and 9,323 for other causes, an aggregate of 44,093. The net gain over the previous year was only 154, and it may be now safely assumed that the roll from this time forth will show a marked and steady diminution unless Congress should enact still more liberal provisions than are now upon the statute books. The rate of mortality among our pensioners, particularly among those who served during the war of rebellion, is rapidly increasing the number reported deceased during the year far exceeding that of any corresponding period in the history of the bureau.

The whole number of pensioners on the roll June 30, 1896, was 970,673 While the rolls show a slight gain in numbers over the year immediately preceding, the amount disbursed for pensions was $138,214,761, a decrease of $1,592,575 as compared with the previous year.

There were 495,664 pension claims pending at the close of the fiscal year, 234,337 being applications for increases made by persons now on the rolls

Although last year's estimate of $140,000,000 for pensions was $1,790,620 more than was necessary for the past fiscal year, the Commissioner duplicates that estimate for the next fiscal year, stating that he believes the adjudication of many cases will make the full amount necessary. It is his intention to push the settlement of cases as rapidly as possible. An estimate of $1,228,580 is made for miscellaneous expenses.

The Commissioner says that the payment by vouchers has worked satisfactorily, and opposes a return to personal payments. Some difficulty has been experienced in the execution of vouchers in Germany, and the State Department has been requested to furnish the Bureau information as to what persons have authority to administer oaths. There are 601 United States pensioners in Germany.

Regarding the revision of the pension list, the Commissioner says: "There is no foundation for the erroneous impression that it is the intention to still further revise the lists, as the 1893 has been entirely accomplished It ought to be understood, however, that there still exists the purpose to maintain the pension roll as the Nation's roll of honor."

Concerning prosecutions he says: "Offenders against the pension laws have been so rigorously prosecuted during the past three years that the criminal work of the law division has been materially lessened. Through the combined efforts of the law division and the special examination division there has been refunded to the United States during the year $20,982, of which $10,726 was recovered as the outcome of eight civil suits. During the year 339 indictments were found, and there were 242 recommendations for prosecution. The number of convictions was 167, the number of sentences 160, and 82 offenders against the pension laws were taken into custody."

Commissioner Murphy commends the work of the special examiners, and says that the additional force of 150 should be continued. The cost of this force during the year was $477,958. He says the pension building is at present inadequate for the work and makes some suggestions relative to the improvements. He recommends an increase of $12 per month of pensions to survivors of the Mexican war and also recommends pensions to widows of officers and soldiers who died from causes originating in the service prior to March 4, 1861. He recommends the passage of the bill pending in Congress for the codification of the pension laws.

MASSACRES IN TURKEY.

United States Minister Terrell, at Constantinople, has cabled the State Department that he has been advised from Harpoot that there have been serious massacres at Kock and Seatis, in that province. No details are given. It is believed at the State Department that there has been an error in transmitting the names of the localities concerned.

CONSUL GIBSON DEAD.

The State Department has been advised by a telegram from Vice-Consul Khouri, at Beirut, Syria, that the Consul there, Thomas R. Gibson, died from smallpox last Monday. Mr. Gibson was a native of Augusta, Ga., appointed in September, 1893, to his post. He had been editor of the Augusta Evening News and was a graduate of the University of Georgia.

FATAL FIGHT

Between Police and Italians in Philadelphia.

A pitched battle occurred Sunday morning in the section of Philadelphia known as "Little Italy," between a squad of policemen and the inmates of a speak easy, who were resisting arrest. Although the encounter lasted but fifteen minutes, one man was shot and instantly killed and five others were more or less seriously wounded.

The proprietor of the speak easy was finally arrested, together with seven of the combatants, and at a hearing before Magistrate Germon the participants were held without bail on a charge of murder. The victims Michael Pizza, shot in the head and left lung, instantly killed; Policeman Elbert, struck on the head with a brick; Policeman Thayer, hand crushed with a brick; Joseph Miller, a spectator, shot in the hand; Policeman Mitchell, struck on the head with a brick.

Robert Donahue, a citizen who took part in the fray, struck on the head with a brick and stabbed in the breast.

The scene of the affray was a dingy three-story brick house, No. 612 Baker street, which is in the heart of the Italian district.

About midnight Special Officers Hamm and Baker, together with Policemen Sibert, Mitchell, Thayer, Wagner, Phillips and Roney, all attired in citizens' clothes, arrived at the Baker street house with a warrant for the arrest of Michael Wolfa, charging him with selling liquor without a license and on Sunday.

The raiders, with a concerted rush, forced the front door from its hinges. Inside were a dozen men armed with hatchets, knives, coupling pins, revolvers and all sorts of weapons.

Just when the firing began, or how, nobody seems to know, but there were about twenty or twenty-five shots exchanged in all. Those of the policemen who were in a side alley were themselves hemmed in at either outlet by crowds of threatening foreigners.

A portion of the inmates had by this time reached the roof and they began to shoot at th officers in the alley. Bricks were torn from the chimneys and hurled at them. Bullets and bricks flew in all directions, and finally when the combatants were subdued, Michael Pizza was found dead on the roof. He lay on his back with the blood gushing from two bullet holes. It is not known whether he was shot by police men or by his comrades in mistake.

ANOTHER DEVELOPMENT

In the Union Bank Scandal at New Orleans.—An Outsider Jailed.

Louis Gallot, a clerk in a cotton house in this city, says a New Orleans, La., dispatch of Saturday, was aiding and abetting Louis Colombe, the dead bookkeeper of the suspended Union National Bank, in the theft of $203,479.02 and of abstracting this money from the Union National Bank. Colombe is charged with having credited Gallot falsely and of having failed to charge Gallot with money which he drew from the bank Gallot was taken before a United States Commissioner, who fixed his bond at $20,000. This he was unable to give and will go to the parish prison. As heretofore, much mystery is observed in the case, and no information can be had. Gallot lavished the money he got out of the Union National on a woman named Mrs. Bouscaren, who was formerly Miss Long, of Louisville, Ky., with whom he was infatuated, and who in turn was infatuated with a desire to shine in society. Many stories are afloat, but the consensus agrees that Gallot spent money like water in a vain effort to enable the object of his adulation to gratify her social aspirations. The woman in the case is now said to be living in splendor in Washington, D. C.

FIGHTING IN THE SOUDAN.

British Gunboats Sink One of the Khalifa's Ships.—Many Drowned.

Kitchener, commanding the Anglo-Egyptian expedition into the Soudan, with Dongola as its objective point, has wired to the Government that his forces occupied Karma, the dervish post on the Nile, at dawn Saturday The Khalifa's forces evacuated the places upon the approach of the expedition and consequently the town was occupied without opposition. Three of the expedition's gun-boats passed up the river toward Dongola and were fired upon by a steamer belonging to the enemy. The gun-boats returned the fire and quickly sunk the dervishes' steamer. The loss was heavy, many of those on board the dervishes' steamer having been drowned. The Egyptians had one officer and three men wounded.

EXCITEMENT IN GEORGIA.

Populist Candidate For Sheriff Arrested on a Serious Charge.

Great excitement prevails throughout Harolson county, Ga., over the arrest, which was made Monday afternoon, of W. A. Goldin, Populist candidate for Sheriff, upon a charge of assault with intent to rape. This charge is made by Hon. J. J. Pope, member of the Legislature from that county, and it is alleged the assault was made on Mrs. Pope. Goldin says it is a scheme to beat him in the election. But the fact that Pope is a member of the same political party as Goldin, and that they have been personal friends, as well as political friends, indicates that there must be something else than politics in the charge. Both men are prominent.

RIOTING AT LEADVILLE.

Fierce Battle in and Around Colorado Mines.

SEVERAL MEN KILLED.

Fighting With Fire and Dynamite.—Driven to Desperation, Locked-out Miners Create a Reign of Terror.—Local Military Forces Placed on Guard.

The lock-out of the miners at Leadville, Col., resulted in rioting the early part of the week. The story is told by the press dispatches from that city in the following language:

Leadville is a battle ground today and the Coronade Mine is the scene of a desperate engagement between strikers and the twenty men who were working in and living at the mine. The bloody hand of lawlessness and anarchy by the use of dynamite bombs burned the Coronade shaft house and made a forced attack on the miners, but the attacking parties were driven from their ground with three of their members mortally wounded and two seriously injured.

The most atrocious crime committed during this lawless attack was the shooting and mortally wounding of Jerry O'Keefe, who was doing his duty as a fireman in trying to extinguish the blaze that, despite the efforts of the fire department, consumed four dwelling houses as well as the Coronade shaft house and out-buildings.

But the bloody work of the strikers was not confined alone to the Coronade Mine. A lawless mob gathered around the Emmett ,a little after the attack on the Coronade, but the men at the Emmett were ready for the attack, and when the crowd appared they fired such a volley of bullets into them that they found it unsafe to go further in their nefarious work. Not one of their number was killed, but Jerry Mahoney, a miner, living near the Resurrection, who happened to be coming along the road at the time, walking between the strikers and the men on the inside and with the first volley, was shot probably fatally.

At the El Paso also the men were attacked by strikers, but they left that shaft house and sought cover under bushes close by. Here they were awaiting the attack of the strikers, but the latter did not come near the property, contenting themselves with firing about a hundred shots into the shaft house.

Armed men also prowled around the Ram Mine at about the same time and fired several shots into the shaft house, but did not come close enough to throw dynamite bombs and fire the buildings. A great quantity of giant powder was burned outside the fence of the Emmett Mine, but no harm was done by it. This powder was brought to blow up the Emmett shaft house, but the resistance made to the attack by the men on the inside foiled the strikers' plans, and fearing being caught with the powder in their possession, they burned it.

The men who were killed at the Coronade are:

Berry Wier.

James Benson, union striker.

Jerry O'Keefe, a fireman, mortally wounded.

Will Higgins.

No one is able to identify either Benson or Wier, their names being known by letters in their pockets.

William Higgins, who was mortally wounded in the affair, has four bullet wounds in his right arm and one, which is pronounced dangerous, in his abdomen. This, Dr. Jeanotte says, will prevent his recovery. Higgins is not more than 20 years of age.

John Mahoney is not dead, but the doctors say he cannot live and will probably die tonight. Mahoney is not a striker, although he is a union miner. He was working a lease with two others, and they were with him when he was shot, but none of the men knew they had walked into a death trap until Mahoney was pierced by a ball and fell from his horse.

O'Keefe and Mahoney are single men, and it is believed that Benson and Weir are also single.

Under orders of the Governor several companies of State militia are on the way to Leadville from Denver, Colorado Springs, and Pueblo, to strengthen the local military force of three companies.

The miners were organized recently by the Western Federation of Miners, and almost every mine worker was in the union when their demands were made. The miners ask $3 a day for all classes of workmen, including surface and under-ground men. The employers declared at the beginning of the trouble that they were willing to continue paying the wages which had prevailed in Leadville to that time. Under that scale surface workers were paid only $2.50, and practically the only change the union proposes is the advance of the wages of this class of men to $3.

The mine owners have refused to listen to any proposition from the employes. They insist that the Governor, the courts and the newspapers are with the miners, and it would be impossible for them to manage their own property if they made any concessions. The courts say they are powerless unless the Sheriff brings offenders within their jurisdiction. The mine owners explain that the Sheriff holds the key to the situation, and is in league with the strikers.

BREWERS IN CONVENTION.

The ninth annual convention of the National Union of the Brewers began at Cincinnati Monday with an informal visit to the Zoological Garden There are now organized 123 unions, with a membership of over 25,000 The country, except the Rocky mountain and the Pacific coast is well represented.

CAUSED BY LIGHTNING.

Eight Thousand Bales of Cotton Burned in Massachusetts.

A cyclone from the west struck New Bedford, Mass., early Saturday morning, dealing out destruction on every hand and perhaps death in one instance.

There was an immense number of minor accidents, trees uprooted, etc., but soon after daylight a particularly severe burst caused damage of more serious import. About 6:30 o'clock a huge bolt of lightning descended from a cloud of inky blackness upon the big cotton shed of the Bennett Mills, and imperilled nearly 8,000 bales of cotton of high grade and long staple. It took the firemen three hours to get the mad blaze subdued, and in all about 2,500 bales, valued at upwards of $100,000, were injured. Much of this damage will be offset by proceeds of the sale of the damage in the cotton, but it will still be a heavy loss. It is generally insured The cotton house was destroyed and involved a loss of perhaps $6,000.

In the midst of the mill fire and cyclone burst there was a terrific wind and a torrent of rain The crowd near the mill fire ran for shelter and about twenty of them found it in a new building at the corner of Goggeshall and North Front streets. No sooner were they entered than the wind took up the building, raised the roof bodily and the whole structure fell with a crash. By a miracle all but one of the crowd in the building escaped. He was Zoel Levigney, a French Canadian, who had run in for shelter. He was pinned down by heavy timbers, his spine was injured, several ribs were broken and he was internally injured. His recovery is doubtful.

THREE FRIENDS LIBELED.

Will Probably Forfeit to the Federal Government.

The alleged filibuster steamer, Three Friends, has been libeled by the United States Government for violating the navigation laws by going into foreign waters without surrendering to the Collector of the Port her coastwise license and taking out papers that would permit her to enter a foreign port. The libel has been filed in the office of the Clerk of the United States Court at Jacksonville, Fla., and Marshal McKay served the same, and will bring the vessel to the Jacksonville port under the escort of the United States revenue cutter, George S. Boutwell. The penalty is forfeiture of the vessel, and it is understood that President Cleveland has ordered the case pushed, as he wants to make an example of the Three Friends and thus deter filibustering expeditions.

DEMOLISHING TOLL GATES.

The free turnpike mob destroyed five toll gates Saturday night and three last night, says Monday's dispatch from Springfield, Ky. These two raids only leave five gates standing in Washington county, the raiders having destroyed forty-three in all. Saturday night the mob rode up to the Tick creek pike gate while it was guarded by twelve men. The leader of the mob was ordered to take his men away or go to jail. The mob then leveled shotguns at the guards and forced them to surrender. The mob forced the guards to cut the gate down, and drove them back into town. Two of the raiders, Joes Settles and Charles Milner, were in court today on the charge of destroying toll gates, but nothing could be proven against them and they were discharged

MEXICAN REVOLUTION.

Well Armed Band of Mexicans Massing on the Texas Frontier.

J. C. Lawlings, a well known ranchman of Presidio county Texas, reports that large bands of armed Mexicans have been congregating on the Texas side of the Rio Grande river for the past ten days. The band numbered fully 800 persons, and their leaders stated that they were going across into Mexico and join the followers of Santa Teresa. The recruits for this band come from the border Texas ranches, and they are nearly all ignorant of the plans of the leaders. All are well mounted and have a good supply of ammunition.

The attention of the authorities of Presidio has been called to the rendezvous of the band of Mexicans, and the Sheriff and a detachment of rangers left for the locality where they are holding camp. An effort will be made to arrest the Mexicans on the charge of violating the United States neutrality laws by organizing an armed band for the purpose of invading a sister country in time of peace.

LIVELY POLITICAL MEETING.

A bitter political battle was waged in Central armory, Cleveland, O., Saturday night, where T. V. Powderly addressed a Republican meeting. Perfect pandemonium broke loose when the chairman was introduced, and a crowd in the gallery made it almost impossible for him to proceed with the meeting. When he finally managed to introduce Mr. Powderly the scene was indescribable. The ex-labor leader was placed with the foulest of epithets, and for five minutes such a racket was kept up that it was impossible for Powderly to begin. A riot seemed imminent. The police were summoned and several arrests made.

FIRE AT TRAVERSE CITY.

Two hundred hands are thrown out of work temporarily. The whole plant was covered by $50,000 insurance, a large portion of which was upon the portion destroyed.

GOLD FOR AMERICA.

Our Foreign Trade Balance Near Five Times as Great as Last Year.—A Lucky Accident, Said to Have Revealed a Serious Plot.—Catholic Convention at Detroit.—Arrests.

America's foreign trade balance is nearly five times as great as it was last year. Therefore, a continued outflow of gold and a consequent rise in the bank rate is inevitable, says a Monday dispatch from London. For the present, however, demand is transferred to the Bank of France, which it is understood is willing to meet demands and is selling American eagles at a shade under the London quotations. The dislocation of the money market has had a bad effect on the new Chinese loan, which is a little more than half covered and which has been quoted at a small discount. The feature of the Stock Exchange has been the continued heavy decline of all gilt-edge stocks, including home railway securities, gas, water and brewery stock. Mines have been dull and inactive. The American market has been the firmest of any. People who are rushing to realize on high priced investment stock are buying the best class of American bonds, while shares are supported by the view of political prospect. The changes of the week were not important, but the general tone was healthy and promising a further improvement.

HUNDRED PERSONS ARRESTED.

Advices from Manilla, in the Phillipine Islands,, report the discovery of a fresh plot to surprise the Spanish garrison there, to seize the headquarters and to murder Captain-General Blanco. A hundred persons have been arrested for complicity in the plot. Ten encounters have occurred between the Spaniards and the rebels, in which the latter sustained heavy losses. In the Island of Lumion the natives have murdered all of the Spanish monks.

A LUCKY ACCIDENT

Reveals an Anarchist Plot to Slaughter Chicago Citizens.

Joseph Bestman, said by the police of Chicago to be an anarchist, left at 18 Sedgewick court, three years ago this fall, a trunk containing sufficient dynamite to have destroyed an acre of property in Chicago, and to have taken the lives of hundreds of citizens. The discovery was made by accident. Bestman was not found, but the police received information in the afternoon that he is living in Dallas, Tex., and wired the Chief of Police to arrest him at once. The discovery of this enormous quantity of explosive matter and the story of Bestman himself, so far as now known to the police, brings to light a tale of anarchistic plotting, such as Chicago has not had revealed since the dark days of 1885, when the existence of the city was threatened and Spies and his comrades swung on the gallows for the bomb throwing at the Haymarket massacre.

CATHOLIC CONVENTIONS.

More Than a Thousand Delegates and Visitors in Attendance.

The delegates to the convention of the German Catholic National Association, which began its session in Detroit, Mich., Monday were formally welcomed to Detroit Monday night by Bishop Foley, of the Detroit diocese, who extended a cordial welcome and stated that the sentiment of brotherly greeting on behalf of the Catholics of Michigan was wholly without respect to nationality. Bishop Richter, of the Grand Rapids diocease and the Bishop of Marquette, speaking in German, emphasized the greeting. The occasion was a grand concert given with orchestra and anthems by the united choirs of the local German Catholic churches in the Auditorium before a very large audience. It was an entertaining preliminary to the convention Upward of 1,000 delegates to the four conventions are now in attendance and it is estimated that there are considerable more than that number of visitors, besides the delegates.

RYAN AND GOBER.

A Lively Scrap on the Streets of Atlanta Between Them.

Judge George F. Gober, one of the most prominent Judges in Georgia, was assaulted in Atlanta Monday afternoon by Stephen A. Ryan, formerly the leading dry goods merchant of Atlanta.

Ryan used a riding whip, in the handle of which was a small piece of iron. Judge Gober was in the act of boarding a train for his home in Marietta. He says that he was struck from behind. Ryan says that he touched the Judge on the shoulder first, attracted his attention and struck him when he turned around. Judge Gober defended himself with an umbrella, and the two men fought for a minute in the street where the Judge was standing as the train was passing.

Ryan inflicted three severe blows on the Judge's face and head, and the Judge's umbrella raised a lump on his assailant's forehead.

Five years ago Judge Gober sent Ryan to jail for contempt of court in failing to turn over to a receiver $100,000 which the court thought he had withheld from his assets. Ryan remained in jail for thirteen months. Mr. Ryan says that the attack today was not made because of the Judge's official action, but because he was informed that the Judge had referred to him as a d—d scoundrel in a recent conversation.

Who said "Foot's" girl kicked him because he did not take along a box of candy when he called last.

What's ailing Bogardus that he don't rush the girls any more?

"Shorty" is all right. Just you boys let him alone. He can work out his own salvation.

John Kroell is the people now. Where, oh, where is "Scoopendyker?" A mournful cry comes back among the unknown.

Be careful boys; some gilrs in this town like to flirt. Be not too hasty with your love-making, as there are a few hearts that might cause their owners to pass many sleepless nights of sorrow.

John Darling is no snide. Just watch his movements and learn how to court on the sly.

CEDAR GROVE LOCALS.

We all want it to rain.

Miss Pauline Acker returned to her home in Montevallo, after a lengthy visit to her brothers' family of this place.

Miss Ida Griffin, accompanied by Mr. W. Lyman, of Montevallo, visited Helena last Thursday.

Mr. R. C. Cobb, a prominent young man living near here, was seriously, if not fatally shot last week. Mr. Cobb was standing on the new bridge, and dropped his gun, which fired instantly. "Dick" is well known in this community, and his many friends truly hope for him an early recovery.

Wonder who is the happiest, Bryan, or James B. Griffin? (He has another boy.)

"Short visits and long love" seems to be the general rule of some of our young men.

Oh, why are the morning winds of autumn in unison with our lonely hearts!

Little Julia Griffin, of Helena, is visiting the family of R. J. Griffin this week.

Mrs. Grace Thomson has been quite sick, but is convalescent.

Miss Jessie Strickland and Belle Griffin contemplate visiting Pratt City this autumn.

We are sorry for J. M. L., because he let a Little boy beat him at Mayline's.

Mr. Robert Drennan is very sick and there is little hope for his recovery.

Mr. J. S. Little visited friends here last week. Come again, you are always welcome.

Why don't our Bismarck brother make his appearance oftener?

Wishing the editors and Montevallo News much success, I close.

"ERIN."

MEXICAN REVOLUTION.

Well Armed Band of Mexicans Massing on the Texas Frontier.

J. C. Lawlings, a well known ranchman of Presidio county Texas, reports that large bands of armed Mexicans have been congregating on the Texas side of the Rio Grande river for the past ten days. The band numbered fully 800 persons, and their leaders stated that they were going across into Mexico and join the followers of Santa Teresa. The recruits for this band come from the border Texas ranches, and they are nearly all ignorant of the plans of the leaders. All are well mounted and have a good supply of ammunition.

The attention of the authorities of Presidio has been called to the rendezvous of the band of Mexicans, and the Sheriff and a detachment of rangers left for the locality where they are holding camp. An effort will be made to arrest the Mexicans on the charge of violating the United States neutrality laws by organizing an armed band for the purpose of invading a sister country in time of peace.

THREE FRIENDS LIBELED.

Will Probably Forfeit to the Federal Government.

The alleged filibuster steamer, Three Friends, has been libeled by the United States Government for violating the navigation laws by going into foreign waters without surrendering to the Collector of the Port her coastwise license and taking out papers that would permit her to enter a foreign port. The libel has been filed in the office of the Clerk of the United States Court at Jacksonville, Fla., and Marshal McKay served the same, and will bring the vessel to the Jacksonville port under the escort of the United States revenue cutter, George S. Boutwell. The penalty is forfeiture of the vessel, and it is understood that President Cleveland has ordered the case pushed, as he wants to make an example of the Three Friends and thus deter filibustering expeditions.

Mrs. Floretta W. Walker, daughter of Ex-Governor Wells, of Virginia, has begun divorce proceedings in a court at Palmyra, N. Y., against Jas. T. Walker, alleging cruel and inhuman treatmont, and asking for a limited divorce. The couple were married at Washington, D. C., in 1878, and are the parents of nine children. Mrs. Walker was at the time of her marriage prominent in Washington society. Mr. Walker was a wealthy inventor at the time ,but has met reverses. They occupy a large mansion near this village on what is known as the "Walker tract."

THE STATE NORMAL COLLEGE, TROY, ALA.

This college is supported by state and Peabody fund appropriations for the training of teachers and is not a mere "Preparatory School" for some other, but is of college grade in every way, as a teachers' training school should be, and grants college degrees and diplomas, and its graduates receive state certificates for two, four and six years, or for life, from the state superintendent of education of Alabama, and these are the strongest testimonials of professional worth to a teacher. Indeed, the graduates of this college are in great demand as teachers and the college authorities take great pleasure in answering requests for trained teachers sent in by school authorities from all over Alabama and adjoining states.

It will be seen from the Normal Exponent that students desiring the usual college course may get it here at very low expense, too. Board is but $8 to $10 per month and tuition and incidentals low.

Persons desiring information as to this college or wishing to secure a good teacher should write to Dr. E. R. Eldridge, president, at Troy, Ala., for the Normal Exponent explaining every thing.

Magnets as Harbor Defenses.

A well-known scientific expert has conceived the idea of magnetizing large bodies of iron, such as worn-out cannon, by means of a powerful electric current and using them to protect seaports from belligerent battleships. A wire leading from the shore to the cannon would communicate that current when it was needed, and as soon as an enemy's ironclad attempted to cross the harbor bar the current would be turned on. As the ship steamed over the invisible magnets the two nearest cannon would rise and cling to the vessel with such force as to stop her entirely.

Who will invent an instrument that can estimate the depth of water under a ship without taking soundings? The disaster to the Drummond Castle has awakened interest in the problem, which Sir William Siemens once tackled and for which he devised an instrument called a bathometer. It was exceedingly delicate, and made very sensitive to the earth's attraction, showing a varying record as a ship passed from deep to shallow water, and vice versa. But it was never perfected. One of the difficulties Sir William Siemens encountered was the disturbing effect of continental attraction. Now, however, in this age of the impossible made possible, it would seem that our inventors could have no nobler incentive than to prevent such a catastrophe as happened to the Drummond Castle.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials free. Address

THE ISLAND OF SPITZBERGEN.

It Was Once Famous for Its Whale and Shark Fisheries.

Spitzbergen has been crossed at last! From Tromso, Sweden, came the intelligence recently that the expedition organized by Sir W. Martin Conway has accomplished the feat so frequently attempted by others in vain. For the first time the interior of this strange land mass has been explored, and the data secured will doubtless make a most interesting contribution to human knowledge. Spitzbergen has been best known hitherto in connection with Arctic explorations and its once prosperous fisheries.

The fisheries are still valuable, though not nearly so important as in former days. One marine animal sought by the pelagic hunters is the great northern shark. It is one of the largest of all sharks and is not dangerous to man. The liver of a single full-grown specimen yields four or five barrels of oil. This oil is useful for several purposes, but it figures in commerce most conspicuously as a substitute for cod liver oil. Much of the cod liver oil now on the market is in reality obtained from shark's livers. Shark skin is employed to a considerable extent for leather, and a superior kind of sand paper is made from it.

In the seventeenth century a considerable town was created on the neighboring island of Amsterdam, where, on a broad plain, grew up the astonishing village of Smeerenberg. Here, within ten degrees of the North Pole, for a score of years prevailed an amount of comfort and prosperity that can scarcely be credited by the visitor of to-day in that desolate Arctic region. In the train of the whalers followed merchant vessels, loaded with wine, brandy, tobacco and edibles unknown in the fare of the hardy fishers. Shops were opened, drinking booths erected, wooden and even brick houses constructed for the laborers and whalemen. Bakeries were put up, and, as in Holland, the sound of the baker's horn, announcing hot, fresh bread for sale, drew crowds of eager purchasers. The Dutch frau was not deterred by the frigidity of the latitude from becoming a temporary resident of Smeerenberg. But the shore fisheries soon failed, and, the whalers being driven to the remote and open seas, this strange summer city fell into decadence and eventual ruin. Near the vanished town lie to-day the mortal remains of more than 1,000 stalwart fishermen.

From the Spitzbergen whale fishery Holland drew in a little over a century about $90,000,000. The most recent attempt to colonize the island was in 1872, when Sweden and Norway proposed to take possession of the whole country; but Russia objected. In 1863 the Norwegian, Carlsen, accomplished for the first time the feat of circumnavigating Spitzbergen. One of the most interesting features of the main island is an ice sheet 3,000 feet thick, which flows toward the east and presents on the coast a precipitous wall insurmountable from the sea. Its sea front presents the broadest known glacier.

Prehistoric Horse of the Rockies.

Professor Henry Fairfield Osborn, of the American Museum of Natural History, in The Century describes the remarkable fossil remains that are found near Bridger Lake in the Rockies. He says:

If we leave the lake shore and pass into the drier upland, we discover the clever little four-toed horse, swift, alert, intelligent. He is, to use the modern measure, only four hands, or sixteen inches, high, so he would not reach the knee of the Uintathere, and could be devoured at one sitting by the Patriofelis. His limbs are as slender as pencils. His large eyes are much farther forward than in the horse. He could readily hide among the taller stalks and it is possible that he had the beginning of protective stripes imitating reed shadows upon his neck and mane. In his hair and coloring, however, we pass into pure conjecture. His well-worn, chisel-shaped front teeth indicate that he was already a cropper or browser, and the evident secret of his triumphant persistence over his ponderous contemporaries is that he learned to browse just about the time that grasses began to appear. He was the animal for the times.

Story of a Great Painter.

Munkacsy, the great painter, is a man of keen wit. Some time ago a connoisseur, whose passion for getting things cheap equals his love for art, called on the painter and asked to purchase some of his works at a reduced price. The painter was at first indignant, and then amused. "By all means," said Munkaczy. "I can tell you where you can get a great deal of work from my brush at a very low figure. If you go to my native village of Munkaczy, in Hungary, you will find plenty of walls and outhouses there which I painted when I was Michael Lieb, painter and glazier."

The connoisseur rejoined that he wanted to purchase Munkaczy's pictures, and the great artist turned on him in a perfect frenzy of rage and drove him out of his studio. Munkaczy never forgets, nor is afraid to mention, his lowly beginnings. Now one of the greatest living artists, he recalls with pride that at one time he painted outhouses, sign posts and walls, gradually, by dint of sheer genius, rising to his present position in the world of art.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

According to the most careful estimates there are now in this country 137 trusts and combinations which have an aggregate capitalization of $1,507,000,000.

A curious illustration of paternalism is furnished by New Zealand. It is proposed to create a pension fund for persons who have reached the age of sixty-five. A tax on public amusements is the suggested source of revenue, and the sum of two dollars and a half is to be paid weekly to each pensioner.

The old story of an immense herd of camels roaming about in Arizona has been revived again, and is going the rounds of the press. The Arizona Republican, after saying that the story has been denied for years, declares that there is not a camel to be found anywhere within the borders of Arizona. But it expects to find the story bob up again, as usual, next year, except that the herd of camels will be much larger.

One of the most remarkable "mushroom" towns ever known is Mena, Ark., which is just now having a boom on account of the completion of the Kansas City, Pittsburg and Gulf railroad, which taps the region. A few weeks ago there was not a house or a man in the town. There wasn't even a town. Now there are 3,000 people, with several mills, numerous stores, and hundreds of houses completed or under construction.

By far the longest tunnel in the world will soon be commenced at Sunderlake Creek, Col., and compared to it the other great tunnels will be mere rat holes. This tunnel will be 48 miles long and it will completely pierce a high mountain. It will not be in operation till 1906, ten years being required to build it. There will be branch lines in the tunnel and one of 16 miles will connect Colorado City with Cripple Creek, now 54 miles apart by the round-about railroad.

That hypnotism produces diseases of the cerebral cortex—the most important part of the brain—has just been asserted by an eminent Washington scientist. The Youth's Companion thinks that a more vital argument against the practice is, that it places mind and will under the control of another. No second person has the moral right to wield that power unless direct necessity compels it, and no man or woman under ordinary circumstances can be morally justified in conferring it.

According to recently compiled statistics, the Bible is now printed in 381 languages, fifty-two versions having been added in the last five years. Forty-two of these versions are credited to English and Scotch societies, and five to American societies. Twenty-three of the languages and dialects belong to the African Bantu family, and four belong to each of the Malayan, Chinese, and Malanesian, three are in Indian languages, two each belong to the negro, Turki, Druidian and Hamitic groups, and one each to the Thibeto-Burman, Aryan and Micronesian families.

An Alabama man is quoted in The Washington Times as saying that a coal company of that State will soon be able to put coal on ocean steamers leaving New Orleans cheaper than any other operators can do. Millions of dollars which have heretofore gone into the coffers of other States, will now be turned into Alabama. 'Other companies," he says, "will be formed, and soon every foot of ground in our valuable mineral belt will be the scene of mining operations. If all goes smoothly as it now promises, the need for Northern capital will soon cease to be felt, and the industries of Alabama will be run without outside assistance."

It is rather curious that with all the decadence of the American merchant marine Li Hung Chang, the visiting Chinese Viceroy, should find the American flag flying over the highest type of commercial marine architecture he has ever seen. He took passage for the United States in an American built steamer that eclipses anything he has had an opportunity of sailing on up to this stage of his travels, and as Orientals are apt to be impressed by what they see more than by what they hear, he will probably, thinks The New York Journal, carry to China a different idea of America's place among maritime countries from that prevalent in Europe.

The United States Postoffice Department has decided to establish a system to facilitate transmission of mail matter by railway trains other than the regular mail trains. It proposes to open sub-offices in the Eastern depots thirty minutes before the departure of such trains as do not have the regular mail service, for the reception of mail matter which is placed in closed pouches and sent directly to destination. This will practically make every train available for speedy transmission of letters, and if the experiment works successfully it will be a great gain in time and convenience, and aid largely the rapid transaction of business. It is to be hoped that the plan will be practical and successful, and that every commercial center will be in rapid intercommunication.

Professor T. Mitchell Pruden, writing of a visit to the deserted homes of the Cave Dwellers of New Mexico and Arizona in Harper's Magazine, makes a suggestion worthy of serious consideration of the Government. He points out that these remains are at present the prey of every curiosity hunter and ignorant meddler who may care to take the trouble to visit them and dig for plunder. He advocates the setting apart of the sites of these ruins for National Park purposes, and the establishment of rigid restrictions against despoiling them. Places of natural beauty have been reserved with ment of settlers, and such action gives an excellent precedent for setting apart the small tracts where exist in a remarkable state of preservation relics of prehistoric man, which are of the highest value to scientists.

A short time ago the Postoffice Department decided that a railroad could not lawfully carry letters, even letters of its own business, without paying postage thereon. Now the order has been modified so that they are allowed to carry letters about their own business only, to their own employes on their own line. But the monopoly of the government for acting as a carrier of sealed correspondence to third persons is maintained by the Department, after an opinion by Attorney-General Harmon. Even express companies are by the ruling, not entitled to carry correspondence for third persons, though the practice has been common hitherto. The government asserts its exclusive right to handle letter mail, though anything not in the nature of personal correspondence may be sent by other carriers.

Some time ago Alexander Hoagland, the self-styled "newsboys' friend," visited Kansas City, Kan., and induced the City Council to inaugurate a curfew system. As there was no bell available that could be heard all over the city, the big whistle on a packing house was officially designated as the "curfew bell." At 9 o'clock during the summer months and at 8 o'clock on the winter evenings it will blow as a warning to children under fifteen years of age to hurry to their homes. The police have enforced the ordinance closely, and already the sounding of the whistle is recognized as a signal for children to stop their playing. For fifteen minutes before the hour for it to blow the boys and girls play with a feverish haste, and when it is heard they scamper like rats when a cat appears. Some of the boys who wish to stay out a little later have adopted various ruses to deceive the policemen. One of them successfully claimed for several days that he had been sent by his father after a box of blacking, and as an evidence of good faith he showed an empty box which he was to exhibit to the merchant to inform him of the kind wanted. Other youngsters claim to be older than they are with a view of securing immunity from the law.

Dr. G. Brown Goode, the government fish expert, has for many years been studying "oceanic ichthyology," and the results of his work are embodied in an elaborate report now in press at the Government Printing Office. Dr. Goode believes that there are many inhabitants of the depths too swift, too wary, or too large to be captured by the nets and trawls used by him. The appliances are crude, and though every cast of the net brings up new specimens, there is no way of telling to what particular depths they belong or how many escape altogether. Down in the basement of the Smithsonian Institute in Washington is the finest collection of deep-sea fishes in the world, preserved in alcohol. One of the most startling specimens taken by Dr. Goode is the "Linophryne Lucifer," a fish which carries a long appendage to its nose, at the end of which is a bulb for producing light at will, for in the dark ocean depths most of the fish are provided with some sort of lighting apparatus. The source of light is usually phosphorus, which is emitted with mucus from a series of glands. Here are fish, then, that glory in what is as good as a portable electric-light plant, run automatically. We know that phosphorus is abundant in fish, and the principle of natural selection would account for these complicated lighting apparatuses being gradually evolved by the fish themselves to suit the necessities of their environment.

Speed of Electricity.

It has long since been conceded that the speed of electricity is practically instantaneous. Sunlight travels 10,000,000 miles a minute, and it is believed by many scientists that the speed of electricity would be equally as rapid if we could get the proper medium over which to transmit it, and get all other conditions in proper shape. In the experiments made from Philadelphia to Liverpool, in 1890, it was proven that with the imperfect apparatus then in use the speed was 8,000 miles per second. Some enthusiasts believe that it will eventually be sent around the world in three seconds, or cover the distance to the sun in three and one-half minutes.

A Useful Tree.

The Guarano Indians are to be found all over the delta of the Orinoco. They eat little and wear less. They subsist on the moriche palm tree. The tree in question is, without doubt, an indispensable factor in the problem of life. Not only does it furnish a safe elevation for a home, but gives a nutritious sago, or meal, from which bread is made, a tree fifteen years old yielding 600 pounds of this meal. In addition, the juice furnishes a kind of wine, and out of the fiber is made cord, rope, hammocks and a rude species of cloth.

Shot a Big Blue Heron.

While gunning along the river at Hallstead, Pa., L. E. Tiffany and S. G. Barnes noticed a large bird fly up from the willows. They blazed away simultaneously and the bird dropped. It proved to be a blue heron, a rare bird for this latitude. It measured six feet from tip to tip, and when erect stood five feet high.

Spotted or figured vails are bad for the sight and should never be worn.

A Lawyer's Testimony.

From the Herald, Potsdam, N. Y.

George Boardman Stacey, of Nicholville, St. Lawrence County, New York, has for many years ranked as one of the brightest lawyers in Northern New York and for the past twenty years has been the acknowledged leader of politics in the east end of this great county. Mr. Stacey was admitted to the bar in 1865, and up to October, 1895, continued to practice his profession. All this time, however, the strain of active political work had been undermining his once iron constitution, and during this month of October he suffered a stroke of paralysis which left him practically helpless. For weeks he was in a terrible condition, the efforts of the doctors proving of no avail. All at once he began to recover, however, and was soon seen about town again, frequenting his former haunts and shaking hands with his old friends and acquaintances. His rapid recovery was the talk of the town, and a reporter hearing of the wonderful cure decided to visit Mr. Stacey and ascertain if possible its cause.

Mr. Stacey was inclined to be communicative, and the following is his story of his illness and cure:

"I was presiding over a political meeting and had just arisen to give a friend who was to address the meeting a rousing sendoff, when to my astonishment I discovered I could not talk. My tongue seemed paralyzed. I managed to say a few words, however, and took my seat where by shear will power I managed to sit until the meeting was finished. On arising to go home, however, I found I could not walk and seemed to have lost control of my limbs. I was assisted home, but on feeling better in the morning I went down to my office. Here I suffered another shock which left me flat on my back. I finally recovered sufficiently to get up, but was left a complete physical wreck. I could not half talk or guide myself at all. I could not write or even hold a pen, and was unable to transact any business. I was like a drunken man and went staggering about.

"The doctors did all they could for me but still I failed to improve. I had always been greatly opposed to patent medicines in any form, but on the recommendation of my druggist, Ira H. Smith, I finally decided to give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People a trial and see if they would do me any good. To my great surprise I began to notice an improvement before I had taken half a box, and by the time I had taken three boxes I felt like a new man. As nothing else seemed to help me I lay my recovery to the Pink Pills for Pale People. On going to Newark, New Jersey, in April, I gave up taking the pills, and have not since returned to using them, although I am confident they are a splendid thing, and I will probably use them again."

Mr. Stacey's remarkable case is but one of a thousand others which have been cured by these magic pills where all else had failed.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effect of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 (they are never sold in bulk or by the 100), by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

JOINING CUBANS.

An Undertaking Attended With Hardship and Peril.

THREE AMERICANS RETURN

After Having Suffered Privation and Imprisonment at Spanish Hands.

A PECULIAR FORM OF PAROLE.

Demonstration of Sympathy at Havana on the Departure of the Marquis of Apeztugia.—Gomez Still Declared to Be Negotiating for Peace.—Other Matters.

Philadelphia, Pa.—James McGuire, of this city, Jeremiah Bonds, of New York, and Chas. W. Allen, of Stamford, Conn., have just reached this city after a thrilling experience in Cuba, in the course of which Wm. Barry, of New York, who had accompanied them, was shot and killed by the Spaniards.

On the 10th of last September the trio mentioned, in company with Barry, started for Cuba to join the forces of the belligerents and arrived in Havana September 21st. Here they fell in with Josef Ruiz, a Cuban patriot, who volunteered to guide the quartette to the retreat occupied by the commanders. They headed for the Pinar del Rio district and when near Mariel in the Guanajas district were surprised by a body of about fifty Spaniards. They were taken, searched, and finding papers confirming suspicions on Ruiz had a consultation and decided to kill all the prisoners. The conversation was carried on in Spanish but Ruiz interpreted their remarks for his American friends. Recognizing the desperate position in which they had placed themselves, the quintette decided to risk their lives in a vigorous effort to escape, rather than wait and be shot. Maguire rolled over to Ruiz and the young Cuban used his teeth with such success that he soon had Maguire's bonds cut through. Maguire then took a pen-knife and liberated his companions. It was dark, but the moon showed light sufficient ti illuminate the ground for some distance. With a rush the five men ran to the spot where they noticed some machetes and guns. They armed themselves each with a machete, revolver and belts full of ammunition. They then attempted to get away, but the Spaniards pursued, firing a deadly volley after their escaping prisoners. Bary fell, shot through the heart, at the first fire, and Bond's right arm was perforated by a bullet. The remaining four succeeded in out-distancing their pursuers. They made every effort to get back and recover Barry's body, but were unsuccessful, and were compelled to make their way further into the mountainous regions of Pinar del Rio, and after a tortuous journey they arrived in the region of San Cristobal.

A few days after they were recaptured by a band of Spanish patrolers. Their hands were tied behind their backs and they were compelled to march for a distance of over ten miles, when they were thrown into prison. The next day they were forced to march again until late in the afternoon, when they were put in another prison, and so they were marched from prison to prison until Havana was reached. Here they were thrown into a well guarded prison where they were separated.

On December the 23rd the Americans were brought before some commanding officer, whose name they did not learn, but it is presumed by them that it was General Weyler. They were told that Ruiz, the young Cuban had committed suicide by shooting himself with a revolver which he had snatched from one of the guards. The three friends said nothing but they discredited the suicide story and were firmly convinced that the young Cuban had been murdered.

The trio of Americans were offered their liberty and passage home if they would sign a paper, promising to do all they could against the Cuban cause. This they did and were released.

BOY BUTCHERED

By Spanish Soldiers.—Dogs Eat Human Flesh.

New York, N. Y.—A dispatch to the World from Tampa, Fla., says: A school boy of ten years was killed in Guanabaccoa on Thursday evening by a Spanish patrol because he refused to hurrah for Spain. The lad smiled when the soldiers asked him to hurrah, not comprehending what they wanted. They cursed him as a "Cuban Whelp," butchered him not two squares from his home, and left his body in the street.

In the fields surrounding the city dogs have been seen eating human flesh and gnawing human bones.

More than five hundred people have moved from Guanabaccoa within ten days.

Another large pit with dead bodies in it was discovered Thursday near Guanabaccoa in thick underbrush. Decomposition was too far advanced to permit recognition of the bodies. It is supposed that these victims of Spanish cruelty belonged to the poorer class of that suburb, as many have been reported "missing" lately.

Antonio Roginy, a native Cuban, forced to leave home as the police were after him on suspicion, has arrived here. He says the r aid of Cabbilas, called a Spanish victory, was a great Cuban success. The town was garrisoned by 500 Spaniards, who had three canon. Before night Wednesday, Cuban insurgents, under Maj. Sorres, siezed the outposts and almost captured the entire place before the Spaniards knew what was going on. The canon in one block house was turned on the Spaniards and they retreated in the intrenchments. Maj. Sorres threw part of his forces in the rear of the Spaniards and routed them. The Cubans did not pursue; they were after the spoils and supplies. The Spaniards had managed to spike one canon, but the Cubans took the other two with them, as well as the complete camp equipment, including a large supply of ammunition.

GOMEZ HAS ENOUGH.

According to Papers Published at the Spanish Capital.

Madrid, Spain.—The Epocco officially confirms the report that Maximo Gomez has informed the Cuban Committee in the United States, that the Insurgents are demoralized, their supply of munitions of war being exhausted, and that they are unable to continue the struggle.

The Correspondencia Espana asserts that Maximo Gomez is disposed to negotiate for peace.

REUNION IMPOSSIBLE.

Sound Money Democrats Hold an Interesting Meeting.

Chicago, Ill.—The conference of gold standard Democrats held at the Auditorium Saturday declared for continued opposition to the tenits of the free silver wing of the party, and for a continuance of the party organization. Reunion with the Bryanites was declared to be out of the question, and a resolution was offered by John P. Irish, of California, was adopted, calling upon gold Democrats throughout the country to perfect their State and local organizations with the purpose of placing State and local tickets in the field at the next election.

About sixty men were present, representing the States of Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Minnesota, Kentucky and California.

Franklin McVeigh called the meeting to order, and named Gen. S. B. Buckner, of Kentucky, as chairman.

Gen. Buckner, in taking the chair, said the meeting was called for the purpose of conferring with reference to the future course of the National Democratic party, which was the only Democratic party in existence. Speeches were made by men from every State represented, showing that the party was everywhere in good condition. A motion urging the members of the party to perfect their organizations throughout the country was presented and adopted. The question of a name for the party came up for consideration, and John P. Irish said he would not be surprised if the party at its next convention, assumed the name of the Democratic-Republican party, the original name of the Jeffersonian party.

A BANK SENSATION.

Dreyer & Co. Had On Hand $9,000.—Liabilities, $1,400,000.

Chicago, Ill.—Sensational charges concerning the business of E. S. Dreyer & Co., the bankers whose assignment was caused by the collapse of the National Bank of Illinois, were made in Judge Freeman's Court today in an intervening petition brought in behalf of Mrs. Mary Leicht. It is charged that property mortgaged as security for a note for $3,000, upon which Mrs. Leicht has regularly paid interest, has been disposed of.

The Economist says to-day, referring to the Dreyer failure: "The depositors in the bank will get little or nothing. The statement which has been prepared shows that the bank was an empty shell, with some $1,400,000 of liabilities when the bank closed, with only $9,000 cash on hand."

AN IMP OF HELL.

The Terrible Work of a Desperate South Carolina Negro.

KILLS AND WOUNDS ELEVEN

Did this Desperate Son of Ham, Wholesale Butchery of Innocent People.

HE IS FINALLY CAPTURED AND HUNG

And Meets His Just Deserts at the Hand of an Enraged Populace.—Carted Through the Streets of Sumter and Viewed By Both Whith and Black People.

Columbia, S. C.—Sumter County, this State, is in a state of intense excitement over the bloody career of Simon Cooper, who has in the past week killed and wounded eleven citizens of that county.

At a colored emancipation celebration at Magnolia, on January 1, he became involved in a difficulty with another negro and finally shot and killed him. Application was made to a local magistrate for a warrant for his arrest, but for reasons which have never been explained, the warrant was not issued. The negroes then attempted to capture him without a warrant, but he fortified himself in a railroad culvert, and from the shelter of it shot down five of his pursuers, all of whom were seriously wounded. The party then retreated, and the murderer escaped to the swamps, where, armed with a Winchester rifle, he defied arrest.

Nothing more was seen of him until Thursday evening, when he appeared at the house of a colored woman whose daughter had promised to marry him, and threatened to kill her if she refused. She made her escape to the woods, and finally reached the shelter of a white man's house.

Cooper then proceeded to the house of a Mrs. Wilson and forced her to let him remain in the house all night. Early next morning he went to the house of a colored man named Boyle and forced him to loan him his horse, taking Boyle's son with him to return the horse.

From Boyle's he went to the house of West Wilson, a respectable white farmer, over 60 years of age, and demanded that Mr. Wilson loan him his buggy. This Mr. Wilson refused to do, whereupon, without warning, Cooper shot him three times. Mr. Wilson's son, who had been within, then appeared in the door of the house, and was shot down in his tracks.

Leaving the Boyle boy with the horse, Cooper then forced Mrs. Wilson to accompany him to the stables and show him the harness. He then returned to the house with her and was inside with her for some time. When he came out he told the Boyle boy that he had ravished her and afterward cut her throat.

His next move was to load Wr. Wilson's buggy with everything in the way of provisions and valuables that could be found about the place.

He had driven only a few hundred yards from the scene of the slaughter, when he met a young negro named Preston Smith, whom he commanded to fall upon his knees. Smith did so, and was braind with an ax by the fiend, while in that position.

A short distance further on he passed the house of Mr. Baker, and fired at his children, who were playing on the piazza.

The Sheriff of the county organized several posses, which scoured the country, determined, despite the fact that it might cost several lives, to capture the fiend, who seemed to be raging for blood.

Blacks and whites alike joined in the pursuit.

He was betrayed by his half-brother and uncle, and was located in his uncle's house, five miles from Sumter, early Friday morning, and [illegible] building was surrounded by [illegible] of twenty men, under Sheriff [illegible]n, of Sumter. Cooper kept th[illegible] at a safe distance with a Win[illegible]er rifle; none dared to rush on what seemed to be certain death. The Sheriff telegraphed the conditions to the Governor, and asked that a cannon with "solid" shot and a supply of long-range rifles be sent to him on a special train. Governor Evans replied that no cannon was available, and ordered Cooper's capture, dead or alive.

Backed in this, the Sheriff got a cannon in Sumter, but while it was being conveyed to the seat of war, Cooper was killed. It seems that under protection of another house some members of the posse got within a short distance of where Cooper was, and kept up a hot fire.

He hailed them and offered to talk. One of the members told him it would be best to give himself up, but he blasphemed terribly at the suggestion. He was told if he came out unarmed, with his hands up, he would not be killed. Finally Cooper did come out. One member of the posse, keeping him covered, walked up and took hold of him. The others then surrounded the negro, who began to resist. Then he was shot in the head with a pistol and afterwards with a rifle. He fell, but regained consciousness and kept up his cursing. It was suggested to burn him, but the half dead man was started to Sumter. On the road the posse, which had assumed the proportions of a mob, tied the officers of the law, hauled Cooper out of the cart in which he was, and strung him up to a tree, riddling him with bullets.

A coroner's inquest held on the spot resulted in a verdict that the killing had been done by persons unknown to the jury.

Cooper's body was carted through the streets of Sumter and viewed by a large crowd. The negroes seemed joyous over the killing of Cooper. The desperado's last wish was that he might have a chance to kill the brother who betrayed him.

WORK COMPLETED.

General Arbitration Treaty Only Awaits Approval.

New York, N. Y.—A Washington special to the Journal says that the general arbitration treaty between Great Britain and the United States has been completed. Secretary of State Olney and Sir Julian Pauncefote, the British Ambassador, have been working on the final draft of the treaty for the last five days. The finishing touches were given it Saturday night.

To-day Secretary of State Olney will sign the measure and will then transmit it to Congress for ratification by the Senate. On Tuesday a duplicate copy of this important paper, bearing the official signature of the Secretary of State, will be started for England to receive the approval of the British Government.

This is purely a perfunctory duty, however, as Lord Salisbury has in advance ratified for the English Government the essential points contained in the formal treaty. He has been cognizant of every step in the preparation of the paper, so that to all essential purposes the treaty will become operative as soon as it is ratified by the Senate of the United States.

The treaty as drawn and agreed to by Mr. Olney and Ambassador Pauncefote, covers these points:

1. It establishes a high court of arbitration. This commission is composed of three members of the Supreme Court of the United States, to be chosen by the President, and three members of the High Court of Appeals of Great Britain, to be elected by the Prime Minister.

2. The treaty is to be operative for a period of five years from the date of the exchange of ratifications.

3. The Court of Arbitration shall have exlcusive jurisdiction over all questions between the two countries on which differences are now pending or which may arise during the life of the treaty, with the exception of the Behring Sea question and the Venezuelan dispute.

4. No dispute involving National honor or sovereignty is to be submitted to the Arbitration Commission.

The Alaska boundary and other boundary questions not otherwise disposed of are to be included in the list of questions for final arbitration. It is proposed that the tribunal shall also act as a claims commission.

As soon as the general arbitration treaty now ready for the signature of Secretary Olney is sent to the Senate and ratified by that body, the machinery will be set in motion that will send various disputed boundary questions to the arbitration tribunal for comparatively early settlement.

MURDERED HIS BONDSMAN.

Seth T. Foreman Shot By Postmaster Landers.

Williamsport, Pa.—George K. Landers, postmaster at Newbury, a suburb of this city, this afternoon shot and fatally injured Seth T. Foreman, one of the most prominent men of Williamsport, and one of the postmaster's bondsmen. The men quarreled over a shortage in Lander's accounts, which his bondsmen have made good.

STARVED TO DEATH.

Altoona, Pa.—Mrs. Oscar Adams was found starved to death in an upper room of a Fourth Street tenement house. Her husband was found by her side half crazed and in a critical condition for want of food. The Board of Health reports sixty-five families (300 persons) utterly destitute.

TREND OF TRADE.

As Reported by Dun's and Bradstreet's Agencies.

IN THE COMMERCIAL WORLD.

One Advantage in the New Year's Business is the Cleaning Up of Unsound Concerns.

THE SPECULATIVE MARKETS DULL.

Comparative Figures as to the Banking and Commercial Failures.—Enormous Purchases of Billets.—Great Iron Trade Expected.—No Change In the Wool Market.

New York.—R. G. Dun & Co. in their weekly review of trade, say:

The year of 1897 begins with one advantage; the past year has swept out of the way a great number of unsound concerns, which in any time of activity would have been a danger to business. Of the 15,286 commercial and banking failures in 1896, with liabilities of $276,815,749, a large share representing crippled losses in previous years, or the violence of speculative storms in 1895 or the first half of 1896, while thousands more resulted from the fury of the political tornado last Fall. Banking failures amounted to $50,718,915 during the year; averaged $256,156 each, and were 145 per cent. larger than in 1895.

Commercial failures amounted to $226,096,834, a little over $1,000,000 having been added by the last day of the year, but the average of liabilities, $14,992, was smaller than in some years of great prosperity. The failures of brokerage and "other" commercial concerns averaged $58,418 each, increasing 183 per cent. over 1895, while manufacturing failures averaged $28,808 each, and increased 34 per cent., and trading failures increased 18 per cent. and averaged only $9,606 each.

While banking failures have not ceased at the West, apprehension about them has almost wholly subsided, and no serious influence upon general trade is now expected. Many sound concerns were, doubtless, caught by the epidemic, but practically all the important failures are traced to disregard of law and of banking sense at periods somewhat distant. It is felt at the West that all business will be the sounder of its purging, and the return of money to New York has exceeded shipments to the interior by $2,000,000 for the week. Heavy disbursements by the Treasury and by great corporations make money abundant, and banks and savings banks are seeking good paper, taking some formerly sold at Chicago. Foreign exchange has risen a trifle, as large bills are about to mature. Merchandise exports were 11 per cent. over last year, while imports were 27 per cent. less for the same week.

Speculative markets have been dull.

Cotton started up a shade, but receipts from plantations are still too large for low estimates, and the condition of the cotton mills foreshadows curtailment rather that large consumption. The market for goods is extremely low, as many infer that the unprecedented stocks of print cloths indicate a surplus of other goods. The logic is bad, but in many branches the mills have, doubtless, manufactured goods anticipating a demand which has not come. It is now proposed to relieve the market by selling quantities of print cloths abroad, or by locking up 2,000,000 pieces until the market improves. The only change in quotations is ¼c. reduction in some bleached goods.

In woolen goods the only change is a reduction of 7½ cents in Clay worsteds and mixtures, and orders are not more frequent.

Orders for boots and shoes have almost ceased, except for a few qualities which have been advanced only 2½ to 5 cents in price, but jobbers are buying a little more as stocks run low. Leather is stiff, and hides a shade stronger.

Enormous purchases of billets came with a rush, most of the large concerns contracting for all they required for months and even a year to come, and some of the largest contracts are said to have been at $15 or even less; but there is as yet no better demand for structural work. Bars are weak. Nails have declined to $1.40 for wire and $1.30 for cut, and little is doing in rails, as possible buyers think $25 is too high with billets at $15 per ton. Nevertheless, a great trade is expected when relative prices become settled.

At most centers salesmen are just starting out. Collections are reported unsatisfactory, but in many instances merchants express themselves as hopeful of a good Spring business.

The price movement has had little significance, advances having been shown in hides, which have become relatively scarce, as well as turpentine, coffee, wool, oats and tin. Firm and practically unchanged quotations have been recorded for wheat, flour, pork, sugar, cotton, print cloths and petroleum., and reactions are reached in quotations for Southern pig iron, lard and corn.

There is no change in the wool market, manufacturers declining to buy until they receive orders for goods. More strength has been shown by boots and shoes since the first of the week. Iron and steel have been disappointing, as consumers evidently anticipate a further reduction in prices, and refuse to place orders. The week has been marked by exceptionally heavy orders of Southern pig iron for export. Cotton goods remain as depressed, and the market is as unsatisfactory as heretofore, with lower prices expected. The week's total of business failures throughout the United States is 488, one of the largest ever reported. This is contrasted with 329 in the last week of 1896, with 446 in the first week of 1896; 405 in the corresponding week of 1895, and with 484 in the like portion of 1894.

SOUTH'S ADVANTAGE

In the Iron and Steel Making Industry.

Washington, D. C.—The total absence of Southern iron and steel manufacturers before the Committee of Ways and Means Saturday, on the occasion of hearings on the iron and steel schedules, was a fact that excited some considerable comment. The explanation was given incidentally in the argument of the Pennsylvania manufacturer, when he said the Southern mills were making no money, and yet were producing steel and pig iron at less cost than the Northern makers the ore costing at least $1 less delivered at Southern than at Northern mills. The Southern manufacturers, realizing this fact, know that their interests will be well taken care of before the committee of Northerners, for any concession they may secure will operate even more handsomely to the Southern mill owners. Generally speaking, cost of manufacturing in the South is cheaper than in the North, and in this fact is found the explanation of the very small attendance of Southern protectionists since the hearings began.

J. C. Thropp, of Everett, Pa., a member of the Eastern Association, addressed the committee. The smelters regarded the present condition of the market as abnormal, he said. Prices were lower than they should be, and prices abroad abnormally high. At present the Wilson law ($4 a ton) was sufficient protection. The depression in the United States market was due to domestic competition and decreased consumption. Last year's consumption was 1,700,000 tons less than that of 1892. The Southern mills were making no money. The view of the tariff question held by the association was that on products which American resources could supply for American consumption, the duties should be high enough to keep out foreign goods. The average cost of pig iron in Pennsylvania was $10 to $10.50 a ton. The ore laid down at the works in Pennsylvania cost $6.25 to $7 a ton, while the Southern smelters could secure it at $1 or more cheaper. Another advantage held by Southern manufacturers was that they could practically compel their workmen to deal at company stores, which was forbidden by Pennsylvania law. One Virginia company had made $48,000 on its store last year, while it had lost on every ton of iron turned out.

W.C. Crouemyer, of Pittsburg, asked the following advances in rates on tin plates and similar wares: On tin plates or sheets of iron or steel, from 1 1-5 to 1½ cents a pound; sheet iron or sheet steel, polished or glazed, from ⅛ to ¼ cent a pound; sheet, common or black, between 10 and 25 wire gauge, from 1 1-10 to 1 2-10 cents.

John Jarrett, of Pittsburg, said tin plate making could not have been continued in the United States under the Wilson law, except for the reduction of 25 per cent. in wages and the cheaper price of steel plates resulting from the general depression in business.

The shotgun manufacturers, through Thomas Hunter, of Cuyuga County, New York, asked for specific instead of ad valorem duties.

R. E. Hastings, of Philadelphia, spoke for the makers of gold, silver and aluminum leaf and of Dutch metal; W. Schartman, of Elwood City, Pa., for makers of seamless tubes, and C. B. Storrs, of New Jersey, advocated higher duties on antimony.

MONTEVALLO, ALA., JAN. 9, 1897.

The Alabama presidential electors met in Montgomery on last Monday and cast their votes for Bryan and Sewall.

A heavy snow storm is reported in the norhwest. The Missouri valley and the great lake region are covered with a mantle of white.

The General Asssembly of Alabama will reconvene on the 20th inst. The committees appointed to sit during the recess seem to be busy at work.

The taking of testimony in the Alabama congressional contest cases has commenced, and the indications are that these fights are to be prosecuted and defended most vigorously.

For the first time in twenty-four years North Carolina has a Republican Governor. On the 12th inst. Hon. Daniel Russell, of Wilmington, was inaugurated. This is one of the results of the populist movement in the Old North State.

The Treasury gold reserve is climbing rapidly to the $140,000,- mark. The big trade balance in our favor is doing it. Yet the republicans cannot wait until McKinley is inaugurated before they begin perfecting plans for the construction of a tariff wall along American shores.—News.

The little town of Centre, the county site of Cherokee county, was almost completely destroyed by fire on the morning of the 12th inst. only four business houses were saved from the flames. One account seems to indicate that the fire was incendiary, robbery having been first committed. Another account thinks that it was accidental. Very little insurance.

Capt. T. S. Plowman has replied to the charges of Congressman W. F. Aldrich in his matter of contest for Plowman's seat in strong and forcible language. He does not mince his words and he tells some startling and sensational things concerning Mr. Aldrich of a most damaging character. Mr. Aldrich, it seems, is not going to find very smooth sailing in his present contest.

A city is nothing but a grand corporation with every citizen a stockholder where it is the duty of all who reside within its limits at proper times to do everything within the bounds of reason to promote the prosperity of the enterprise This is a moral as well as a business obligation that all should recognize Moral because no citizen has the moral right to be a drone in the industrial hive where he is to be benefitted by the general prosperity but it is his duty if he expects to be benefitted by public enterpises to do his proportionate part in bringing them about. A business obligation because every new enterprise that promotes the progress of a city, not only benefits those immediately concerned, but every citizen is benefitted more or less by any movement which increases the circulation of money in a city or adds to its business or commercial importance. We do not of course mean that it is the business of every citizen to be thrusting himself forward unasked, into an interference with any and all enterprises that may be started in his city, by individuals or corporations, but we mean that readiness to do his part, however humble it may be, in really public matters, where the city at large is concerned. That spirit which leads to attendance on citizens meetings and hearty co.operation in city matters. That spirit which does its part in upholding such co-operative movements, as a live and active commercial association. In fine, that spirit which acknowledges patriotic duties and a willingness to perform them in promoting the public welfare.—Selma Journal.

CALERA LOCALS.

Hon. R. W. Cobb was in the city a few hours on Monday.

Miss Della Staples of Oxford is visiting Mrs. J. T. McMillan this week.

Mr. Frank Miller of Highland gave the Sentinel a pleasant call on last Monday.

Miss Sallie Veach of Bessemer is visiting Miss Sarah Francis in the city this week.

Mr. Christopher of Birmingham was a pleasant visitor at the Sentinel office on Monday.

Rev. C. L. Herring filled his regular appointment at the Methodist church on last Sunday.

Mis Lottie Duran has returned home after a pleasant visit to relatives and friends in Texas.

The tramp brotherhood continues to be numerous. Calera seems to be a favorite stapping place for them, so much so that they are becoming a nuisance to the citizens.

On next Saturday and Sunday the first quarterly meeting of the year for the Calera circuit will be held with the church at this place. Rev. S. L Dobbs. the presiding elder will be present.

BORN—To Dr. and Mrs. J. H. Gunn on Monday the 11th inst., a daughter. The Sentinel extends congratulations.

Mrs. Nettie Leeper or Anniston and Mrs. N. A. Graham of this place visited relatives and friends at Jemison yesterday

The grip continues to afflict a number of our citizens. Several of them have been quite sick during the past week but we are pleased to be able to report none as being seriously ill at this time.

Mr. A. J. Powers, who has been merchandising at this place for the past year or more, is we learn, making his arrangements to move to Anniston. We regret very much to lose him from Calera, but wish him success in his new home.

We are informed that Mr. A. C. Wade, a former citizen and merchant of this place, but for the past year or more has resided in Montgomery, contemplates returning here at an early day and will again engage in the mercantile business at his old stand,where Mr. Powers has held forth during the past year,

We are pleased to learn that the Baptist denomination of Calera have about perfected their arrangements to rebuild their church. It will be remembered that their church, which was the largest and one of the handsomest church buildings in our town, was destroyed by fire about a year ago. Since that time the members of this church, though comparatively few in number, have been steadily at work to rebuild their house, and since Rev. W. B. Carter became the pastor, a few weeks ago, they have redoubled their efforts, with his hearty cooperation, and most gratifying results have crowned their efforts. It has not been decided as yet, we understand, whether the new building will be erected on the same old lot or whether a different location will be secured. However, it has been decided that the work of rebuilding will begin at an early day. We earnestly hope that every assistance and encouragement will be given by all our people to this good cause and that the day is not far distant when our Baptist friends will again have a beautiful and comfortable house of worship in Calera.

The Washinton Post tells a little story about Congressman Catchings, of Mississippi. Mr.Catchings was a sound money Democrat during the early days of the administration and until the question of his return to Congress depended on his change of heart. Then he came out for silver and was reelected. The other day some Democrats in the House were discussing the possible Democratic member of the committee on Rules to take the place of the late Judge Crisp. Some one suggested Mr. Catchings. "But Catchings is a silver man," said a Southern member. "Oh, no ,"instantly remarked Representative Owens, of Kentucky "his silver term doesen't commence until the 4th. of March."

The Governor of Indiana recommends the passage by the Legislature of a compulsory education law. We do not know how it is in Indiana, but in most of the other States there is considerable difficulty experienced in providing accomodations for the children who present themselves under voluntary education laws. The States will do well if they take care of those who present themselves to be taught of their own free wills.—Savannah News.

In the past few weeks there have been quite a number of persons here from abroad looking around with a view of purchasing property and locating here, but they have all departed without making any arrangements whatever. It seems the main cause of their failure to settle among us is that the property here is held so high as to almost prohibit strangers from getting a home at this place. It may suit some individuals to keep their property off the market but it is not a very good way to build up the city or encouraging new enterprises.

Mrs. C. L. Meroney spent Sunday with relatives in Columbiana.

Attorney E. S. Lman was a visitor at the county seat Wednesday.

C. W. Cary is slowly recovering from a serious attack of the grip.

This is claimed to be the dryest fall ever known to this section. Shoal creek has dwindled down to a narrow rivulet and the water is so low that the mill cannot be run even for a few hours each day.

The Southern Railway is again running trains by way of Blocton and over the Cahaba River bridge, which has been repaired sufficiently to permit the passage of trains. The first train made the trip over the bridge Thursday morning.

To the Industrial School girls who desire to subscribe for the NEWS, either for themselves or to send to their parents, we will make a rate of 50 cents for the entire school year or 30 cents from now until the end of the present school year.

J. M. Reynolds went to Birmingham Monday to arrange the preliminaries in regard to the damage suits against the railroad growing out of the Cahaba bridge wreck. He has been retained as attorney in sixteen of the cases and as associate attorney in three others.

An oyster supper was given at Lyman's Hall on Friday evening, January 8, under the auspices of the Ladies Aid Society of the M. E. church. The affair was very liberally patronized and netted the society about $17.50 which, we understand, will be contributed to the parsonage fund.

The descendants of this couple, the late Jesse Frost and wife, number one hundred, hence only about one half of them were present at this reunion. SIX MILE LOCALS.

Jan. 12, 1897.

The Teachers' Institute met at Six Mile on the 8th and 9th inst, and never before in the history of the place was school interest at such high tide. Not one minute was lost; teachers were on their feet waiting for a chance to talk. Normalism has certainly fanned educational spark into a glowing flame.

The Six Mile Normal is steadily growing in numbers. Already her list has tipped the scale of a hundred and her progress is onward and upward. Her enthusiastic and energetic are clearing away the mist from around the proud banner of education.

It was with sad hearts that we consigned the remains of sister McGuire to their last resting place at Carlton Hill Sunday, but the bright evidence that we had that we only interred the house from which the spirit had winged its way heavenward comforts us.

Prof. David Langston, principal of a large normal school at Sherman, Miss., paid us a visit during the Christmas holidays. In his speech at the Six Mile Normal he said that in five years the old fossilized method of teaching would have its existance in Lethe's wanes. T. J. S.

"Put me down as a warm friend of TETTERINE. I have a child three years old who has been afflicted from its birth with the worst case of eczema I ever saw, it being one mass of sores from its feet to its crown. It has been treated by nine of the most eminent physicians in this and adjoining States without the slightest benefit. Several months ago we commenced the use of TETTERINE on the child, and to-day, thank God and the manufacturers of TETTERINE, the child is cured. My wife and I will ever feel grateful to you for sending us this blessing.

HOW TO FIND OUT.

Fill a bottle or common water glass with urine and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates a diseased condition of the kidneys. When urine stains linen it is positive evidence of kidney trouble. Too frequent desire to urinate or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

WHAT TO DO.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, fulfills every wish in relieving pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passages. It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to get up many times during the night to urinate. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. Sold by druggists, price fifty cents and one dollar. For a sample bottle and pamphlet, both sent free by mail, mention this paper and send your full postoffice address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The proprietors of this paper guarantee the genuineness of this offer.

BIGGEST GRAVE MONUMENT.

Daniel Moriarity Starts a 375-Tonner for His First Wife.

Daniel Moriarity, a retired New Orleans grocer, now living in Alameda County, California, is a happy man at last, or nearly happy, for after visiting all the quarries and cemeteries in the United States, he has found people willing to fulfill the desire of his heart, and he will soon be the owner of the largest graveyard monument in the country, and probably the largest in the world. It will weigh 750,000 lbs., and when everything has been paid for it will have cost over $50,000.

The monument is not for himself, however. It is to be erected in honor of his first wife, to whom he says his present affluence is due, and after her, in honor of his father, Joseph Moriarity, who died in New Orleans in 1858. His first wife has been dead eighteen years, and Mr. Moriarity has taken unto himself another and moved to the Pacific coast. He came to America when a boy, and got into the grocery business. His boss was a widow, Mary Farrel by name, who fell in love with him and took him into partnership for better or worse and the success of the grocery business.

Daniel Moriarity waxed rich. Mrs. Moriarity gave herself up to domestic duties and died. Daniel grew richer and richer, but in the days of his prosperity he remembered the cause thereof, and with the aid of Mrs. Moriarity No. 2 he determined upon a fitting memorial. When the plan was all worked out, it was found that the memorial would be large enough to stand for his father, too.

Here are the parts and their dimensions: On a foundation of fifty-foot piles there rests a concrete block thirty feet square and six feet deep. Next comes four slabs, two of them 30x8 1-2x1 and the other two 13x8 1-2x1. These will be laid so as to form a square 13x13, which will be filled with concrete. Then comes the base stone, 14x14x3, weighing about fifty tons. Next are two courses of granite about twenty tons each, which support the die stone, eight feet high by six feet in diameter, panneled on four sides, at the joining of which will be granite columns with Corinthian capitals. Upon each column will be a statue carved in Wesley granite—Faith, Hope, Charity, Temperance.

Then comes the great shaft of Barre granite, four feet at the base and tapering to two feet. This will be surmounted by a simple granite cross, making the total height of the monument seventy feet.

The lot on which it will stand faces Central avenue in Metairie Cemetery, New Orleans. It is the finest situation within the grounds, and is the one which was chosen by the South to receive the remains of Jefferson Davis.—New York Press.

Gave Himself Away.

In a letter that recently reached this country, written by one of Queen Victoria's soldiers, who was with his regiment marching against the Dervishes in the Egyptian campaign, is a little amusing story of a certain soldier who disliked the intense heat of the country and sought in every kind of way to obtain some excuse for quitting the service. It seems he complained to the doctor of his eyes, claiming that he was so near-sighted that he could not with safety fire off his gun for fear of hitting a comrade instead of an enemy.

"Dear me," said the doctor, "that is a serious matter. Now tell me what you mean by near-sighted."

"Well, sir," said the soldier, and he looked around thoughtfully as if in search of some idea, "it is an example you want? Ah, I have one. Can you see that pin lying in a corner over there?"

"Why, yes! And I should say it required excellent eyesight to see it, too," replied the doctor.

"Well, that's my trouble, sir; I can't see it."

The poor man is still wondering why he is not sent back to the home station.—Harper's Round Table.

OUR OWN STATE.

Interesting Happenings Throughout Alabama.

Montgomery.—State Treasurer Geo. W. Ellis has authorized the statement to be made public that "the State Treasurer will begin sending out school money, due January 1, on next Wednesday, the 13th inst." That it will take several days to get all of it out, probably until Saturday, the 16th.

The Supreme Court adjourned at a late hour Friday evening, after a hard week's work, finishing up the call of the Seventh Division.

The Fourth Division was called this week.

The following bids have been filed in the Governor's office for the Agricultural School, to be established in the Fifth District.

Dadeville offers, first: School lot and college building, valued at $7,000; second, furniture valued at $500; third, eighty-six acres of land, valued at $1,500; fourth, $5,000 in money.

Alexander City offers school lot building and eighty acres of land and $2,000 in money.

Wetumpka offers, first, one school building, nearing completion, and a two-acre lot valued at $3,500; second, eighty acres of land, valued at $2,800; third, $2,500 in money.

Other bids are expected, and the contest for the college will be lively.

THE SEMMES MONUMENT.

Mobile.—The ladies of Mobile have determined that no longer shall the unsightly, unfinished monument to the memory of Admiral Semmes remain a blot on the fair name of Mobile. Many futile attempts have been made to finish this monument, but the women of Mobile have now perfected an organization having the completion of the monument as their primary object. These women do not intend to rest from their labors until they have accomplished this object. They believe, nor is their faith groundless, that in less than six months will their work be crowned with success: The officers of the ossociation known as "The Ann T. Hunter Branch" of the Raphael Semmes Camp United Confederate Veterans, are Mrs. E. B. Vaughan, president; Mrs. W. T. Abrahams, vice-president; Mrs. E. W. Christian, treasurer; Mrs. R. L. Sheridan, Jr., corresponding secretary.

THE MINING INDUSTRIES.

Birmingham.—The coal output in this district has increased very considerably the past two weeks. Work at the mines is much brisker. It is stated that export coal is being mined at Blocton. The miners have gotten down to work after enjoying the holidays, and the mines are quite the busiest place in the district.

The iron and coal outputs for the year 1896 will not present as good a showing as might be desired. The latter will be found a half million tons short of the year 1895, and the iron output will also be found to be probably somewhat short. The iron output in other parts of the country will, however, present the same showing, and the Birmingham district has no reason to complain in comparison.

WILL SOON BE READY.

Blocton.—The bridge over the Cahaba River, on the Southern Railway, which went down with a passenger train of the Birmingham Mineral, causing the death of more than a score of people, will be ready for travel again by next Saturday. This information has been given out by the Superintendent of the bridge gang, now at work at the place. The bridge is being replaced in a most substantial manner, and everything will be ready by the end of the week. There has been a little inconvenience experinced since the bridge went down on account of having to carry coal and other freight from this place bound for Mobile and other parts in that locality and by that way around by Bessemer and Grace's.

DEAD COMES TO LIFE.

Union Springs.—Ritch Jordan was captured near here Friday. It will be remembered that Jordan was taken by a mob from Deputy Kirkland as the train was near Mitchell Station in this county, on August 24, 1894, while en route to the penitentiary. Governor Jones then offered a reward for the mob and negro's body, for the latter was supposed to be dead. All here have believed him dead for the past two years. Ritch was captured by Deputies Kirkland and Guy Ritch and kept in jail last night. He tells all about his escape from the mob while handcuffed with Riley Walker.

EUFAULA MERCHANT FAILS.

Selma—Hon. W. F. Aldrich fears violence. At least he went to Chief Dawson and laid his troubles before him. Congressman Aldrich said he had been informed that an effort would be made to break up the taking of evidence in Selma, and that he wanted police enough on hand to prevent trouble.

Chief Dawson told him that there was not a particle of foundation for his fears; that the people of Selma were not thinking about the matter, and did not care how much testimony he took. Of course, he was promised the protection that he askek for.

STRUCK BY MAIL CRANE.

Verbena.—Mr. E. L. Watts, a well-known and popular engineer on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, met with a peculiar and painful accident here. He was on train No. 15, and ahead of No. 3, the South-bound passenger train. Just before coming into Verbena he put his head out of his cab window to see if his train was all right, when he struck the mail crane. He had presence of mind to stop his train, and it was thirty minutes before he was able to sit up again.

THE REAR GUARD

Is What Mr. Washburn Styles the Democratic Party.

Boston, Mass.—George F. Washburn, member of the People's party National Executive Committee, has issued an address to the Populists of the United States. In part the address is as follows:

"We are to be congratulated upon the growth of our party and the fact that in the recent election nearly one-half of the voters of the Union indorsed our platform. No party ever achieved more brilliant success in so brief a time. Although handicapped in the late campaign, we emerge from the contest stronger that ever. Our party alone has a voting force larger than that which elected Lincoln, and an able, effective reform press of nearly 2,000 papers. We elected several Governors, as well as hundreds of other State, county and town officials. We hold the balance of power in the United States Senate, and have four times as many Congressmen as ever before. We united with the silver forces in the recent campaign, not because we believe free coinage of silver is the solution of the financial poblem, but because it would better existing conditions, would meet with the least resistance, and would become the entering wedge for our main issue, viz.: Full legal tender paper money issued and regulated by the Government alone. Having proved our loyalty at the polls, we are free to act separately on advanced lines and to emphasize the real issues our party was born to advocate. We cannot in honor lay down our arms and cease our activity until the war for which we are enlisted has ended in victory for our cause.

"The Democratic party proposes to continue the silver fight. Two parties cannot exist on the same issue. The greater absorbes the smaller. Therefore, if we remain mere camp-followers of another party, disintegration will result. Our party success alone forced the Democrats to adopt the Chicago platform and nominate a Popocrat for president. Converts made by our party regularly can not be trusted with the reforms in future.

"We are not Democrats, and cannot be classed as such. We simply united for a single campaign. The Democratic party is but the rear guard of our own. We do not stand for redemption money, but for the scientific dollar, kept invariable by proper regulation of the money volume. Then why should a high school graduate reenter the intermediate grade? Our grandest achievements are in the future.

"The proposed retirement of the greenbacks and the discussion of the Pacific Railroad question will bring before Congress the two strongest measures of our platform, and, whatever issues the other parties may adopt, the logic of events will so force upon both Congress and the people the consideration of these measures as to overshadow all others and win to our ranks thousands of voters from both the Republican and Democratic parties.

"I suggest that a national conference of party leaders and workers be held as soon as practicable, that we may have a full and free expression of opinion regarding our future work. We hope, therefore, that the reform press will give the fullest possible expression of our views on this important subject; and our friends are invited to write me or our National Chairman, expressing their ideas on the independent party action herein proposed."

BRADSTREET'S REVIEW.

New York.—Bradstreet's makes the following report:

With the exception of reports from a dozen South Atlantic coast and gulf cities, jobbers at nearly all distributing centers say business is dull and without new features. Demand has improved at Chicago and St. Louis for hats, hardware, shoes and dry goods, but trade in those lines is fair only. Cold weather has stimulated purchases of clothing at some points. Little general recovery from holiday dullness is reported as yet.

A TALE OF FRONTIER LIFE.

RECOLLECTIONS RECALLED BY INDIAN INCURSIONS.

What a Lowell Reporter Discovered in the Historic Town of Dunstable---Miraculous Escape From a Miserable Existence of a Descendant of One of the Pioneer Warriors of Colonial Times ---The Talk of the Neighborhood.

From the News, Lowell, Mass.

Mr. Hiram Spaulding, who was for many years the proprietor of the Massapong House, a Boston summer resort, is undoubtedly as well known as any man in Middlesex County. Mr. Spaulding, besides having been a popular hotel man, boasts of being a lineal descendant of John Spaulding, a well known soldier who was killed in action with the Indians while serving in the command of the famous Captain John Tyng in 1804. He also is well known as the first leader of the celebrated Dunstable Cornet Band, of Dunstable, Mass., familiarly known as the "mounted band." Altogether Bandmaster Spaulding is perhaps the best known citizen in town, and respected everywhere for his uprightness and sterling character.

Mrs. Nellie A. Spaulding is the wife of this gentleman, and almost as well known as her popular husband. A recent severe illness from overwork and malaria caused grave fears among her numerous acquaintances, and the local physicians seemed powerless to aid her. Chills and fever, impaired action of heart and liver, and general wretchedness were her portion, until her attention was called to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and she began to use them. On Labor Day, Monday, Sept. 7, 1896, Mrs. Spaulding finished the first box of Pink Pills, and she informed the News reporter that on that day she performed one of the hardest day's work ever accomplished by her. She is still taking Pink Pills according to directions, and all traces of malarial poison seem to have vanished.

"No one was more astonished at my recovery than my husband and my neighbors, and they are not surprised," said she, "to find in me such a champion of what is destined to become a household medicine, the precious Pink Pills."

At the request of Mrs. Spaulding, the News reporter called on several persons in the town of Dunstable, all highly respectable ladies of prominence in the community; he found them using "Pink Pills" with good results, and after a fair trial will (so they thought) be ready to add their testimonials to that of Mrs. Spaulding as to their medicinal and curative worth, especially in chronic cases of nervousness.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effects of la grippe, palpitation of the hoart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, (they are never sold in bulk or by the 100), by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

An Interesting Decision of the U. S. Supreme Court.

THE DISPENSARY LAW

Of South Carolina is Declared Unconstitutional by the Court of Last Resort.

VIOLATES INTER-STATE COMMERCE.

Justice Brown Records a Dissent.—Says if the Decision Holds, the Wilson Law is Inoperative, as it With-Draws Liquor from the Operations of the Clause.

Washington, D. C.—The Supreme Court of the United States has decided that the famous Dispensary law of South Carolina, at least so far as it attempted to prevent a citizen of the State from importing into the Commonwealth liquor for his own use, was a violation of the Interstate Commerce clause of the Federal Constitution, and therefore null and void.

The opinion of the Court was prepared by Justice Shiras, but in his absence, owing to indisposition, its conclusions were announced by Chief Justice Fuller. The cases at bar were begun in the Federal Court for South Carolina by James Donald, a citizen of that State, upon the seizure of a case of California claret, six bottles of Maryland whisky and a barrel of Rochester (N. Y.) beer, by S. M. Gardner, M. T. Holly, Sr., E. C. Beach and James M. Scott, State constables, acting under the provisions of the Dispensary law, directing the seizure of all the liquors in the hands of any common carrier, agent or private citizen, not sold by the State agent, whether imported or otherwise. The trial court gave Donald judgment for $500 in each case, and the constables appealed. The cases were argued last Fall, the validity of the entire law being brought into question. The opinion of the Court stated that the proceedings were not a suit against the State (which could not be brought without its consent), and that the pleadings of the record raised questions which gave the Supreme Court of the United States jurisdiction of the whole subject. The law was discussed at great length, in the opinion of and many of the authorities cited the result being that the judgment of the court below, in favor of the owner of the liquors, for the reason that the law was in contravention of the clause of the National Constitution regulating commerce between the states. The opinion conceded that the Legislature of the State passed the law in what it believed to be the exercise of its police power, and with no intention to interfere with the operation of any Federal law, or to discriminate against the products of any other State, but that intention, it continued, could not finally control the determination of the effect of the law.

Mr. Justice Brewer did not hear the argument, and took no part in the decision. Mr. Justice Brown recorded a vigorous dissent, saying: "The effect of the enactment of the Wilson law seems to me to withdraw intoxicating liquors from the operation of the commerce clause of the Constitution, and to permit the traffic in them to be regulated in such manner as the several States, in the exercise of their police powers, shall deem best for the general interests of the public. The act is not limited in its operation, as the majority opinion seems to assume, the State laws forbidding the importation, manufacture and sale of such liquors, but declares that they shall be subject, upon their arrival within the State, to the opeation of all its police powers.

Now, as Congress has expressly declared that such articles shall, upon their arrival in the State, become subject to its laws, to the same extent as if they had been originally produced there, and, as the Dispensary act does not declare them contraband, as imported liquors, or because they were imported, but because they were not bought from a State officer, authorized to sell the same, and as the law makes no discrimination in that particular between imported and domestic liquors, it is impossible for me to see why Congress has not directly authorized the action that was taken by the State officers in seizing these liquors.

"But, as I understand, the court bases to a certain extent, its opinion of the unconstitutionality of this act upon the fact that the traffic in intoxicating liquor is not absolutely prohibited, but is monopolized by the State itself, through the agency of a State commissioner.

"Granting that the act gives the State itself a monopoly of all the traffic in such liquors, it is not a monopoly in an ordinary or odious sense of the term, where one individual or corporation is given the right to manufacture or trade which is not open to others, but a monopoly for the benefit of the whole people of the State, the profits of which, if any, are enjoyed by the whole people; in short, a monopoly in the same sense in which the Postoffice Department has the right to carry the mails is a monopoly of the Federal Government.

Quoting Chief Justices Marshall and Waite upon the necessity and expenditure of the courts acting with great delicacy and hesitation in declaring a statute unconstitutional, Justice Brown concluded:

"I regard these words as particularly applicable to the dealings by this court with the proceedings of a State Legislature, and that their right to determine what is for the best interests of their people should be carefully respected, except where it comes in manifest conflict with the dominant laws. Especially should everything be avoided which carries the suggestion of a vexatious interference with State action. The manifest dangers to the future of the country which lurks in the inflexibility of the Federal Constitution, can only be averted by carefully distinguished between such laws as concern the inhabitants of a particular State, and are intended for their bonafide welfare, and such as are a mere subterfuge for an unlawful discrimination and cannot be carried into effect without doing palpaple injustice to citizens of other States. It should not be overlooked in this connection that the complaints in this case emanate from a citizen of South Carolina, who seeks to defy the law of his own State, and puts forward as his excuse the injustice done the citizens of other States, who make no complaint of her action in this particular. If a State cannot prohibit her own citizens from importing liquors, as well as buying them at home, the Wilson bill is set at naught, and the prohibitory laws of the several States rendered inoperative in a vital particular. The fact that these liquors were imported for complainant's own use and consumption, instead of for sale, raises no question under the Federal Constitution. Both are under the ban of the statutes.

"I am unable to see wherein that section of the Dispensary act of South Carolina, which authorizes the seizure made in this case, conflicts in any particular with the Federal Constitution."

TILLMAN WITHDRAWS,

And Governor "Bob" Taylor Will Be Inducted Into Office.

Nashville, Tenn.—Hon. George N. Tillman is out in a card formally abandoning the contest for the gubernatorial chair. Mr. Tillman assigns as his chief reason the enactment of the Bond bill, which has passed the Legislature and received Executive sanction. This bill provides for the execution of bond in the sum of $25,000 by the contestant when such contest is not made in "good faith" or for political effect.

Mr. Tillman says it would be useless for him to contest the election when the men who enacted this measure would be in effect the court of last resort. His action is approved by the leading Republicans of this city and State.

In view of Mr. Tillman's withdrawal the inauguration of Governor-elect Robert L. Taylor has been arranged to take place on Thursday. The occasion will be without demonstration, and ultra democratic in its simplicity.

INDIA COTTON BARRED.

For Fear That It Will Transmit the Bubonic Plague.

London, Eng.—The Rome correspondent of the News, telegraphs that paper that the perfects of the northern provinces of Italy, have prohibited the entry into those colonies, of cotton from India, fearing that it will convey the bubonic plague that is now ravaging Bombay and other places in India. This cotton is imported into Italy by way of Genoa. As a result of the prohibition many of the operatives of the important factories have been thrown out of work owing to the lack of material. The idle operatives are very indignant over the action of the perfects and it is feared that there will be disorders.

The government has announced that an international conference will be held, probably at Rome, to consider measures for the protection of Europe against the plague. It is stated that six powers have already given their adhesion to the proposed conference.

The French Government has declared a quarantie against vessels arriving from Plymouth, England, owing to the recent arrival there of the transport Nubia with cholera on board. Passengers from Plymouth will be detained in French ports for five days.

DRIVEN FROM HOME

By Gen. Weyler's Infamous Bayate Edict and Cubans Are

CROWDING INTO THE TOWNS

Extenuated by Hunger and Emaciated by Fever in a Way to Resemble Skeletons.

THEY TROOP DOWN FROM THE HILLS.

Their Mysery Now Being Augmented By the Privations They are Obliged to Undergo.—The Situation Depicted. --United States Army Officer Will Fight for Cpba.

Key West, Fla.—Advices from Havana state that the effect of Weyler's famous Bayate edict of the 1st inst., is being felt with more intensity in the Provinces of Havana and Matanzas than in that of Pinar del Rio, since these Provinces are more thickly populated and with more farms and estates than the former. The wholesale abandonment of the properties and the concentration of the people in the towns will not only augment the misery already prevailing, but also present the serious inconveniences of lodging so many people in towns already full to overflowing.

Without discussing Weyler's barbarous and inhuman measures in thus depriving peaceful and unoffending citizens of their rightful means of existence, and huddling them in already crowded places, exposed to all the rigors of hunger and disease, simply for the sake of clearing the country of so-called rebel sympathizers, a legal point has been sprung by the foreign property owners, especially the Americans, who own large properties in the Provinces of Havana and Matanzas, which will surely lead to complications and claims on the Spanish Government.

Weyler distinctly states in his decree that those who wish to remain on their properties must exhibit the last tax bill paid. Now, it is a recognized law that taxes are only levied on productive industries, and these planters have not been able to work on account of the abnormal conditions in the Provinces since Gomez's invasion in December, 1895. No taxes have been collected since that time, the Government tacitly admitting such unusual circumstances, or being powerless to collect them because the rebels were in possession of the country, did not press their collection, consequently no taxes have been paid in the country since the date mentioned. Besides that, Weyler has unofficially ordered that no sugar crop should be made, and now he wants the sugar planters to pay taxes on an industry which they have not been able to produce. The legal authority can readily be seen.

The result has been that the manager of the sugar estate "San Antonio," near Madruga, Havana, owned by Mr. Antonio Terry, an American, residing in Paris, presented himself to Consul Lee, demanding protection, because the military commander of Madruga ordered him to abandon the place (which, by the way, is one of the most valuable estates in the Province, worth at least half a million dollars), because he did not present the required tax bill. Consul Lee at once took the case in hand and simultaneously presented the same to the Captain-General and the State Department at Washington. No replies have been received yet, either from Weyler or from Olney.

To depict the situation in Pinar del Rio, nothing can be better said than to translate the report of a trip made to the city of that name by a correspondent of La Luch:

"All the way traversed by the railroad from Artemisa to Consolacion del Sur, is, without exaggeration the most chastised and undoubtedly has suffered most from the rigors of war.

"The fields lie waste, and abandoned, the bushes and trees burned, and the yellow and decayed leaves strewn by the wind, as tears drawn from the mother earth, pained and anguished at the folly of men; the huts destroyed; the stone houses, in other times happy homes, converted by the hands of rebels and Spanish alike into heaps of ruins, the black and fallen walls of which, covered with lichen, only serve as a refuge for the lizards and owls; the cane fields dried up and covered with bushes by the ravages of the fire; the towns—the authorities of which are making great efforts to remedy the necessities of the residents—full of people, of poor families, who daily swoop down from the hills, extenuated by hunger and emaciated by the fevers, in such a way that they resemble skeletons risen out of their tombs to appear before the final judgment; to the right and left of the road, as much as the train winds its rapid march, the traveler observes with painful anguish the desolation and ruin within the inextinguishable poetry of these exuberant fields, always green with the eternal verdure of Spring, as if God, with His eloquence, would point us that the only thing we can do is to destroy the beauties which surged from His bounteous will."

A DECIDED VICTORY,

Accorded to the Cuban Insurgents in the United States Court.

Jacksonville, Fla.—The Cuban insurgents won a decided victory in the United States Court Monday morning, as Judge Locke rendered a decision in the case of the United States vs. the steamer Three Friends for violation of the neutrality laws. The libel affirmed that the Three Friends was "there and then furnished, fitted out and armed with one certain gun or guns, the exact number being to the United States Attorney unknown, and with the munitions of war thereof, with intent then and there to be employed in the service of certain insurgents, or persons in the Island of Cuba, and with the intent to cruise of commit hostilities against the subjects, citizens or property of the king of Spain on the Island of Cuba."

To this, the exception of the respondents was, "that the said libel does not show that the said vessel was so armed or fitted or furnished, with the intent that such vessel should be employed in the service of any body politic recognized or known to the United States as a body politic."

The answer of the libellant, the United States Government, to the exception was that the law, as set forth in section 5283 of the revised statutes, did not require that a vessel that was subject to condemnation for violation of the section, should be employed by anybody recognized by or known to the United States as a body politic. The point made by the respondent was that the statute contemplated a condition of war already existing, and that when no war existed there could be no violation of the statute. The question was then suggested as to how the state of war was to be determined, and it was argued on behalf of the respondents that it could come only by action of Congress—it was far beyond the power of the judiciary to determine the fact. In other words, the insurgents must be recognized as belligerents before the statute could be violated. The court sustained the exceptions of the respondents, and gave the libellants ten days to file an amended libel. If a new libel is not filed within that time the $1,000 bond is to be cancelled and the vessel released.

ELECTRICAL STORM PREVAILED

Cleveland, Ohio, People Scared by Midwinter Lightning.

Cleveland, Ohio.—At 5:35 o'clock Sunday evening the people of Cleveland were startled by an electrical storm which would have been unusual even in midsummer, but coming as it did, in midwinter, it created consternation, and especially among the superstitious, for the lightning was vivid and the thunder loud and unusually severe.

This thunderstorm in January was accompanied by a heavy rainfall—almost as heavy as the worst storm last Summer. In the morning it was quite cold, and just before the electrical storm the atmosphere became so warm that windows were opened and overcoats discarded.

GOOD NEWS COME.

An Envoy Says Gomez is Pushing Toward the City of Havana.

Atlanta, Ga.—General Lacret, of the revolutionary army of Cuba, has sent to the United States Lieut.-Col. Eugenio Varelli, who has placed the facts in his possession in the hands of Dr. A. J. Diaz, of this city.

Colonel Varelli reports the Cubans to be in excellent condition. General Lacret is at present operating in Matanzas Province, while General Gomez is in Havana Province, pushing toward the city. The greatest enthusiasm prevails among the people. Colonel Varelli's mission is to secure material aid for General Lacret.

HENDERSON LYNCHED.

Columbus, Miss.—Meagre particulars of a lynching, which occurred sixty miles west of here, on the Southern railway, Saturday night, reached here Monday. The body is identified as that of Peter Henderson, the negro sleeping car porter, who assaulted John Griffin, a flagman, with an ice pick, one day last week. Griffin, though seriously wounded, has recovered. There is no clue to the lynchers.

GOLD EXCITEMENT.

Opiacas Being Gobbled up by Wealthy Individuals.

Atlanta, Ga.—A special to the Evening Constitution from Dahlonoga, Ga., dated Tuesday, says: The gold fever is on here and it is running higher every day. Old prospectors from Cripple Creek and South Africa are pouring in, and capitalists are taking options as fast as they can obtain them. There is no staking claims here, as the property is all held under title. One hundred mines are being developed within a radius of two miles of this town, where a United States mint was located before the war. That mint, by the way, coined $26,000,000 in gold, but the discovery of the California field and the war broke up mining here, except in a small way, and the mint was abandoned. In the old days the mining in this field was all done by crude methods, and more gold was lost that was saved. Nothing but surface ore was worked, as at a depth of about forty feet sulphates were encountered and the amalgan plates would not catch that.

Recently Mr. A. French, of Pittsburg, Pa., the largest steel spring manufacturer in the world, has demonstrated that the chlorination process is an economical way of treating these ores, and assays of the tailings from the old mills show from $25 to $100 per ton value, which has been allowed to escape. The old mines are being opened, and assays from shafts 100 feet deep give values running from $25 up. Betz, the Philadelphia brewer, and Christian Wahl, of Milwaukee, have obtained very rich assays, the latter having had ore to run as high as $1,100 to the ton. Judge Morris, of Tennessee, who is tunneling a mountain near here, struck three rich veins which run from $29 to $500. All this ore is saprolite, or partly decomposed, and is easily mined.

The belt is of great length. The Creighton mine, on one of these veins, twenty-five miles Southwest of here, yielded 68,000 penny-weights last year, and the capacity is said to be doubled. Pope & Dye, at Holly Springs, are said to have taken out $40,000 in the last few months, using a ten-stamp mill.

Prospectors from South Africa say that this belt is full of mines richer than the famous Robinson mine, and they all say that this is destined to be a wonderful inining camp.

The whole section is wild with excitement because the more that development work goes on the greater are the results. Veins which are mere ribbons on the surface, run together at varying depths, and widen out to ten, fifty and 100 feet, with increasing richness as they go down. One company is being organized to put in a large plant with a 200-stamp mill, and another syndicate is getting ready to put in a 250-stamp mill with a chlorination plant large enough to treat all the concentrates from 500 stamps.

ALMOST A LYNCHING.

Three Georgia Negroes Kill Mrs. Rowland, of Jeffersonville.

Macon, Ga.—The three Negro murderers who so narrowly escaped lynching Saturday are now safely jailed at Jeffersonville, guarded by a posse of twenty men. Mr. Rowland kept a country store. On Thursday night his negro waiter, Forsythe, asked for his pistol, as he feared some strange negroes who were prowling about. He secured the weapon. Rowland and his wife were awakened at 2 a. m. by men demanding something to eat. Forsythe appeared to parley with them, when they were let in, and shot Mrs. Rowland to death, robbed the house and departed. The husband was left alone in the house with the dead body of his wife until dawn before de dared to venture out. It was not until last night that the guilty men were caught. The leader of the gang was Forsythe, who disarmed his employer and then led his companions to the slaughter of Mrs. Rowland.

WRECKED A TRAIN

And Robbed the Passengers.—Ten Spanish Officers Captured.

Havana, Cuba.—Official news has been received here of the wrecking and plundering of a railway train near this city on the night of January 16 by bands of plateadors. The train was the last one running from Regla, a suburb of Havana, on the East side of Havana Bay, to Guanabacoa, five miles further East. The robbers stopped the train at 10:30 p. m., and covering the passengers with their guns, proceeded to rob them of everything of value they had about them. There were ten Spanish officers on board the train who had been on a pleasure trip to the city, and were returning to Guanabacoa. These the robbers made prisoners and took them away. Nine of the officers were subsequently released, but one of them, a native Cuban, was killed for being found in the Spanish service.

NEW SENATORS.

Several States Elect Representatives to the Upper House.

Albany, N. Y.—The Assembly vote on United States Senator, taken Tuesday, was as follows: Platt, 112; Hill, 31; Henry George, 2. Cain and Zurn, of Brooklyn, voted for George. The total vote for Senator on joint ballot, at noon to-morrow, according to Tuesday's roll-call in each House, will be: Platt, 147; Hill, 42; George, 4.

Promptly at 12 o'clock Lieutenant-Governor Woodruff's gavel fell, and he announced that the business before the Senate was to nominate a United States Senator, to succeed Hon. David B. Hill. The roll was then called, and each Senator arose in his seat and announced his choice. When Senator Coffey's name was called he announced as his choice Henry George. Senator Guy was not present when his name was called, but came in later, and also voted for Henry George. They were the only deviations from the caucus agreements. The only absentees were Senators McNulty, Democrat, of Brooklyn, and Grant, Republican, of Delaware.

All of the Republican Senators, including Brush and Pavey, voted for Thomas C. Platt, and the remaining Democrats voted for David B. Hill. The clerk announced the result to be 65 for Thomas C. Platt, 11 for David B. Hill, and 2 for George. Lieutenant-Governor Woodruff announced the nominee of the Senate for United States Senator to be Hon. Thomas C. Platt.

JONES RE-ELECTED.

Little Rock, Ark.—Senator James K. Jones was re-elected United States Senator by an overwhelming majority.

PRITCHARD WINS.

Raleigh, N. C.—J. C. Pritchard was re-elected United States Senator.

GALLINGER RE-ELECTED.

Concord, N. H.—The vote for United States Senator resulted: In the Senate, J. H. Gallinger, 21; Hosea W. Parker, 2. In the House, Gallinger, 267; Parker, 53.

FAIRBANKS ELECTED.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Tuesday, in the House and Senate Charles W. Fairbanks was elected United States Senator. Senator D. W. Voorhees was put in nomination by the Democrats, LeRoy Templeton by the Populists and Fairbanks by the Republicans. In the House Fairbanks was severely arraigned by the Democrats, who called him a millionaire representative of the corporations.

The vote in the House stood: Fairbanks, 33; Voorhees, 16; Templeton, 1.

In the Senate the same programme was carried out, Fairbanks receiving a majority of the votes cast. To-morrow at 10 a. m. the House and Senate will meet in joint session and another vote will be taken, which will be the final step in electing Fairbanks.

KENNEY ELECTED.

Dover, Del.—The two branches of the Legislature voted separately for United States Senator. Richard R. Kenney, the selection of last night's Democratic caucus received all the votes cast. Keney is a free silver man. Four Republicans in the Senate and one member of the House refused to vote. The "rump" house voted for J. Edward Addicks. The "rump" Senate did not meet.

SHERMAN WILL ACCEPT

The Folio of Secretary of State in Major McKinley's Cabinet.

Canton, Ohio.—A message received here from Washington makes it reasonably certain that Senator Sherman's present intention is to accept the position of Secretary of State in Major McKinley's Cabinet. It was intimated to Senator Sherman several days ago that Major McKinley would be glad to know whether he would be inclined to accept a Cabinet position. Senator Sherman's inclinations were not in that direction originally, and his first thought was, according to his friends here, that he ought to remain in the Senate, but after careful consideration of the subject it seems to him that he can, perhaps, be of more service to the country and to his party at the head of the Department of State. If present arrangements are not changed, and there is nothing to indicate that they will be, Senator Sherman will occupy the leading place in Major McKinley's Cabinet.

TAX COLLECTOR SKIPS.

Nashville, Tenn.—A special from Dickson says that Graham Egerton, back tax attorney for Dickson County, a magistrate, and former editor of the Dickson Press, has been discovered to be $2,000 short in his accounts.

The discoveries are alleged to have caused a great sensation at Dickson.

Egerton left two weeks ago for Nashville, but it is said his whereabouts [illegible] not known.

The Montevallo News.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

Entered in the post office at Montevallo, Ala., as second class mail matter.

MONTEVALLO, ALA., JAN. 23, 1897.

The wheat crop of Texas is reported to be in fine condition.

The Harbor Improvement and Coast Defense convention met at St. Augustine, Florida, on yesterday. Reports indicate a good attendance.

There remains only twenty-five days before the legislature of Alabama, hence the members will have no time to waste. Many measures of great importance to the general public are knocking at the doors for attention.

The Supreme court of the United States has given the South Carolina dispensary law another black eye. It has sustained the decision of the lower court declaring the act invalid as in conflict with the constitution of the United States.

It is now definitely announced that Senator John Sherman will be McKinley's Secretary of State. It is also stated that Ex-Gov. Long, of Massachusttts, will be Secretary of the Navy and Ex-Congressman Wilson, of Iowa, Secretary of Agriculture,

The indications continue to grow brighter for a healtful revival of business this spring. The railroads are beginning to take steps for repairing and bettering their roads. The iron market begins to show signs of improvement, and the outlook for general business improvement gradually grows better. Better times are surely but slowly approaching.

The sentiment favoring a constitutional convention is growing daily throughout the state. Its necessity is forcing itself to the front. The people are beginning to realize that it is of vital importance that Alabama should no longer be hampered by her present constitution. Let us all pull together for a constitutional convention. Let us urge the general assembly to immediate action in this direction.

A Dahlonega, Ga., special to the Atlanta Constitution of the 19th inst., says that the gold fever is on in that district and is running higher every day. The people are wild with excitement at the rich finds of the precious metal and options are being gobbled up like hot cakes. The scenes are said to be a repetition of those in California in 1849. The old mines are being opened up and immense outputs are reported. Some of the veins discovered are of unusual size and richness.

A habeas corpus case, growing out of a proceeding iustituted by Jasper Holcomb against H. C. Moss defore Judge Geo. E. Brewer at Talladega to have certain books and papers belonging to the office of the City Treasurer of Calera turned over to Holcomb, was heard before Judge McMillan at Columbiana on last Thursday. Mr. Moss was ordered by Judge Brewer to turn over said books and papers but being unable to comply with the order was arrested by the sheriff. He sued out a writ of habeas corpus before Judge McMillan at Columbiana and was released from custody.

A Montgomery special of the 19th inst. to the State Herald gives a glowing description and account of Alabama's infant city, Fruithurst, located in Cleburne county. The indications all point to a wonderful as well as a most satisfactory success, so far as this town is concerned. Mr. J. A. Westerland, the General agent for the Fruithurst Company, was the informant of the special correspondant, and among other things that he said we note the following: New comers from the northern and western states tell us that nearly half the population of these states want to come south, and that very many of them will do so this year."

BURGLARY AT BLOCTON.

On Friday night Hillary Guy broke into the store of H. C. & W. B. Reynolds on Smith Hill and proceeded to lay in a supply of money, goods etc. He entered a window in the rear of the building and tookone suit of clothes, one undershirt, one top shirt, one silk handkerchief, two watches, one pair of suspenders and $20.46 in cash. He left the lamp burning and had goods strewn all around the store in disorder. Mr. W. M. Blackburn, of Green Pond, caught the burglar at Green Pond next day and brougnt him to Blocton. Guy had on the clothes which he had stolen at the time and also turned over the above amount of money. He confessed that he was the guilty party. Before entering the store he broke into a blacksmith shop and stole a brace and bit, key hole saw and hammer, which tools were left in the store. Guy broke into a store belonging to a Mr. Muller at Green Pond last Thursday night. He is in Centreville in jail now.—Daily Ledger.

CALERA LOCALS.

Shelby Sentinel—

We regret to learn that Dr. C. C. Oliver is seriously sick at his home at Shelby.

Three boys of Clear Creek, Sandy Edwards and a younger brother and Walter Parr, concluded on last Friday evening that they would steal a ride on a passing L. & N. freight train to Calera. They succeeded very well in stealing the rice and on arriving at Calera the younger Edwards and young Parr dismounted from the train in safety and told Sandy to also dismount. He made the effort to do so, but by some means missed his footing and fell, receiving several painful bruises about the head and back and narrowly escaping being run over by the train. He was taken to the passenger depot and medical attention given him. It was soon ascertained however, that he was not seriously hurt and he and his companions were placed on a south bound freight train and returned to Clear Creek. At last accounts he was getting on very well and it is to be hoped that this lesson will make him and his comrades wiser youths.

There were several new pupils in the Industrial School this week, and more are expected next week when the second session begins.

Work was commenced on J. M. Reynolds' law office building this week. Delay in securing material has retarded progress considerably.

John Jones, son of W. Y. Jones of Highland, aged 22 years, died at his parents' home on Friday morning, after a protracted illness of typhoid fever.

This department is under the charge of Mrs. Nelson, a lady thoroughly skilled in the art, and all work done will be guaranteed to give satisfaction. The charges will be very reasonable.

The elocutionary entertainment given at this place Monday evening was poorly attended, though the lady is a very accomplished reciter and gave excellent satisfaction. Arrangements were made to repeat the entertainment Friday night and permission given the Industrial Girls to attend, but we understand that Rev. Abernathy declined to take any part in the second performance.

To the Industrial School girls who desire to subscribe for the NEWS, either for themselves or to send to their parents, we will make a rate of 50 cents for the entire school year or 30 cents from now until the end of the present school year.

A couple of men employed on the Industrial School building got into a dispute Tuesday which soon led to a fistic encounter of the rough-and-tumble sort. It furnished huge sport for the spectators but otherwise no great good was accomplished.

The railroads have now brought forth a half-witted foreigner who they claim has confessed to having caused the Cahaba bridge wreck. The Alabama train wreckers are the most accommodating rascals in the world and fall all over each other in their haste to get before some magistrate and make a confession and have their pictures printed in the daily papers.

Owing to the heavy downpour of rain Sunday there were small Sunday Schools and no other morning services, but Rev. S. L. Dobbs, presiding elder of the Tuscaloosa District, preached in the evening. The first quarterly conference of the Montevallo Circuit, embracing the pastoral charges of Montevallo, Aldrich, Brierfield and Concord was held in the Methodist church at this place Sunday morning. In the evening Rev. S. L. Dobbs preached a good sermon on Christian character, after which he administered the holy communion.

As the result of boys' carelessness Toda Allen is suffering from a gunshot wound in the hand. He and two other little boys were out hunting last Friday evening when the accident happened. Toda had just loaded the gun and had turned it down with his hand at the muzzle to see if any of the shot would run out. At the same time one of his companions was playing with the trigger and of course succeeded in firing the gun. Fortunately, young Allen had his hand so close to the gun that the shot did not scatter, but tore one large hole through the center of his hand between the two middle bones. None of the bones are broken or otherwise injured and the boy is now doing nicely with prospects of recovering the full use of his hand.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL ITEMS

Several new pupils entered our school Monday morning and are continuing to come every day. We give them a hearty welcome and feel sure that they will, as we have learned to do, love our president, each member of the faculty and our beloved institution.

We were pleased to have Rev. S. L. Dobbs, presiding elder of the Tuscaloosa District, with us at opening exercises, He gave us quite an interesting and beneficial talk. The introductory was the same original way. It ran as follows; "I am rather embarrassed to address so many young ladies at once, having never made but one successful talk to girls and that being to one only." He gave us a short sketch of his school days when he used, so he said, the old "Blueblack Speller." He impressed upon us the importance of improving our time and talent and not to idle away this grand opportunity the state has at last given us.

We were pleasantly surprised when the president announced that we would be permitted to attend services Monday evening at the Mothodist church, and a little more so when Mrs. Babb gave us permission that afternoon to prepare our lessons for the following day so that our attending church would not cause us to have bad lessons which would make the teacher cross. Mr. Dobbs agreed with her and said: "Yes, girls, always keep on the good side of your teachers." We attended church and enjoyed Rev. Dobbs' sermon very much and feel sure that each school girl was benefitted by same.

We were honored with a visit from one of our legislators, Hon. W. W. Lavender of Bibb county, who gave us an interesting address, the introductory running in the "same old channel."

We learn that preparations are being made for the coming of the teacher in Scientific Cooking. This is good news as we are very anxious to begin this branch of industry and we think it very necessary that every young lady should know how to do this, the most important branch of household work.

We are happy to say, the number of our girls on the sick list are improving rapidly.

SCHOOL GIRLS.

Mrs. T. M. Nolen, of Talladega, has been in town for the past two weeks studying the conditions with a view of erecting a 16 room hotel at this place. An effort is now being made interest some home capital also and form a stock company, and negotiations are pending for the purchase of the McCauley lot, opposite the Baptist church, for the site. We are unable to state what success has attended the efforts of the promoters to interest home capital.

HOW TO FIND OUT.

Fill a bottle or common water glass with urine and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates a diseased condition of the kidneys. When urine stains linen it is positive evidence of kidney trouble. Too frequent desire to urinate or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

WHAT TO DO.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, fulfills every wish in relieving pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passages. It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to get up many times during the night to urinate. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. Sold by druggists, price fifty cents and one dollar. For a sample bottle and pamphlet, both sent free by mail, mention this paper and send your full postoffice address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The proprietors of this paper guarantee the genuineness of this offer.

A Unique Republic.

The republic of Goust is the smallest in the world. Andorra is an empire in comparison. Goust is about a mile square, and it houses 130 persons. It has been independent these 250 years.

It stands on top of a mountain by the Spanish border, near the edge of France, and it gets along very comfortably without ever mixing itself in other people's affairs, and without reading the evening papers, or, so far as we know, the morning ones. The delectable 130 govern themselves by a council, one member of which is selected to see that the business agreed upon is executed. Matters go along very smoothly, and Goustians are all the happier because nobody knows much about them, and therefore they are unenvied.—Kansas City Times.

Vices and Virtues of Chinatown.

If you made with me a complete tour of Chinatown, visiting every place where a Chinaman dwells, when you had returned you would sum up what you had seen about as follows:

Places where opium was smoked by Chinese in their own private apartments: about one-fourth of the whole.

Places where opium was sold to white visitors who smoked and slept on the premises, and which is commonly called an "opium joint"; possibly three in your whole tour.

Places were gambling was in progress: about one-twentieth of the whole.

Places where men were pursuing the ordinary vocations of life: nearly three-fourths.—Century.

Dukane—Spiffins has refused to honor that sight draft. Gaswell—Perhaps he regarded it as an oversight draft.—Pittsburg Chronicle.

ON SUSPICION.

A Pole is Arrested.—Believed to be Connected with the Cahaba Wreck.

Birmingham, Ala.—Deputy sheriff James Ball returned from Eatonton, Ga., Monday morning, bringing with him Sam Palatka, a Pole, who is suspected of knowing something about the wrecking of the Birmingham Mineral train, on the Cahaba River bridge Sunday, December 27th, which caused the death of twenty-eight people.

Ball secured requisition papers from Governor Johnston and the Governor of Georgia duly recognized them.

Palatka was arrested by parties in Eatonton after he is said to have made a number of statements concerning the wreck. It is stated that he told of the wreck so accurately, descibed the country where the horrible catastrophe occurred and made known many other incidents connected therewith that he excited suspicion. He was watched closely and finally arrested.

Sheriff O'Brien was notified and it was thought advisable to bring him back for interrogation.

The parties making the arrest are said to have some strong evidence against Palatka, who is a wandering sort of a fellow.

The Southern Railway and Louisville and Nashville offer a reward of $10,000 for the conviction of the party or parties who wrecked the train.

Washington, D. C.—The current number of The Public Health Reports, issued by the Marine Hospital service, contains a report from Sanitary Inspector Burgess, at Havana, who says:

"During the week ending January 7, there were 306 deaths in the city, 61 of which were caused by yellow fever, approximately 170 new cases; 78 were caused by smallpox, with 702 new cases, approximately; 9 were caused by enteric fever, 3 by so-called pernicious fever; 4 by paludal fever, 1 by diphtheria, 15 by dysentery, 18 by entritis, 1 by the grippe, 8 by pneumonia and 37 by tuberculosis.

"Sixty of the 61 deaths from yellow fever during the week were among Spanish soldiers in the military hospitals, while all of the 78 deaths from smallpox occurred among civilians in the different parts of the city.

"Yellow fever, on the whole, rather diminishes, as might be expected from the cooler weather which has been prevailing for some time, but smallpox increases."

The Vice-Consul-General at Port au Prince, Hayti, under date of December 16, reports that the yellow fever epidemic that prevailed there has ceased its ravages.

Henry S. Caminero, sanitary inspector at Santiago de Cuba, says that 52 deaths have been reported during the week ended January 2, of which three were from yellow fever. The latter disease has abated somewhat, but the inspector says that as a new regiment arrived from Spain January 1, he has no doubt the fever cases will again increase. Malaria is, as usual, causing many victims.

WRECKERS THROW A TRAIN.

Crosstie Placed on Iron Mountain and Texas.

Dallas, Tex.,—The through express from St. Louis on the Iron Mountain and Texas and Pacific route, due at Dallas at 6.20 a. m., was wrecked Saturday night at the little station of Forest, in Cass county, near Springdale.

Engineer Clemmons had both legs broken and sustained other injuries so severe that he died shortly after the accident. His home was at Marshall, Tex.

The express messenger is reported as being fatally injured, and a postal route agent as seriously injured.

The wreck was the work of the train wreckers, who had piled cross ties on the track. The full details have not yet reached Dallas. Two trains have been abandoned and two others are late, and are expected to arrive between 9 and 10 o'clock.

Half a dozen or more passengers are reported injured, but none fatally.

The engine and three cars, mail, baggage and express, were thrown down an embankment, but no passenger coaches left the track.

NORTH CAROLINA POPS

At a Caucus, and Nominate an Opponent to Pritchard for Senator.

Raleigh, N. C.—The Populist caucus at midnight nominated Dr. Cyrus Thompson for Senator on the second ballot. Thompson, Dockery, Mott, Hileman and Guthrie were voted for on the first ballot.

On the second ballot all except the first two were withdrawn.

Thompson and Dockery received 23 and 9 votes, respectively. Senator Parker, of Randolph, one of the bolters, returned to the caucus last night. It is understood that he will vote for the nominee. It is not believed that Hardison, who went into the caucus with Parker, will desert Pritchard.

The situation virtually remains unchanged. Fourteen populist votes, in addition to the republican vote, will elect Prichard. It is claimed that at least eighteen will stand for him until the last. At this hour there appears to be no reason to doubt that Pritchard will be mis own successor.

SAW MACEO BURIED.

Colonel Hernandez, of the Cuban Force Writes Interestingly.

New York, N. Y.—A Tribune special from Jacksonvill, Fla., dated Sunday, says:

A letter was received here on Friday from Lieutenant Colonel Andre Hernandez, now in command of the department of the Cuban army encamped near Havana, giving the true account of Maceo's death and his subsequent burial. As he says that he was in command of the Cuban detachment that recovered the body from Major Cirujeda's command, and afterwards buried it, his statement should settle the matter.

The letter was sent to J. A. Huau, the Florida representative of the Cuban junta. It came through the underground channel. It is dated January 9th and from the "encampment near Havana." After extending to Mr. Huau thanks for past favors, the letter goes on:

"It was on December 7th that we suffered a great misfortune in the tragic death (by ambush) of our leader, Maceo. This is the greatest misfortune we have suffered since the war began, but it only encourages us to fight the harder and to avenge his death.

"We were camped near the fight that day and heard the firing. Maceo came across the trocha, unknown to us, with but forty men. More than 1,500 Spaniards, who had been informed of his trip, ambushed him. He rode into it and was shot at the first fire.

"We heard the firing and thinking that some of our friends were attacked by the Spanish Guirillas, started off at once to their aid, though we had but 400 men. When we reached the scene of the slaughter it was most over, and then we were told that Maceo was dead and that the enemy had his body tied to a horse's tail and were taking it off. Our men were perfectly frantic over the report and begged to be lead against the Spaniards. We dashed forward with drawn matchets and what a fight that was!

"The Spaniards met us and the encounter was horrible. Our men fought to kill; only bent on avenging Maceo's death. Our trusty and sharp machetes felt with regularity and I think that we killed more than two hundred of the enemy; and, what is more, we had the consolation of recovering the body of our beloved Maceo. The Spaniards fought hard again to regain it, charging upon us repeatedly, but our charry machetes were too much for them and they suddenly retreated.

"Our little force suffered terribly. Our cavalry, which went into the fight eighty strong, came out with only 22 men, and the infantry suffered almost in the same proportion. But for all that, we were consoled by the fact that our brave brothers gave up their lives in a good cause, and to save the body of our lamented Maceo from the desecration which the Spaniards would have inflicted.

"We buried the body in a secret place and a secure one. Only myself and a few selected officers know the location. In due time it will be marked. If known now the murderous Spaniards would try to get it, and parade it as showing their great triumph.

"Poor Maceo sleeps in peace, but his brothers remain to avenge him, and that they are doing daily. I have a good many important things to tell you in connection with this, but I do not care to put them in this, as I am not positive that the latter will not through safely."

EMBEZZLER ARRESTED.

A Judge Served with a Warrant While Sick in Bed.

Fort Scott, Kan.—While sick in bed Judge J. F. McDonald, accused of the embezzlement of several thousand dollars in fees and moneys paid as compromise in the Frantenac explosion cases, was arrested and held under bond for $2,733. Judge J. D. McCleverty is the prosecuting witness. The warrant alleges that McDonald collected $5,000 in fees in the cases; that he is still holding $1,346 due McCleverty, which he has converted into money for the purpose of placing it beyond the reach of his creditors, and that he has it fraudulently concealed that he settled the cases secretly and without consulting his partner.

HANGED TO A TREE.

Negro Highwayman Murdered by a Mob in Louisiana.

White Castle, La.—Saturday night George P. Beauvis was waylaid, robbed and beaten over the head by a negro in the Texas Pacific yards, the weapon used being a coupling-pin. Beauvais reached the hotel and gave a description of the would-be murderer. Before midnight the highwayman had been arrested, was brought before his victim, and fully identified. The negro was then placed in jail, but at daybreak next morning his body was found dangling from a convenient tree, where it remained for several hours. The Coroner's jury investigated the case, and returned a verdict of death by hanging at the hands of unknown parties.

It is absolutely denied that the plague has made its appearance at Marseilles, and it is asserted that there is not even a suspected case at that port.

"The Old Yellow Almanac."

When Ella Wheeler Wilcox wrote the poem, having for title the same heading as this article, she touched a chord that vibrated in thousands of hearts. For Ayer's Almanac, "The Old Yellow Almanac" of the poem, is intimately associated with the days and deeds of a large part of the world's population. How large a part of the population this general statement may include can be gathered from the fact that the yearly issue of Ayer's Almanac is from 17,000,000 to 25,000,000 copies. It is printed in twenty-eight editions and in some eighteen languages, including, besides English—Spanish, Portuguese, Dutch, German, Swedish, Danish, Norwegian, Bohemian, Welch, Italian, French, etc. The old style almanac is looked upon by many as a relic of antiquity, especially the "patent medicine almanac," whose jokes are the butt often of the very papers in whose columns they first appeared. But there are almanacs and almanacs. Ever since Dr. Ayer's Almanac has been put out it has employed as high a class of mathematical and astronomical talent as is available in the country. The result is that it stands on a par, in respect of the reliability of its data and the accuracy of its calculations with the U. S. Nautical Almanac, and testimony to this fact is found year after year in the letters, referred to the almanac department of the company, from students and mathematicians in various parts of the world. In its permanence and reliability Ayer's Almanac stands as a very fitting type of the Ayer Remedies—indispensible in the family and reliable every day in the year. The 1897 edition of this useful almanac is now in course of distribution through the druggists of the country.

IT WAS COLD,

And thousands of Destitute People Suffered.

MANY FROZEN DEAD.

The Citizens of Chicago Aroused to Generous Action for the Relief of the Destitute.

PITTIFUL STORIES OF WANTS.

Hundreds Provided for By Charity in St. Louis.—One Foot of Ice in the Missouri River.—Twenty Below in Milwaukee, and Ten Above in Washington, D. C.

Chicago, Ill.—The people of Chicago, in bodies and as individual citizens, were aroused to-day (Monday) to take prompt and generous action for the relief of the two score thousand destitute inhabitants, whose suffering for fuel, food and clothing has reached an extreme stage as a result of the terrible cold wave which came upon the city Saturday, increasing in intensity, until to-day it reached the lowest point recorded in a quarter of a century. Between 5 and 7 o'clock this morning the weather bureau in the Auditorium tower, where it is warmer than on the street, recorded 20 degrees below zero. Only once in the history of the bureau—December 24, 1872, 23 degrees below—has the temperature fallen lower. From 9 a. m. to 2 p. m. there was a gradual rise, the range being 18 to 22 degrees, but the relief was hardly felt when accompanied by a cutting wind from the Northwest. The highest temperature for the day was 10 degrees below, and to-night the mercury is moving slowly down again, with no hope of material relief held out for to-morrow.

Mayor Swift issued a proclamation this afternoon, according to his expressed intention yesterday, appealing in urgent language to all citizens who have the means to spare to contribute at once money and suplies to prevent the starvation and freezing of unfortunate thousands. He urged the subscription of 100,000 as being none too much to afford the help needed. The funds of the charity organizations have been depleted, owing to the extra demands made upon them even during the mild winter weather which prevailed here until a few days ago.

The Chicago Relief and Aid Society was compelled to make a special appeal for money last week to carry on its work, because of the unusually number of heads and supporters of families who are unemployed.

Before the Mayor's proclamation was issued contributions to the special fund came pouring into his office in currency and checks, while various offers of provisions, clothing, coal and wood were received on a liberal scale The Board of Trade and other organizations started to raise relief funds, and the churches and Salvation Army began making arrangements to help in the charitable work along their special lines. Soup houses and shelters will be established and maintained as long as necessary. A plan which the Mayor and Chief of Police Badenoch agreed upon at a conference today was immediately put into effect The city will buy with the special fund, food and fuel, and distribute them on demand through the agency of the Police Department. This relief is to be afforded without the usual investigation until the regular charitable organizations are able to take up the work. All police stations have been thrown open to the homeless and to-night every one was crowded with refugees from the freezing air The Mayor's proclamation is the first of the kind to be issued in twenty-five years.

The worst and most numerous cases of suffering were reported from South Chicago and Kensington, where thousands of men have been laid off at the steel mills and other establishments

Much damage was done in the suburbs to telegraph and telephone wires by thecold. Traffic with Cicero was suspended until late to-day by the collapse of cable poles. The work of affording instant temporary relief during the inclement weather was pushed by the police agents, using the patrol wagons and ambulances, in such a systematic manner that no case of destitution reported remained unattended to to-night.

SUFFERING IN ST. LOUIS.

Hundreds Caught By the Cold Snap Provided for by Charity.

St. Louis, Mo.—The cold wave which gathered in British Columbia on Friday, swept down upon this section Sunday, and still continues, though slightly abated to-night. At 7 o'clock this morning the temperature here was exactly zero. At noon three degrees above was indicated, and at 5 p. m., four degrees above was the reading. This extreme low temperature, followed sharply upon a long season of mild weather, found thousands of poor families unprepared. The demand upon the associated charities for food and fuel was never greater. When the ticket window of the Provident Association opened at 6 a. m., 300 men and women were in line waiting for assistance. The Police Department is doing everything possible to relieve the distress. Twenty-two frostbitten victims were treated at the city dispensary to-day, and three amputations were necessary. Hundreds of homeless people are sheltered to-night at the police stations.

The river has not closed here, though it is full of floating ice, which endangers shipping. Trains were generally on time this morning, but this evening all due from points West and South were late, in one instance two hours and ten minutes. All were delayed by snow blockades.

Special despatches show that no section West or South of this city has escaped the sudden fury of the blizzard. ice formed for a short time over lower

For the first time in man's memory White River, in Arkansas, to-day. Snow is reported in West Tennessee and Southern Illinois. The great fruit section of Southwest Missouri and Northern Arkansas has especially suffered, and nothing can save the crop. A fall of snow that would have saved the wheat fields of Missouri, Iowa and Nebraska did not come with the cold wave, and predictions of disaster to the cereals were frequent on 'Change.

SOUTHERN PROGRESS.

New Industries Reported in the South in a Week.

Chatanooga, Tenn.—Business at all important trade centers of the South, as reported by the Tradesman's special correspondents among manufacturers and dealers, shows improvement, and the damand for manufactured goods in nearly all lines is steadily increasing. Prices are still low, but an advance is sure to follow an increase in consumption and production. The iron and steel market shows no new features. The iron industry is still trying to settle prices, and the slow progress in this direction, serves to retard business in some branches. The demand for pig iron is moderate, with indications favorable for an increase, and there is a fair movement in Southern iron.

The lumber trade is becoming considerably more active in some sections, and the outlook for business in the Spring is encouraging.

Trade is improving in the coal mining districts, and the mines are nearly all busy.

Southern cotton mills report only a fair business. At Rome, Ga., the Massachusetts Cotton Mills will add 60,000 spindles and othere improvements, at a cost of $600,000.

The most important new industries are reported by The Tradesman as follows: The Denton Implement and Saddlery Company, capital $25,000, Denton, Tex.; The Robinson-Wiggs Foundry and Machine Company, capital $10,000, Birmingham, Ala.; the Millview Gold Mining Company, capital $500,000, Unionville, Va., quarries will be developed at Elberton, Ga., at a cost of $30,000; the Miller-Stone Manufacturing Company, capital $20,000, has been chartered at Fort Worth, Tex.; the Houston Packing Company, capital $60,000, at Houston, Tex.; the Carolina Manufacturing Company, capital $10,000. Newberry, S. C., and the Bancroft Lumber Company, capital $100,000, at Orange, Tex.

SUPPOSED MURDERER CAUGHT.

John Luttrell Arrested at Bristol for Killing George Baker.

Bristol, Tenn.—John Luttrell, of London, Ky., was arrested in Bristol Saturday morning. Luttrell is wanted in Laurel County, Ky., on a charge of being implicated with his cousin, John Luttrell, in the murder of George Baker last August. Baker's mangled body was found on the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, where it is supposed to have been placed by his murderers. Luttrell is in jail here awaiting the arrival of officers from Kentucky.

THE AERONAUT LOST.

Key West, Fla.—The Forepaugh show has been exhibiting in this city for the past week, a balloon ascension being the main feature. After several failures to ascend, the aeronaut succeeded Saturday afternoon at about 5 o'clock. The breeze was stiff from the Northeast, and a young Cuban, named Perez, ascended. After going up about 1,000 feet he became rattled and the ropes became tangled. The balloon went out about a mile from shore and fell into the water. Boats from a revenue cutter went to render assistance, and the balloon was recovered, but Perez is given up for lost.

WILL FORECLOSE

The President Has Directed the Attorney General to Proceed

AGAINST U. P. RAILWAY.

Since the Defeat of the Funding Bill the President Thought it Dangerous to Delay.

HENCE FORECLOSURE ORDERED.

The Government Is Guaranteed to Receive Not Less Than $45,754,000 by the Sale of the Property.—Attorney-General Harmon's Statement.—Other Important Items.

Washington, D. C.—The following statement was given to the press by Attorney-General Harmon Saturday evening:

"Upon the defeat of the funding bill in the House, the Prisident directed the Attorney-General to commence foreclosure proceedings against the Union Pacific Railway Company, first making the best arrangements obtainable for the protection of the Government's interest. Following the lines indicated in his last report, the Attorney-General began negotiations with the Re-organization Committee. On Thursday an agreement was made which will result in immediate steps to foreclose. The chief subject of the negotiations was the protection of the Government against the risk of sacrifice of its claim by a sale at a price which would leave nothing substantial after paying prior liens. This protection is now assured by a guarantee that the Government shall receive on its lien on the aided portions of the Union Pacific and Kansas Pacific liens, including the sinking fund, not less than $45,754,000. The sale will be public, so that the Government will receive the benefit of any higher bids up to the full amount of its claim, principal and interest. The sum of $4,500,000 cash was on Thursday deposited with the United States Trust Company, of New York, by Gen. Lewis Fitzgerald, chairman of the committee, as security according to the terms of the agreement. The committee agree to bid par for the sinking fund if it is desired to sell it at any time before the foreclosure sale.

"Bills in equity have been prepared, signed by the Attorney-General and Hon. George Hoadley, special counsel, and forwarded to St. Louis, where they will, on Friday, be presented to Judge Sanborn, who has jurisdiction in all districts, and whose consent to their filing is necessary, because the Receivers in charge of the property are made parties defendant. They are original bills, and not cross bills in the pending suits. Whether they will proceed as independent bills or be ordered to stand as cross bills in the pending suits will be determined by the judge, but in either event, the result will be practically the same, viz:

"The sale of the property under the Government's lien as well as under that of the first mortgage. The bills will be filed in the district of Iowa, Nebraska, Wyoming, Colorado and Utah. Separate bills of foreclosure of the lien on the Kansas Pacific are in course of preparation. These will be filed in Missouri and Kansas.

"The proposed arrangement was submitted to the Government directors before it was closed. They will recommend its adoption. Their general opinion was thus expressed:

"The Government cannot prudently longer defer the settlement of this matter. The Union Pacific system has already been much over-taxed, and its revenues have been permanently reduced. Re-organization of allied and neighboring properties have either been accomplished or are in train of early consumation, and the breaking up of the entire Union Pacific has been and is steadilyq progressing. It therefore, seems to us dangerous, to neglect this opportunity of realizing the sum offered, and thus expose the Government to a continuous depreciation of its security.

"It is believed that there will be higher bids, but if not, an estimate shows that crediting amounts already received from the company, the Government will at last realize a sum equivalent to the principal of the subsidy bonds, with interest at about 3 1-3 per cent. from their issue to the average date of their maturity, or about 3 4-5 per cent; from date of issue to January 1, 1897.

"The minimum of $45,754,000 guaranteed the Government is in cash, so that all relations with the property will terminate upon the confirmation of the foreclosure sale.

"The course to be pursued with respect to the Central Pacific has not yet been determined."

Attorney-General Harmon returned from New York last night, fresh from his negotiations with the Reorganization Committee of the Union Pacific Railway Company. Prior to the regular Cabinet meeting to-day he explained to President Cleveland the plan outlined in the State Department, as here given, which received the President's approval. The Cabinet was told at its session of what had been done, but no formal action by that body was taken.

As indicated by the statement the settlement agreed upon with the re-organization Committee marks the ending of the relations between the Federal Government and the Union Pacific Company. It does not interfere, however, with the right of the Government to institute proceedings to protect itself in any phases of the litigation that may be discovered later. So far as the Central Pacific road is concerned, matters are not in shape for settling its relations with the Government, but something is likely to be done in the near future. The Reorganization Committee of the Union Pacific Railway Company consists of Louis Fitzgerald, chairman; Jacob H. Schiff, T. Jefferson Collidge, Jr., Chauncey Depew, Marvin Hughitt and Oliver Ames.

A BIG CHICAGO FIRE.

Every Plug in the Neighborhood Found Frozen Tight.

Chicago, Ill.—The Northwestern Stove Repair Company's factory, 225 to 237 West Twelfth street, was entirely destroyed by fire Sunday night. When the fire engines arrived it was found that the water in every plug in the neighborhood had been frozen, and fifteen minutes elapsed before a stream could be brought to bear on the flames.

During this time the fire spread with such alarming rapidity that the residents in the vicinity of the fire began to move their household effects out of their houses. Finally, when water had been turned on, the flames enveloped the entire building. The firemen, however, kept the fire confined to the stove factory. The damage done to adjoining buildings was entirely by water.

The Northwestern Stove Repair Company is owned by Robert L. and Ralph S. Greenlee. They place the damage on the contents of their establishment at $300,000, and on the building at $125,000. The exact amount of insurance is not known, but it is thought that the loss is almost entirely covered.

Three firemen and a watchman employed by the stove company were injured during the fire.

ANOTHER BRIDGE HORROR.

Train Falls Fifty Feet.—Three Men Killed Outright.—Many Injured.

Butler, Pa.—Saturday afternoon a passenger train on the Pittsburg and Western Railway went off a bridge fifty feet high over Paint Creek. The entire train, with everybody on board, went down. Only one person on the train, it is said, escaped injury. The train consisted of engine, baggage car and two passenger coaches. About thirty passengers were on board. Just as the train left the rails Baggagemaster Rainey, of Foxburg, jumped, saving his life, but suffered very serious injury. The engineer, fireman and mail agent were killed outright. Relief trains were hurried from St. Petersburg and Foxburg with a corps of physicians. The names of the dead are:

Daniel Moriarity, engineer; Ira Beatty, fireman; William Copeley, mail agent.

Brakeman Wise was badly bruised, receiving serious internal injuries that may cause his death. Details are meagre and conflicting.

A DELICATE QUESTION.

A question of woman's rights has been raised in the war department, and is likely to cause discussion. The Civil Service Committee recently advertised to fill a $1,500 vacancy in the Adjutant General's office, requiring knowledge of five diferent languages, proof reading, library methods and other qualifications. Miss Maud Stalnaker of Washington, D. C., a lady of unexceptional character and accomplishment, was the ouly person who passed the examination, and she was duly certified for the position, but the appointment has been rejected on the ground that the department does not desire to have a woman in the place.

REGULATORS FIRED UPON.

Adairsville, Ky.—A gang of white caps from Price's Mills was fired on from ambush, while they were en route from Black Jack, Tenn.., to punish some Negroes suspected of theft. J. L. Conn, the son of a wealthy farmer, was instantly killed and the regulators instantly retreated.

A NEW CHARGE

Will Probably Be Made Against The Three Friends.

ARE THEY PIRATES.

United States Attorney Genera Harmon is Considering the Matter of Charging the Officers and Crew of the Filibusterer

WITH BEING PIRATES.

Spanish Gunboat Burned by Cubans.—Citizens of France Arrested and Thrown Into Prison.—Recent Crimes and Causalties.—Chinese Holocaust.

Washington, D. C.—If the sensational stories in certain New York newspapers regarding the Cuban filibustering tug Three Friends, on her last voyage, training a Hotchkiss gun on a Spanish gunboat and firing at that vessel have any foundation in truth, the Attorney-General of the United States Government declares that the Three Friends is amenable to the laws of piracy, and her officers and crew are liable to be surrendered and punished as pirates.

Attorney-General Harmon, it is officially stated is considering the advisability of instituting proceedings against the Three Friends on that charge. The Attorney-General was originally of the opinion that the Three Friends had not committed a piratical act, even assuming that the reports published of her exchange of shots with the Spanish vessel were true. But a careful consideration of the law and decisions on similar cases had made him doubt his primary view.

In order to expedite the case of the Three Friends the Attorney-General has prepared an application to present to the United States Supreme Court for a writ of certorari on the United States Circuit Court at New Orleans for the transfer of the case to the Supreme Court, so that the latter tribunal may pass on Judge Locke's decision, given at Jacksonville. Judge Locke held that the Government in its bill of libel against the Three Friends did not show that the vessel had violated any law. He gave the Government ten days to amend its libel, and declared that unless this was done, he would dismiss the application.

SPANISH GUNBOAT BURNED.

Brave Attack of Cubans, with a Successful Result.

Key West, Fla.—Havana advices received in Key West are to the effect that the Spanish gunboat Cometa has been carptued and burned by the insurgents.

The Cometa, one of the most powerful of the smaller Spanish vessels in Cuban waters, has been cruising near Cardenas to prevent the landing of filibustering expeditions. For some time she has been accustomed to anchor at night off Sereia Morena. The place where the gunboat anchored was favorable for an attack from shore, and the insurgents determined to capture her. Last Tuesday night they opened on the vessel with a twelve-pound Hotchkiss gun. The vessel was struck several times and badly damaged. While the crew was in confusion, boats loaded with insurgents left the shore, and the Cometa was boarded. A desperate hand-to-hand fight took place on the deck of the gunboat, the Cubans using the machete with deadly effect. Finally, after the Spanish commander and half of his men had been killed, the survivors surrendered. The vessel was then burned.

CITIZENS OF FRANCE

Arrested and Sent to Cabanas Fortress.—Plantations Destroyed.

Havana, via. Key West, Fla.—Salvador and Pedro Laborde, brothers, citizens of France, and owners of an estate in Jobo were sent to Cabanas Fortress under Weyler's orders for grinding cane against his commands and also made responsible for the defeat the Spaniards suffered in their recent fight which occurred on that estate.

Ana Sotolongo, a lady imprisoned as a political suspect in the Paula Hospital, managed to escape last night.

All the buildings of the valuable estate, San Lino, in the Cienfuegos District, owned by Lino Montalve, has been burned. The loss is estimated at over a million dollars. Over eight million arrobas or uarters of cane were burned.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

A Little Gossip from the Seat of Government.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 22, 1897.

It is neither flattering nor creditable to say that the most interesting thing the Senate, during this week, was a running debate, occupying the "morning hour" of several days on a resolution intended to make one of the rival electric light companies of Washington stop work it was doing on a permit from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to extend its lines, but it is strictly true, all the same.

Without repeating any of the intimations which made this debate interesting, or caring which, if either side was right, most sensible people will agree that the United States Senate ought to be able to find something more important to do than to be playing common council for the city of Washington.

Not only was it a waste of time belonging to the people of the whole country, but the tone of the remarks was calculated to lessen the respect felt for the individual Senators against whom the insinuations of other Senators were aimed, and consequently of the entire Senate by the country at large. If the Senate wishes to kill time for the purpose of preventing legislation it should find a better way to do it.

The Sesretary of State was the guest of the Secretary of State-to-be (Senator Sherman) at his week's meeting of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and the questions fired at him about the different clauses of that arbitration treaty kept Secretary Olney busy for an hour. There are differences of opinion as to what construction may be placed upon several clauses of the treaty, and there is a disposition among senators to go slow in deciding whether the treaty shall be amended, rejected or ratified. Mr. Olney told the committee that he did not understand how any construction could be put upon any clause of the treaty that would connect it in anyway with the Monroe doctrine, and assured the Senators that there were no hidden meanings concealed in the treaty.

Speaker Reed had a somewhat unique experience last week when he was waited on by a committee composed of Representatives Hicks, of Pennsylvania; Curtis, of Kansas; Hooker, of New York; Herman, of Oregon, and Henry, of Indiana, who represented a petition signed by 208 members of the House, asking that time be given for the consideration of twenty-two bills on the House calendar providing for public buildings in various sections of the country. The Speaker pointed out to the committee the necessity for rigid economy in public expenditures, caused by the existing annual deficit of $38,000,000, and the committee went back at him by pointing out that none of these bills carried an appropriation; that they only fixed the maximum cost of the proposed buildings, leaving the appropriations to be made by future Congresses. The Speaker expressed his dissent from this system, which he called mortgaging the revenues of the Government, and called attention to the absence of the New York custom house bill from the list. That bill was then added, but the Speaker was candidly told that it could not be considered until the other twenty-two had been given a fair hearing. Although Mr. Reed made his opposition plain, he did not give a definite answer. When he does, if it be unfavorable, there may be a revolt in the House.

The House Committee on Puplic Lands made haste to clear itself of the imputation of intention to pigeon-hole the Free Homestead bill by reporting that measure back to the House just as it passed the Senate. An attempt will be made in the House to amend the bill by exempting lands sold by the Government as trustee for Indians.

A resolution reported from the House Committee on Coinage requests the President to invite expressions of opinion from other governments as to the desirability and feasibility of the adoption of international coins to be current in all countries adopting them, and especially adapted to invoice purposes.

MONTEVALLO, ALA., JAN. 30, 1897.

AN UNUSUAL PROCEEDING.

From the Shelby Sentinel.

The citizens of this county and especially those of Calera have, during the present week, witnessed an unusual proceeding. This proceeding was the overriding and treating as a nullity the action of Judge McMillan, probate judge of this county, in discharging from custody a prisoner on a writ of habeas corpus, by Judge Brewer, of Talladega, the circuit judge of this judicial circuit. So far as this article is concerned it is not necessary to go into particulars further than to say that the habeas corpus case grew out of a statutory proceeding had before Judge Brewer, of Talladega, as circuit judge, in vacation, at Talladega, Ala., in December, 1895, to compel Mr. H. C. Moss, acting treasurer of the city of Calera, to turn over certain books and papers to Jasper Holcomb, who claimed to be the treasurer. Judge Brewer granted the petition of Holcomb, and issued an order to the sheriff to arrest Mr. Moss and confine him in the county jail until he delivered said books, papers and notes to Holcomb. Mr. Moss, feeling that an injustice had been done him, as well as seventy-five per cent of the white people of Calera, by this decision of Judge Brewer, appealed to the supreme court, but the appeal was dismissed at the recent call of the cases of this division by the supreme court for failure to comply with a certain rule of the court requiring a printed abstract of the record to be filed, and hence the case did not get before the court on its merits. The dismissal of the appeal, however, restored Judge Brewer's order, and on or about the 13th inst., Judge Brewer issued his warrant to the sheriff of this county, directing him to arrest Mr. Moss and confine him in the county jail until he complied with his order to turn over said books, papers, etc., to Holcomb. Mr. Moss endeavored to comply with the order, but finding it impossible to do so, and through no fault of his own, sued out a writ of habeas corpus before Judge McMillan at Columbiana. He was placed under bond by Judge McMillan and Thursday the 21st inst., appointed as the day for the hearing. The case being heard, Judge McMillan, after a thorough and painstaking investigation of the matter, decided to release him from custody and on Friday morning discharged him. The sheriff immediately made his return to Judge Brewer, whereupon Judge Brewer at once issued an alias warrant on his same order and sent it to the sheriff with instructions to ignore the action of Judge McMillan's court on the ground that McMillan had no jurisdiction in the case, and to at once comply with his order and rearrest Mr. Moss. Early Monday morning Sheriff Vest with Deputy Jim Pilgreen went to Mr. Moss' home and made the arrest. Mr Moss was sick at the time and objected to being taken from his home, but the sheriff regarded his isntructions from Judge Brower as imperative and using force took him in custody, striking him a severe blow on the head in doing so. Mr. Moss naturally felt outraged at being subjected to such treatment, particularly as he had been set at liberty by a regularly organized court of the county and one regarded by him and his attorneys as a court of fully competent jurisdiction. When the sheriff and his deputy appeared with him in custody in Calera, and it became known to the white citizens of the town that he had been rearrested under such circumstances, seventy five per cent of them, who are the supporters of Mr. Moss, felt indignant at the proceedings and the excitement, though suppressed, was intense, and the lawabiding spirit of the best people of the town alone prevented an outbreak, which had it occurred, would have been of a most serious nature. It is not the province of the Sentinel to decide whether Judge Brewer is right or wrong or whether Judge McMillan is right or wrong, or whether the sheriff used unnecessary force in making the arrest, but it does seem to us that with the supreme court of the state open before him, Judge Brewer might have pursued a course less fraught with danger to the peace and welfare of the community. Mr. Moss had committed no felony. He is one of the best citizens of the county, a lawabiding, peaceable, home-loving man. He has been the treasurer of the city of Calera for a number of years, and during the past twenty months, since the municipal controversy commenced and Mr. Holcomb claimed the treasurer's office, Mr. Moss has been the recognized treasurer of the city and has conducted all the business, whether rightfully or wrongfully. After being taken to Columbiana he was enabled by the strenuous efforts of friends to secure the missing papers and thus enabled to comply with the order when he was released from custody.

The New York state senate a few days ago adopted strong resolutions advocating freedom for Cuba.

A large brick building at Fort Payne, in which several offices were located, was destroyed by fire on Tuesday morning last.

A tussle will be given the "Shylock" loan companies—these institutions that lend $5 or some such amount to a negro with a mortgage on all his household effects and almost on his life, and then charge him $15 dollars interest before the debt is finally paid. Mr. Waller, of Montgomery, introduced a bill, by request, to assess each of these loan companies a license tax of $300 annually.—Advertiser.

It seems that the failure of the Commercial Bank of Selma has taught some of the legislators a lesson. Mr. Coleman of Calhoun, introduced a bill in the House to require every banking institution in the State of Alabama to publish statements showing their financial condition, simultaneously with the reports of the national banks. The statements are to be sworn to by President and Cashier and attested by at least three directors. A penalty of $500 fine is attached to the bill for failure of the bank to publish said statements.—Advertiser.

Senator Moody's dispensary bill with the amendments passed the senate on last Tuesday by a vote of 18 to 14. One amendment provides that it shall take effect January 1, 1898, without being submitted to a vote of the people. Another excepts twenty-four counties, as follows: Dallas, Marengo, Mobile, Talladega, Clay, Coosa, Tallapoosa, Covington, Conecuh, Jefferson, Shelby, Elmore, Barbour, Calhoun, Cleburne, Lowndes, Autauga, Limestone, Lauderdale, Cullman, St. Clair, Perry, Bibb, Madison, Winston and Blount. As local prohibition exists in thirty one other counties, the bill as passed the senate effects but eleven counties.

Some of the young people of our town have organized themselves into an amatuer dramatic company and are making preparations to produce the two-act drama, entitled "Among the Breakers," at Lyman's Hall about the first of March, the proceeds to be devoted to the improvement of our public streets. A negro teacher named Johnson Frost attempted a criminal assault upon Miss Battle. the 18-year old daughter of James Battle, a prominent farmer living near Six Mile, on Tuesday afternoon about 1 o'clock. She succeeded in breaking away from her assailant and reported the occurrence to her father who immediately spread the alarm. A posse was soon formed and a thorough search made for the criminal who was finally captured in the vicinity of Randolph and disposed of in the customary way.

The People's Advocate takes occasion to make the following very truthful remark concerning the president of our school: "Everything goes to show that the Board of Trustees made no mistake when they selected Capt. H. C. Reynolds as president of the Industrial School. He is peculiarly fitted for the responsible position which he fills, and the Advocate, as well as everybody else who knows the man, can safely predict that he will make the school a grand success."

Saturday afternoon, from 3 to 5, Mrs. J. L. McConaughy entertained a number of her lady friends with an artistic Shakespeare luncheon. The guests were received by five violet maidens, Misses Lucille Wilkinson, Stella Ramsey Diamond Sibley, Velma King and Lula Howard, who, in their white dresses with tiny violet aprons and violet ribbons, were afterwards dainty waitresses in the violet dining room. Before going into the parlor there was pinned to each guest a facetious representation of one of Shakesp are's characters and there naturally followed a great seeking of mates. The luncheon was progressive, the guests being seated at tete-a-tete tables and moving between the courses, of which there were five. The menu booklets were of white celluloid with violets painted on the cover and quotations within. The highest score was made by Mrs Geo W. Morgan, to whom was awarded the prize—a pair of pretty vases. The guests were Mesdames Babb, Nelson, W. B. Reynolds, C. W. Cary, F W. Rogan, Lawrence, Morgan, Pratt; Misses Kennedy, Lee, Crumpton, McCombs, Raley, Acker, Lyman, Fox and Gaskins.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL ITEMS.

President Reynolds has been in the city of Montgomery for the past few days, asking some special legislation of our worthy law-makers, for the good of our school. He returned home today much pleased and speaks very highly of the legislature. He says they impress him as the most intelligent body of men he has ever had the pleasure of seeing in our Capitol, and all seem to have a very high appreciation of the debt they owe to the girls, and his encouraging words from our new Governor, who has promised to visit us soon, give us real joy.

Our chaplains, Mr. Reynolds and Mr. Abernathy, are with us frequently at the opening exercises. We are always glad to have them come and miss them when one or the other does not come.

The recital given at the Chapel Friday evening was enjoyed by all who attended. Although Miss Forde was not well, she gave pleasure throughout her program. Some of "our girls" made appreciated contributions to the entertainment.

Among visitors to the school, we note first, Rev. A. J. Hearn, representative of Choctaw county. He brought his daughter to enter the Industrial School. His talk to the girls in the chapel was humorous and interesting.

Mr Cole of Atlanta, agent of Ginn & Co., publishing house, was also a welcomed guest. This is the first visit he has made to our school since it is in running order. He was the first book agent on the ground October 1st, and he expressed himself very much gratified with the condition of the school.

Miss Evans of Washington, D. C. has arrived and will take charge of the cooking department of the Industrial school as soon as everything is properly arranged.

The Shakespearean luncheon given by Mrs. McConaughy Saturday afternoon is reported a brilliant success. "They say" the hostess was most charming, the home most exquisite in beauty and fragrance and "our girls" matchless in receiving and attending the guests. Someone was heard to say, they there received an insight in to the future homes of some of our classmates.

Montevallo this week is the land of snow; also the land of woe, for the old proverb, "Pride goeth before a fall," has been fulfilled in many cases, but most notably in that of our teacher of mathematics as in the snow he made a personal application of his beloved geometrical figures and gave us kaleidoscopic views of his acute, right and obtuse angles, arcs, etc. However we are happy in his assuring us his pain was not acute.

It gives us much pleasure to have Miss Jackson with us, and we wish her much success in organizing her elocution class.

Our school seems to have attracted great attention and it is favored with frequent visitors, sometimes having as many as ten at the opening exercises. Among them we note with pleasure one of our senators from east Alabama, Hon. Hiram Hawkins, who brought his niece to attend the school. He visited the many and interesting departments of our school and expressed himself as delighted.

SCHOOL GIRLS.

HOW ABOUT IT.

The Birmingham News of the 28th contains the following article which will cause some surprise and speculation among our people:

An Athens, Ga. special to the Atlanta Journal of yesterday, says:

"It is rumored about college today that Dr. B. F. Riley, professor of English in the University, is thinking of resigning that chair and accepting the Presidency of an Alabama college. This position he refused some time ago, but rumor now has it that he has reconsidered the matter and may accept the flattering position which is so urgently pressed upon him. Nothing positive has yet been learned as to Prof. Riley's plans, and he has not been heard to either affirm or deny the report that he will leave the University faculty.

"Dr. Riley was appointed to the chair of English in the Georgia University upon the death of Major Morris, the beloved and able man who held the position for so many years. Dr. Riley has made a reputation apart from his prominence as a professor and a minister."

Dr. Riley was tendered the Presidency of the State Girl's Industrial School at Montevallo last fall, but declined it. This is the college to which reference is made above.

AN IMPROVEMENT

Based or Slow, But Healthful Demand.

IS THE TREND OF TRADE.

An Unusually Large List of Business Embarrassments Continues to be an Alarming Feature in Business Circles.

UNSATISFACTORY COLLECTIONS:

The Market for Securities Better.—Numebr of Hands Larger, All Industries Considered.—Bessemer Pig Slightly Lower.—Increase of Iron Manufactories.

New York, N. Y.—Bradstreet's on Saturday will say:

The most encouraging feature of the trade situation this week is the increased demand from manufacturers for wool. The decision of print cloth manufacturers to curtail the output will emphasize recent sales of the surplus and promises a better market. To these may be added the increase in the volume of domestic bank clearings, a general steadiness of prices and the healthfulness of general trade in almost departments. Conservatism in granting credits and the preference of retailers and others to buy oftener, but in smaller quantities, continue to mark the course of business as not before for years. Demand is increasing in almost all lines, with few exceptions, although very slowly. A radical improvement in the near future, based on a slow but healthful increase in the consumptive demand, is, in the absence of unforeseen obstacles, almost a certainty.

Commercial travelers are reported very generally out on the road, yet the volume of business continues small, and unsatisfactory. The more attractive demand is for shoes, hats, groceries, hardware, dry goods and drugs; it is true that at such centers as Chicago and St. Louis, at the West; Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York and Boston, at the East, business continues along on very conservatively lines. Memphis, Nashville and Galveston continue their exceptionally favorable reports as to demand for staples. Pacific Coast ports announce unusually heavy orders for merchandise from Alaska, and an improving trade with China and Japan. Total bank clearings aggregate $1,042,000,000 this week, a decrease of 1 per cent. from last week, but an increase of 6 per cent. over the third week of January, 1896.

Prices appear to include few, if any, that are higher than a week ago, while flour, wheat, corn, lard, crude petroleum, tin, Bessemer pig iron and steel billets are lower. Wool remains firm, at practically unchanged prices, but is likely to advance if the present demand continues. Leather is also firm and unchanged, as are lumber, cotton, print cloths, pork coffee and sugar.

An unusually long list of business embarrassments continues a feature of the state of trade of the week, the total for the past six days being 429, or 49 less than last week, and 88 more than in the week a year ago.

DUN'S REVIEW.

New York, N. Y.—R. G. Dun & Co. say in their weekly report of trade:

There is more business, though not at better prices. It is interesting that almost all prices which changed at all are lower than a week ago, and yet business is unquestionably larger. There is larger production, but as yet not as much increase in consumption, and there is larger buying of materials, but at present only because better prices are expected in the future. A few conspicuous failures during the week have had no material influence. The market for securities is slightly stronger, and yet there is very little doing. The number of hands employed, all industries considered, is slightly larger than a week ago, without adverse change in the rates of wages. All apprehension of foreign disturbance of money markets has passed away, but there is still great caution in making loans. It is a mistake to reckon these symptoms of depression. On the contrary, in spite of the lower range of prices in important industries, the conditions all indicate larger production and a consumption increasing, not as largely, but steadily.

The earnings of railroads in January have been 4.4 per cent. smaller than last year.

Wheat, corn and cotton exports are the key of the financial question, and during the past week wheat has declined ⅜ cents and corn ⅝ cents, while cotton is unchanged. The woolen industry is as slow as ever, and no real improvement appears in the demand for goods, although, owing to the lateness of the season, there is a little more doing, both in Spring and Winter goods, without quotable change in prices.

The iron industry is engaged in settling relative prices, and the slow operation retards business in many branches, since the future of prices is uncertain. Bessemer pig is a trifle lower, at $10.40, at Pittsburg, and gray forge at $9.40, though no further declines has occurred in Eastern markets, or at Chicago. But the competition of new concerns tempted to manufacture nails by the high prices recently maintained, causes slightly lower sales of wire nails at $1.35, and of cut nails at $1.25. The Bar Association has been in session to consider the reduction of steel bars to one cent, and in large contracts even lower, and the Billet Association has again been called together to meet on the 29th, although there is no prospect of its reorganization, and billets are selling at $15.25 at Pittsburg. The increase in manufacturing is, perhaps, more definitely shown than in any other way by the production of coke, which steadily increases, 9,817 ovens being in blast, against 8,173 idle, and the week's output 100,886 tons, is over double the output of October 1.

Failures for the week have been 409 in the United States, against 373 last year, and 65 in Canada, against 61 last year.

STRONG POINTS ON HIM

Birmingham.—John Calhoun Ward, who was arrested last night near Eldridge, Ala., on suspicion of being one of the three men who robbed the Southern Railway train twice within the past month, near Berry, was brought here Saturday and closely questioned by the officials and detectives of the Southern Express Company. To-night they state that they have the strongest reason to believe that Ward was one of the robbers.

Conductor Wilmer, of the train that was robbed Thursday night, says he closely resembles the robber who put two pistols in his face. Ward had two pistols, which Wilmer says are exactly like those drawn on him.

Ward claims his home to be at Ben the famous Rube Burrows committed Brook, Tex., which is the place where his first train robbery. He says that he left Texas January 4, and camped alone in the woods near Eldridge Thursday night, the date of the last train robbery.

Several people from around Berry say Ward resembles a man seen about that place before and since both train robberies, who had considerable money.

Two other men were arrested near Carbon Hill, but released for lack of evidence.

VEST PULLED DOWN.

Huntsville.—Ed. Vest, a notorious murderer and horse thief, wanted in several States, was captured at Dallas Mills Saturday evening. Vest was at the home of his mother, where he had been sick several weeks. When officers called for him he shoved a man out the door. This man was arrested by mistake, but on of the deputies having occasion to go back to the house, found Vest armed with a large pistol. He attempted to shoot, but the deputy was too quick for him.

Vest is wanted in Arkansas for murder, and in Missouri, Tennessee, and a number of other States for horse stealing. Large rewards are up for his capture.

DIED FROM THE SHOT.

Athens.—Press Lacy, the eighteen-year-old boy who was shot Wednesday by his first cousin, Andrew Todd, died here Saturday. The ball took effect in the stomach. The shooting was purely accidental.

SENT FROM SEARSPORT.

Miss S. Mollie Percy, the Well-Known Searsport Dressmaker, Gives Her Experience of Her Life-long Suffering and Cure.

From the Commercial, Bangor, Maine.

The following communication has just been received from Miss S. Mollie Percy, of Searsport, Maine, where she is well and favorably known:

"I was a sufferer from constant headache all my life, frequently accompanied with nausea and sick stomach, especially before and during severe attacks. I am now thirty years old, and as far back as I can remember I was never free from these depressing and distressing attacks, and did not know what it was to feel well, until last winter, when, having seen so much written and heard so much spoken about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, I made up my mind to see if they would do me any good. I therefore bought some of them and began to take them according to directions.

"I soon began to experience relief, and have improved ever since. I am still taking them, and shall continue so to do until I am free of the slightest symptom of my old enemy. I am a firm believer in the efficacy of Pink Pills, and shall never be without them as they have done me so much good.

"I have recommended these pills to others, among them C. G. Coburn, who is ill of heart trouble.

(Signed) "S. M. PERCY

Witness: MRS. J. E. NICHOLS.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. They are manufactured by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., and are sold by all druggists at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50.

It Fitted the Place.

There is a little restaurant over on the East Side that was opened only a week or so ago, and the proprietor has not yet had time to select a name for it. He is a professional genial, is the proprietor, and he has bothered his patrons considerably by coming around while they were eating and consulting with them about the name for the place.

Last night two men dropped in there for a bite. The food was none too good, and they grumbled quite a bit. As they were at the desk paying the check, the proprietor began at them.

"Everything satisfactory, gentlemen?" he inquired in his blandest tones.

Oh, I guess so," said the older man; "I guess so. How much is that check?"

"Ninety cents. I am glad you are pleased. By the way, I am in a quandary as to what name I shall give this restaurant. What would you suggest?"

"Want a name, eh?" said the older man.

"Yes, I do, and I would be very glad if you would make a suggestion."

"I suppose a name for a restaurant ought to be, in a measure, descriptive of the place?" said the younger man.

"That would be my idea," replied the proprietor.

"Well, then, I would suggest that you call it The Paradox."

"The Paradox?" said the proprietor. "Why, that would be a queer name. How is that name applicable to a restaurant?"

"There are quite a number of reasons, but the one most vividly impressed on me this evening is that your milk is sour and your pickles are sweet."—Buffalo Express.

"Heeltaps" of Soup.

Five bowls of soup is not too much for some of the poor little girls who are fed gratuitously at some of the industrial schools on the East and West Sides. When the little boys and girls who have been bidden to the feast have satisfied themselves, they take what is left over in the bowls and empty it into buckets, to be taken home to the starving mothers at home.

The mothers are glad to get these buckets of soup, even though it has been collected from a hundred bowls that have been used by the children at school. The little girls take turns in collecting these heeltaps of soup. The privilege is a blessed one to starving families, and the children soon learn, in the bitter school of poverty, how to make the most of any unconsidered trifle that may come in their way.

It might be thought that an extra gallon of soup could be made for the sake of the mother were it not known that the supply of soup to equal the demand would be an impossibility. The officials make a great quantity of soups of various kinds. There is bean soup, pea soup, vegetable soup and plain soup, and it is all enjoyed. The most popular kind seems to be bean soup. There are great quantities of this soup consumed, and the children always seem to be hungry for it. The soup collected in the buckets is necessarily mixed, but the poor women at home do not mind that. They warm it up, when they have a fire, and enjoy it all the more, perhaps, because it is unlike any soup made by the ordinary cook.—New York Journal.

For Breakfast.

Sometimes even the most fastidious woman forgets that the keynote of daintiness is struck by the morning toilet. A model of all that she should be at other times, her breakfast apparel gives every outward evidence of haste, and leaves much to be desired.

A woman who has made a hasty morning toilet is by no means a thing of beauty. Therefore, she who is wise valiantly foregoes the joy of the forbidden nap. She rises betimes, supported by the thought that of such stuff martyrs are made, and after her matutinal dip, as she arranges her hair as becomingly as she would later in the day for a luncheon or a shopping expedition, she finds herself at peace with all the world, even including the cook.

It's only a little thing in the day's doings, but it tells. The woman who presides at the breakfast table, neat, fresh and rosy, is fulfilling part of her mission in life.

Her husband is as much stimulated by her presence as by the fragrant cup of Mocha which she dispenses, and, though seemingly absorbed in his newspaper as he sips his favorite beverage, in reality he sees every detail of the dainty toilet, knowing that it was made for his eyes alone, and, man-like, appreciating it all the more for that very reason.

What a time a man must have who makes a night of it at the North Pole! Think of going on the rampage for six months!

Goose Barnacle.

One of the oddest things they have at the marine aquarium is a goose barnacle. This particular specimen is very small, very much alive, and has been living in the aquarium for months in spite of the fact that some of its normal barnacle necessities are supplied by most peculiar artificial means. The goose barnacle differs from other varieties in that it hangs from ships, floating timber, or other substances near the surface of the water, and has only the power to attach once to any object. This barnacle being taken from its means of support, an artificial one had to be supplied. This was done by means of a piece of common cotton string. This is tied around the barnacle and to a cork from which the barnacle hangs near the surface of the water in a glass in the aquarium. The barnacle is so small that the string is as large as a rope in comparison, and it looks very comical hanging, the feathery looking cirrus down and grasping out into the water for food.—New York Times.

Castor Oil a Hair Tonic.

The fashionable coiffure for young women and girls is waved at the sides, where it droops a little. Small combs hold these waves in place. The coil at the back is placed rather high. Castor oil, pure and simple, is said to be an excellent tonic for the hair, used once a month.

It is applied with a small, fine sponge, which is dipped in the oil and rubbed on the scalp, the hair being parted with the fingers.

Sweetness and Light.

Put a pill in the pulpit if you want practical preaching for the physical man; then put the pill in the pillory if it does not practise what it preaches. There's a whole gospel in Ayer's Sugar Coated Pills; a "gospel of sweetness and light." People used to value their physic, as they did their religion,—by its bitterness. The more bitter the dose the better the doctor. We've got over that. We take "sugar in ours"—gospel or physic—now-a-days. It's possible to please and to purge at the same time. There may be power in a pleasant pill. That is the gospel of

Some of the Events of the Week that Has Just Passed.—Boatner Wins His Fight

SENATOR GEORGE'S CONDITION.

An Important Message Occupied the Attention of the Senate Friday.—Powerful Petitions in Favor of the Arbitration Treaty to Be Presented.—Hon. Walker Fearn Ill.

Washington, D. C.—The bill for the representation of the United States on any international monetary conference that may be called occupied the Senate Friday almost exclusively, and was finally passed by the triumphant majority of 46 to 4. It authorizes the President to appoint four or more commissioners to any international conference with a view to securing a fixity of relative value between gold and silver as money by means of a common ration between the metals, with free mintage at such rates, and it also authorizes the President to call, in his discretion, such conferences, to assemble at such points as may be agreed upon. The debate on the bill was long and interesting, but by far the most important speech was that made by Mr. Hoar (Rep., Mass.). He took the ground that a very large majority of the people of the civilized world was in favor of the double standard of gold and silver. He quoted two distinguished French statesmen—MM. Fongerol and Meline — as strongly in favor of bimettalism, and said that a resolution introduced in the French Assembly by the first-named gentleman had the support of 367 out of 450 delegates, or a majority of between three-fifths and four-fifths.

Mr. Hoar also named as among the principal European advocates of bimettalism Mr. Balfour, leader of the English House of Commons, and recalled the remark made by him to a a member of the present British Cabinet, in a brilliant company in England, when he (Mr. Hoar) declined to repeat what Mr. Balfour had said to him, "Why, Mr. Hoar, it is no secret that Mr. Balfour's opinions on this matter are those of a majority of Her Majesty's Government."

Mr. Hoar also mentioned the likelihood of Germany and Russia joining in the bimetallic movement, and he declared, in this connection, that the time had come for making another effort in that direction.

Senator Sherman, of the Committee on Foreign Relations, has received a petition from the British Arbitration Society of London, which that organization asks him to lay before the Senate. The petition is similar to many that have been received from American societies, and urges the ratification of the proposed general treaty of arbitration as the first step between the two greatest nations of the earth toward universal peace.

Unfortunately for the British association it was ignorant of the provisions of the United States Constitution when it addressed its petition either to Congress or any individual member thereof. The receipt of petitions or memorials by Congress from aliens is prohibited unless the same come through the State Department. Senator Sherman cannot, therefore, present the petition to the Senate.

He declines to make its text public or discuss the petition in general terms even. A petition, elaborately printed on parchment and signed by an even hundred of the leading citizens of Philadelphia, was presented to the Senate this week. It urges the Senate to ratify the treaty of arbitration now pending beween this country and Great Britain. The memorial is signed by Mayor Warwick, the judges of the various courts, ex-Senator Edmunds, formerly of Virginia, and bankers and capitalists representing money valued in the millions.

The House Commerce Committee has approved the following bills: Appropriating $70,000 for a lighthouse at the pitch of Cape Fear River, near Wilmington, N. C. Appropriating $7,000 for a front beacon of Apalachicola Bay range light station, Florida, and authorizing the construction by the Kansas City, Shreveport and Gulf Railway Company of a bridge across the Sabine River between Louisiana and Texas.

The State Department has received cable advices of the critical illness from double pneumonia of Hon. Walker Fearn, of Alabama, United States "Judge of First Instance" in the International Tribunal at Cairo, Egypt. At Judge Fearn's advanced age it is feared he cannot rally from the attack.

Fearn was Minister to Greece under Cleveland's first Administration. During the war he, with the late Justice Lamar, succeeded Mason and Slidell as Representatives of the Confederacy in Europe.

Attorney-General Harmon has prepared a petition for a writ of certiorari to bring up for review by the Supreme Court of the United States the case of the Three Friends, the alleged filibustering steamer, from the United States Court for the Southern District of Florida, which he will present to the court at its session Monday. An appeal from the decision of Judge Long in the case has bee taken to the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, where it is now pending.

It is understood that a treaty is soon to be sent to the Senate negotiated between this country and Japan, on the subject of trademarks and copyrights. American business men, who have suffered from the absence of such treaty, have been urging the establishment of such relations for some time.

The selection of Lyman Gage to be Secretary of the Treasury, under the McKinley administration, appears to give pretty general satisfaction.

SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY

In McKinley's Cabinet is Lyman J. Gage.

Canton, Ohio.—Lyman J. Gage, who will be the next Secretary of the Treasury, arrived at Major McKinley's house a few minutes before 3 o'clock Thursday afternoon. He was warmly welcomed by the President-elect, who straightway withdrew with him for a private conference, which lasted until 6 o'clock. The President-elect and his Secretary of the Treasury had a full and very satisfactory talk, in which they discussed at length the financial and tariff policies of the next Administration and considered the problems that would call for immediate solution by means of legislation.

The President-elect and Mr. Gage are in thorough accord upon all financial, political and economic policies. The demand for Mr. Gage's appointment came from nearly every commercial center of the country, and from men of both parties. He is indorsed, not only by the business world, but by many labor organizations as well. The direct claim is made in nearly all of the mass of letters and telegrams which have reached Major McKinley respecting Mr. Gage, that the direct effect of his appointment will be to hasten and render certain the restoration of confidence. Major McKinley has been thinking about Mr. Gage for several weeks in connection with the Treasury portfolio, but had been led to believe that he would not accept it. It has also been Major McKinley's intention from the day he was elected to chose a Western man for Secretary of the Treasury, if he could find an available man. Mr. Gage meets all the requirements, but his appointment does not remove from the list of Cabinet possibilities the name of Charles Emory Smith, who would in all probability have been made Secretary of State if the office had been filled by the appointment of an Eastern man.

It may be safely assumed that Major McKinley has decided at present upon six men for his Cabinet, though he has not formally tendered all of them portfolios. The men who are regarded as certain of appointment are: John Sherman, Lyman J. Gage, Nathan Goff, Joseph McKenna, John D. Long and James Wilson, of Iowa, for Secretary of Agriculture. Gen R. A. Alger's appointment as Secretary of War, is probable, but by no means certain. The one remaining portfolio, which is not likely to be tendered before the middle or last of February, will, doubtless, go to a New Yorker or Pennsylvanian.

Mr. Gage said, and authorized the United Associated Presses to say:

"I have been tendered the appointment of Secretary of the Treasury by Major McKinley, and have accepted it."

A CITY'S SHAME

A Louisville Grand Jury Starts With Fifteen Indictments

AGAINST HER CITY OFFICIALS

Time Would Have Brought More—Bribery and Conspiracy to Extort Money, the Charge.

SHAKING UP IN MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS.

President of the Aldermanic Board Accused of Running Games of Chance and Bribery.—Two Aldermen Grouped with a Contractor for Alleged Corruption.—City Contracts.

Louisville, Ky.—The report of the January Grand Jury, made Saturday afternoon, was sensational. Such a shaking up as has resulted from its investigation of municipal affairs has never been known in the history of the city government. Fifteen indictments were returned, including among the accused, Aldermen, police officials, patrolmen, a contractor and several minor offenders. The charges range from neglect of duty, in failing to prosecute gamblers, to bribery and conspiracy to extort money.

The disclosures made in these indictments are principally due to a falling out of the factions in the city government, and while up to this time the faction that has opposed Mayor Todd since he assumed office, has suffered most, it is probable that the next Grand Jury will have plenty of work in continuing the investgation, aided by those who have already been called upon to answer specific charges, but who do not want to have the responsibility for all of the misdeeds done around the city hall saddled onto their shoulders.

The persons indicted to-day are: R. E. King, President of the Board of Aldermen and ex-officio member of the Sinking Fund Commission; Aldermen J. E. Leatherman, R. O. Breuer, C. J. Jenne and John DeGarmo, Night Chief of Police, Major Sebastian Gunther; Patrolmen Nicholas Varilla and Steve Condley, Contractor Drake, Charles Kremer, Jr., secretary of the Board of Public Safety; Pat Ahearn, saloon keeper; Harry Deboe, fireman; William Kimball, Martin Donohue and John Gill.

King, Jene and Leatherman are charged with running games of chance, and one count in King's indictment also charges bribery. Drake, Leatherman and Breuer are accused of conspiracy to extort money from contractors. It is related, in substance, how these three—Leatherman and Breuer being Aldermen, and Drake a contractor—combined to prevent any contracts being let unless the contractors had first contributed to them by buying material from them at exorbitant prices. DeGarmo is charged with obtaining money under false pdretenses by accepting $25 for an appointment which he claimed to be in a position to secrue. Major Gunther is accused of failing to perform his duty as a peace officer.

The indictments charging conspiracy against Kremer, Ahearn, Donahue, Deboe and Kimball are the outcome of an attempt to have the law firm of Stone & Sudduth indicted on a charge of bribery, the latter having their accusers indicted for false swearing.

The Grand Jury in its report says many cases brought before it could not be investigated for lack of time. It continues:

"The Grand Jury is of the opinion that if these matters were investigated, many more indictments would be returned and convictions secured, which would rid the community of the causes of many of the scandals concerning city and county officials. That some persons holding high official positions have not been indicted does not indicate that those indicted are the only guilty ones in official positions. That the city is honeycombed with official corruption is the firm conviction of this jury, yet not enough evidence could be procured to secure conviction in many cases to which the attention of the jury was called."

The report asserts not only that gambling could be suppressed legally, but that it is carried on by direct permission of the city officials.

Several of the persons indicted gave bond for their appearance on the 29th of March.

R. W. Christian, a negro who turned Democrat during the last campaign has fallen from grace, having been indicted for bigamy.

ALABAMA CHRONICLES.

The News of a Great State Told in a Few Words.

—Over 200 members have been received for the railroad branch of the Young Mens' Christian Association at Selma.

—Fire at Wyeth City burned a large portion of the town. The fire cleaned up almost what the cyclone, last Summer, left.

—There is almost a water famine at Childersburg, so far as the wells are concerned. Many of them have never filled since the dry, hot spell of the Summer.

—A little negro at Troy undertook to stand on his head on a plank laid lengthwise on top of a picket fence and slipped off, receiving injuries that resulted in death.

—W. A. Gale, a prominent citizen of Montgomery, came across for the poor of that city with a donation of twenty-five tons of coal, which was distributed by the Mayor.

—Ground is being cleared to erect new buildings on the burned districts at Centre.

—There will be a Teachers' Institute held at LaFayette on the 5th and 6th of March, 1897.

—John Harrison, a former Selma boy, has struck it rich in Mexico where he went some months ago. He bought a mining claim for a small amount and has just refused for it $75,000.

—P. A. F. Ingle, of Guin, has taken charge of the Kansas City, Memphis & Birmingham Depot at Crews.

—The little child of Mr. and Mrs Rube McCullough was badly burned at Selma. Its clothing caught fire from an open-grate. Fears are entertained for its recovery.

—Shipments of cotton from Cullman up to the 21st inst. aggregate the very large sum of 9,254 bales. But few more bales remain to be shipped this season.

—The residence of G. C. Hall, Circuit Court Clerk of Marshall County, was burned at Guntersville. The origin of the fire or the amount of damage is not known. Mr. Hall carried $1,100 insurance.

—the report in the Hamilton News of the death of J. C. Camp, an old Alabama citizen, in Dangerfield, Tex., has happily proven an error. Mr. Camp is enjoying first-rate health, his friends will be pleased to learn.

—The Cordova Cotton Mill, which, by the way, is to be one of the largest in the South, will soon commence to take definite shape, so a reporter is reliably informed. The Legislature will give it a charter, and it is understood that the work of construction will commence shortly thereafter.

—Secretary Herbert has announced that he will send at least one warship to Mobile on March 1, to be present at the Mardi Gras festivities, but the Newark or Raleigh will probably be utilized for the purpose.

—Inquiries have come from abroad for Alabama bar iron. The satisfaction the pig iron has given has created an incipient demand for the finished product. It is very probable that before long a considerable quantity of the output of the local rolling mills will be crossing the ocean.

—The scale and oil houses of the Mabel Mining Company were destroyed Saturday night, January 30th, by fire, together with two pairs of track-scales and several barrels of oil. Business will be delayed two or three days.—Special to Evening News from Warrior, Ala.

—With the sales of one large company for this month to be heard from yet, the total sales of Alabama iron to the Old World since July last have been 92,000 tons.

—Last week alabama iron entered an entirely new field. A thousand tons were sold to a large iron firm on the Australian Continent. The shipment has already been provided for. Scarcely a week passes that some new point is not reached. One of the markets opened up in the past few weeks is New South Wales. That is a pretty long distance to send Alabama iron.

—The 3,000 tons of Alabama iron to be shipped to Yokohama by the ship Lord Wolseley was in durance vile at Pensacola, where the Wolseley is waiting for it, when last heard from, on account of the ship being quarantined by the health authorities of that place The matter will be remedied, and the iron is probably loaded by this time.

—The coal business is very satisfactory. The mines are doing a heavy work, and the cold weather has made the consumption of coal both at the furnaces and for domestic purposes much greater than it has been before for a long time.

—It is stated on good authority that on an average of twenty-five cars of chert leave the Alabama district every day for the outside world. A part of it goes to Atlanta, where it is being used to build a boulevard; some goes to Montgomery, some to Mobile, and so on. The estimated value of this output is something like $150 per diem. There is immediate prospect of a still larger demand for the Birmingham chert, whose reputation has gone abroad. Meridian has lately been inspecting the Jefferson County roads, and is contemplating some like them.

—Ball play is now connected with the outside world through the Georgia and Alabama Long Distance Telephone Company, and the business men and the community generally are pleased.

—A generous citizen of Anniston, on Thursday, gave orders to a coal dealer there to supply suffering families with fuel and charge the same to him. His kindness helped many poor people to obtain a comfortable home during the terrible weather.

PALATKA DISCHARGED.

The Hungarian Tramp Held to Be Not Guilty of Train Wrecking.

Birmingham, Ala.—The trial of Samuel Palatka, the Hungarian miner arrested at Eatonton, Ga., two weeks ago on the charge of having wrecked a Birmingham Mineral train at the Cahaba River bridge, December 27, whereby twenty-seven lives were lost, and who is alleged by his captor to have made a cofession, occurred before Judge Banks, of the Circuit Court, Saturday. The principal witnesses were railroad officials and persons aboard the train, who testified as to how the wreck occurred.

J. G. Wilson, who arrested Palatka, was not allowed to testify, it being ruled that no corpus delicti had been shown.

Stanton Stewart, the fireman, swore that the engine jumped the track on his side first, and that Engineer White reversed it before it went down.

None of these witnesses were able to connect Palatka with the wreck, and he was discharged, the court ruling that the State had failed to show that a rail had been removed or a crime committed.

This decision, it is believed, will have an important bearing upon the suits for damages filed because of the death or injury to persons aboard the train, the amount of damages asked by suits so far being nearly $500,000.

Palatka appeared not to understand fully what the trial meant, and wandered about the courthouse aimlessly for some time after he was discharged. He is very ignorant, and can speak but little English.

DEATH FROM EXCITEMENT.

Aged Citizens of Meridian Come Together, with Unusual Results.

Meridian, Miss.—A difficulty occurred here Saturday between L. B. Bowden and Dave Edwards, aged 58 and 71 years, in which the latter lost his life.

There had been bad feeling about a trivial matter between the two men for some months, Bowden claiming that, through the connivance of Edwards, a boy whom he had in his employ was induced to leave, and when they met a difficulty ensued. The men were separated before either had been hurt, but they had a second meeting, when the quarrel and fight was renewed. Edwards used his fist, while Bowden wielded a small walking-cane. Edwards received quite a severe blow across the nose and under the chin, after which Bowden left him and went in search of a policeman to have him arrested. When he and the officer returned Edwards was dead, and Bowden himself became the prisoner.

It is thought that Edward's death was induced more from excitement than from the blows he received.

ON ANOTHER CHARGE.

Andrew Feagin, Convicted of Train Wrecking, Accused of Burglary.

Birmingham, Ala.—Andrew Feagin, colored, after a ten days' trial, was found guilty of attenmpting to wreck the Southern Railway Washington express at McComb's trestle, is now held on another charge. It is averred that he broke into the tool house of the Southern Railway at McComb's trestle and took therefrom the crow-bar with which it is charged he removed the rail from the trestle, causing the train to leave the track. The warrant was sworn out by Deputy Sheriff Bob Waldrop, and was issued out of the Justice Court of M. F. Calahan.

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE.

Des Moines, Ia.—Mr. J. S. Wilson arrived in Ames, Ia., early Monday morning, after having been to Canton, Ohio, where he conferred with President-elect McKinley. He was communicated with over the long distance telephone, and said:

"I have accepted the portfolio of Agriculture in Mr. McKinley's Cabinet."

SEVEN VICTIMS

Fall a Prey to the Merciless Flames.

TWO FIRES IN HOBOKEN.

A Father Plays Card in a Saloon While His Entire Family Perish in the Flames.

A HOBOKEN, N. Y., CONFLAGRATION.

Mother and Five Children Cremated.—Charred Bodies Found Side by Side by the Policemen and Firemen.—Thirty Families are Made Homeless.

Hoboken, N. J.—This city was visited by two disastrous fires between 11:30 Saturday night and 3 o'clock Sunday morning.

Seven persons were burned to death and thirty families were made homeless.

The Saturday night fire started in the three-story frame building at Newark street. Here six persons lost their lives. They were:

Mrs. Nellie Schroeder, 40 years of age; Henry Schroeder, 11 years of age; Maggie Schroeder, 7 years old; Kate Schroeder, 9 years old; John Schroeder, 3 years of age, and Willie Schroeder, three months old.

The father of the family, Charles Schroeder, was in a near-by saloon playing cards, while his wife and children were dying.

The second fire started at 3 o'clock this morning in the five-story double-deck tenement at 157 Fourteenth street, over a mile from the scene of the first fire.

In this fire, three tenements, Nos. 155, 157 and 159, were entirely wrecked, and No. 153 was badly damaged by water.

One child was burned to death on the fourth floor of No. 157. She was Mabel Mangles, 8 years old.

As near as can be determined, the fire at 410 Newark street started in a defective flue in Schaffer's wheelwright shop, on the ground floor of a three-story frame building. Schaffer occupied the second floor as living apartments. The front rooms on the third floor was occupied by Charles Schroeder and his family, while James Blanchfield and family occupied the rooms in the rear. The Blanchfields discovered the fire, which had gained great headway, and barely made their escape by way of the roofs of adjoining buildings. It was impossible to discover the fate of the Schroeder family until the fire had subsided.

When the police entered the building, little save the shell remained, and they were obliged to exercise great care in climbing about the place They finally reached the top floor and made their way into the front room. Stretched across the bed, blackened and charred, lay the mother, and tightly clasped in her arms was the little baby, Willie.

Beside the mother and baby, in the same bed, lay the charred bodies of the girls, Maggie and Kate. It is likely that they were suffocated in their sleep. On a mattress, on the floor, near the window, lay the body of the boy, John, but the body of Henry, the oldest boy, was nowhere to be seen. Upon further search being made, the boy's body was found under a mass of debris in the hall, burned almost to a crisp.

It is believed that the boy was aroused during the fire, and in his efforts to escape, ran into the hall. There he was overcome by the smoke, and his body was covered by part of the roof, which fell in at that point.

The loss to the building and its contents will probably exceed $15,000.

The fire at 157 Fourteenth street at 3 o'clock this morning started from some unknown cause in one of a row of four cheaply-built, double-deck tenements at Nos. 153, 155, 157 and 159. There were two families on each floor, and only three vacant apartments in all the buildings. All the families were forced out in their night clothing, or with what little covering they could grab in their hurry.

The family of Ferdinand Mangles occupied the fourth floor of 157. Mrs. Mangles, with her four children, started for the street, which they reached in safety, with the exception of Mabel, who was suffocated. The body of the child is probably buried beneath a mass of debris in the cellar.

The loss on the buildings Nos. 155, 157 and 159, which were completely wrecked, is between $75,000 and $80,000. Not over a half dozen families in the three buildings carried any insurance, and their belongings were worth about $10,000.

Last Friday was President elect McKinley's 54th birthday. Nine presidents were younger than Major McKinley at the time of their inauguration—Grant at 47, Cleveland at 48, Garfield at 49, Pierce at 49, Fillmore at 50, Polk at 50, Tyler and Arthur at 51 and Lincoln at 52. The oldest president was William Henry Harrison at 68. The average age of the presidents at inauguration, including McKinley, was a fraction under 58. Major McKinley adds another to the remarkable list of presidents born in winter. It is an extraordinary fact that only two presidents were born between April and October. The record by months is as follows: January, 2; February. 3; March, 4; April, 4; May, 0; June, 0; July, 1, August, 1; September, 0; October, 3; Novemder 4; December 2.—Birmingham News.

GROUND HOG DAY.

Today is ground hog day, As a weather indicator the ground hog is more infallible than old Wiggins, the weather prophet. The Indian has abiding faith in his prognostications, and the white man does not altogether ignore or despise them.

The legend of the ground hog is an old story. On February 2 he rouses himself from his long sleep, crawls out of his winter burrow, looks at the thermometer, and takes a few observations on the weather. If the sun is shining strong enough to enable him to see his shadow, he crawls back to his old quarters and resumes his winter snooze, in the serene confidence that there are six more weeks of severe wintry weather in store for the hapless denizens of the upper world. On the contrary, if the day proves cloudy and overcast, so that it is impossible to see his shadow on the snow, he knows that the backbone of old winter is broken and that spring is close at hand.

The Alabama ground hog today cannot fail to see his shadow, as the sun's rays are in evidence, which means that for six weeks more we are to be at the mercy of the plumbers and coal dealers.—Birmingham News, Feb. 2

THAT BOND BILL.

From the Shelby Sentinel.

The Sentinel notices that Mr. Longshore, the representative in the General Assembly from this county, has introduced a bill to authorize the Board of Mayor and Councilman of the city of Calera to issue bonds of said city for an amount not exceeding ten thousand dollars for the purpose of building and furnishing public school buildings in said city.

Now while the possession of commodious school buildings is a thing to be desired by every community, yet there are other things to be considered before a community or corporation undertakes to become the possessor of such.

The first consideration should be the ability of the community or corporation to erect said buildings.

2nd, The ability not only to float its bonds after they are issued but to pay the bonds themselves and the interest on them.

These are very important as well as practical considerations that should be well weighed before any steps should be taken. Is the city of Calera in any condition to issue bonds? Is not the corporation too small and are not the people too poor to burden the city and themselves with such a debt? Do the people want any such bill passed by the general assembly? The Sentinel, speaking for itself, and as we believe, for an overwhelming majority of the white people of the town—the tax paying people—says that the city of Calera is in no condition to assume such an indebtedness. Our corporation is too small and our people too poor to incur such a responsibility. Besides the people of the city do not want any such bill passed. They would much prefer the enactment of a law abolishing the city charter. Many of them have long since come to the conclusion that if there is ever to be any peace and harmony among the people of the town it can only be secured by abolishing the charter. The experience of the people of the city from the date of its first incorporation as a municipality up to the present time has not been such as to impress them favorably towards the incorporation of small towns. Strife and contention, discord and confusion have been and still are the prevailing conditions. The fact has been forcibly impressed upon them, that a municipal government in a small town furnishes the opportunity for a few designing, turbulent and contentious persons to keep the whole community in turmoil and confusion.

The Sentinel hopes, therefore, that instead of passing Mr. Longshore bill to issue bonds that a substitute in the interest of peace and harmony,, concord and agreement, will be offered by some other member of the house to repeal the charter of the city and that said substitute will be enacted into law, to go into immediate effect. This, we believe, would be pleasing to the large majority of the best citizens of Calera.

Mrs. J. M. Carmichael, wife of Judge Carmichael, died suddenly at her home in Ozark, Ala on the 20th inst.

Lyman J. Gage, of Chicago, has accepted the position of Secretary of the Treasury in Mr. McKinley's cabinet.

GETS AT THE ROOT.

Grover Cleveland some time since advised the various states to enact a law to suppress trusts and combinations, as congress did not have the power to check them. In accordance to his recommendation, several states have taken steps to enact such laws, as in their judgement, will break these combines. Hon. Dan Greene, of Jefferson, offered a bill in the General Assembly last Friday that will strike at the root of the evil,--Hayneville Citizen-Examiner.

We copied last week an article from the Birmingham News in which it was stated that Dr. B, F. Riley, of the University of Ga., was thinking of resigning his position in that institution to accept the presidency of an Alabama college, and the presumption was, as he was last fell tendered the presidency of the Girls' Industrial School, that this was the Alabama college alluded to. We understand, however, that the University of Alabama was the college referred to. We thought it a little strange at the time, that it should be the Girls' Industrial School, as that institution has a president in the person of H. C. Reynolds who cannot be surpassed by Dr. Riley or any one else in fitness for the place. He has, during the present—the first scholastic year of this splendid state institution, demonstrated beyond controversy the wisdom of his selection. The present prosperous condition of the school furnishes the very highest endorsement and we could not think that the best interests of the school called for any change in its President.

A Hazardous Occupation.

Since balloon ascensions began there have never been so many aeronauts injured as during the year 1896. Fourteen of them have either been killed or badly injured by accidents. Two of these unfortunates were women and both were killed. Professional balloon men ascribe the accidents to ignorance and carelessness. Only three of the fourteen aeronauts referred to were of long experience. It has happened that this season there has been a great demand for aeronauts from circuses and fair associations.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. FELL TWENTY-FIVE FEET.

A Brooklyn Elevated Engine and One Car Plunge to the Ground.

Broklyn, N. Y.—The ice and snow, with an open switch, were the cause of an engine and one car of the Brooklyn elevated railroad to leave the structure at Fulton and Bradford streets, falling to the ground, a distance of twenty-five feet. Several persons were injured, as well as the car and engine being demollished. Two persons, it is said, will die. The injured are:

Thomas Caffney, engineer of engine No. 74, living at 653 Chauncey street; skull fractured and other injuries to the body.

George Thomas, of Canarsie, fireman of the same engine; scalded on face and limbs by escaping steam; both taken to St. Mary's Hospital.

Albert Brown, engineer of engine No. 67; several wounds to the scalp.

Thomas Heath, of No. 341 New Jersey avenue, fireman with Brown, left leg amputated.

Henry Sebers, of No. 134 Cleveland street; sprain of left leg.

J. Hanbury, of Railroad and New Jersey avenues, Jersey City; fracture of spine.

Andrew Grogans, of No. 8 Montauk avenue, contusion of the hips.

Henry Hinke, of Railroad avenue, near Jamaica, scalp wounds.

Heath and Caffney will die. The latter was in charge of engine No. 74 of the Lexington avenue branch, that left the Brooklyn Bridge at 6:15 o'clock, and was on its way to Cypress Hill Cemetery. Four cars made up the train, but only a few passengers were in them. At the junction of Bradford and Fulton streets, as Gaffney was about to slow up, engine No. 67, drawing a train of empty cars, in charge of Albert Brown, loomed up, and striking an open switch, headed directly in Gaffney's course. No time was given to reverse the levers. The engines came together with a crash, and a second later engine No. 74 toppled over, leaving the rails, and dragging the first car with it to the street. The breaking of the coupling on the second car prevented the three other coaches from leaving the rails. As it was, the front wheels of the second car were dragged from the tracks, becoming settled in the ties, remaining there, preventing the cars in the rear from following the engine's descent to the street.

A CINCINNATI BLAZE.

Originated in a Malt House, and Consumed an Entire Block.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—The block bounded by Race, Commerce, Vine and Second was the scene of a destructive fire at 2 o'clock Friday morning. The blaze originated in the engine room of the Herman Goepper & Co., malt house on Commerce street, and spread rapidly to the cordage establishment of Overman & Schroeder, and the commission houses of W. W. Blair & Co., and Mellen, Brown & Co. These buildings were completely destroyed, entailing a loss of $200,000. The buildings adjoining were damaged by water only, and were occupied by the following firms:

The Furniture Warehouse Company, J. Staun & Co., dealers in tobacco; the Cincinnati Transfer Company, C. H. Reinhardt & Co., confectioners; John H. Pointers, baker, and the Kerr Grocery Company.

The loses are fully covered by insurance.

FOUR CHARRED VICTIMS

Found in a Burned Farmhouse.—A Husband's Awful Find.

Belleville, Mich.—The farmhouse of A. E. Vandewater, located three miles South of this place, was destroyed by fire early Tuesday morning, and four persons were burned to death. They were Mrs. Vandewater and her two children, a boy aged 8 and a girl aged 14; Miss Anna Vandewater, a sister of Mr. Vandewater.

Mr. Vandewater was away from home and it was not until daylight Tuesday morning that it was known that the house had burned. The remains of the victims have been recovered, but in a horribly charred condition. It is not known how the fire started, but it is believed it started from an overheated stove.

DON'T LIKE IT.

English Papers Say the Committee Have Nullified the Treaty.

London, Eng.—The Globe, commenting upon the modification of the arbitration treaty, says:

"The Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate has left the treaty meaningless, and it would be discreditable to the common sense of the Senate if that body should approve the treaty as it has been altered."

The Westminster Gazette says:

"The jingo majority seek to destroy the treaty."

NOT A SINGLE TAXER.

Chicago, Ill.—Lyman J. Gage, the prospective Secretary of the Treasury in President-elect McKinley's Cabinet, has positively denied the published story that he was a single taxer and an uncompromising adherent of Henry George upon that subject.

"There is not the slightest foundation for the report that I am now or ever was a single tax man," said Mr. Gage, "and nothing that I have ever said or written on economic subjects could furnish the slightest grounds for such a statement."

FIFTEEN BOATS SUNK

By Insurgents, Who Used a Cannon with Good Effect.

New York, N. Y.—A Key West special to a morning paper says that another marine disaster to the Spaniards is reported. This time the naval department will not be charged with it, as one of General Weyler's own river expeditions was badly used up.

Fifteen boats are said to have been sunk, 100 men were reported to have been killed or missing, and the number of wounded is put as seventy-five.

Hearing that the insurgents had fortified some heights near Paez, on the river Caunao, Santa Clara Province, General Weyler sent Colonel Serves with 300 men in small boats to capture the place and destroy the forts.

After proceeding up the river about twenty miles, on rounding a sharp bend, a heavy fire was opened on the expedition with rifles and a six-pound field piece. The river there was shallow and narrow, the channel being near the bank where the insurgents were.

The fourth shot from the cannon sunk one boat. A moment later another boat was sunk. The Spaniards leaped out of their boats, waded to land, and charged the insurgents, who were protected by the high banks and the thick bushes. The Spanish drove the insurgents off, but could not capture the cannon. Resuming the journey, the expedition was harrassed at every bend of the river.

A few miles from Paez the Cubans opened fire with two cannon. Six boats were quickly sunk, and then the reble rifles played havoc with the Spanish soldiers as they struggled in the water. Four of the wounded were caught by alligators, near shore, and dragged under water.

Colonel Serves was forced to order a hasty retreat, which speedily became a route. Hastily the Spaniards pulled back, but the boats were pursued by the patriots, who kept up a constant fire, sinking more boats. Had not a reinforcement met the Spanish ten miles from Cienfuegos, not 100 men would have escaped.

General Weyler has made no special report of the disaster.

FEAGIN IS DECLARED GUILTY.

Jury Brought in the Verdict Sunday.—Wrecked McCombs Trestle Train.

Birmingham, Ala.—The trial of Andrew Feagin, who, according to the confession of his pals, was the leader of the gang of trainwreckers who removed a rail on McComb's trestle on the night of December 22, ended Saturday evening, after ten days' duration, and the jury at 10 o'clock Sunday brought in a verdict of guilty.

Feagin, Tom Parker and five other negro miners were arrested at Henry Ellen three weeks ago. Parker confessed that Feagin organized them into a gang to wreck and rob trains, and that on the night of December 22 he and Feagin, the others having weakened, took up a rail on McComb's trestle, which is ninety feet high, intending when the Southern Railway's Washington express had been wrecked to rush from the bushes, murder those passengers who had been mangled, and rob the train.

The entire train was derailed and jumped along on the ties for a hundred feet or more, but was stopped before it could leave the trestle, though at the time the wheels were very close to the ends of the ties. The escape was a narrow one.

Feagin protested his innocence, but all his alleged pals said he had laid the plot.

The wreck of a Birmingham Mineral train at the Cahaba River trestle, where twenty-eight lives were lost, occurred five days after the McComb's wreck, and was generally thought to have been the work of wreckers.

The punishment for trainwreckers in this State is only ten years' imprisonment, but the present Legislature proposes to make it a capital offense.

COX, OF TENNESSEE,

Introduces in the House a Bill to Reimburse Confederates.

Washington, D. C.—There was offered in the House, Saturday, by Mr. Cox, of Tennessee, a bill which recites the circumstances of Lee's surrender at Appomattox, and the written guarantee that the artillery and cavalry officers of the Confederacy should be permitted to retain their horses, arms and baggage. After the surrender the Federal soldiers dispoiled the Confederates of these effects, and they were never returned to the original owners. His bill appropriates $200,000 as a compensation for these losses, upon satisfactory proof being furnished to the Quartermaster-General.

FOUND THE WINCHESTER.

The Little Tot Played with the Gun and is Seriously Shot.

Pine Bluffs, Ark.—The two-year-old son of Arthur Young was accidentally shot with a Winchester rifle Saturday morning, the ball entering his left cheek and ranging down and coming out at his shoulder.

Mr. Young loaded the gun and placed it on the floor, under the bed, intending to go hunting. The child being left alone in the room found it, and in dragging it from under the bed, it was discharged, with the above result. The boy is still alive, and will probably recover.

The South may yet get a man in the Cabinet, and Evans' chances for the place are not entirely hopeless.

OLD STYLE AND NEW.

Teacher—"What is that letter?"

Pupil—"I don't know."

Teacher—"What is it that makes honey?"

Small Boy (son of a manufacturer)—"Glucose."

"What bothers me mostly," said Kate, with a yawn, "is something that says without going."

Philosophical boarder—Let us hope that we shall have dogless sausages, hairless butter, soundless pianos, voiceless elocutionists and acheless backs.

Preserving Meat by Electricity.

The principle of cataphoresis, or the driving of foreign substances into animal tissue by means of electric currents, has been adopted, says the Boston Journal of Commerce, with great success in both medical and dental work. In these capacities it is employed principally in conjunction with cocaine or some other anaesthetic for the purpose of rendering the flesh of the tooth to be operated upon insensible to pain. The benumbing solution is forced into the tissue, and even into the obdurate sensitive dentine of the tooth, until no sensation whatever is possible for the time being in the region under treatment. A provision merchant of Rio Janiero has suggested an application of this method to the preparation of meat. He immerses the meat to be preserved in a 30 per cent solution of common salt, and passes through the whole a continuous current of electricity. In from ten to twelve hours the salting is said to be complete and the meat taken out of the bath and hung up to dry. Good results were obtained in working a bath of 3000 liters of lime, in which 1000 kilos of meat were immersed; a current of 100 amperas at an electro motive force of eight volts was used in this bath. The electrodes must be of platinum, since if other materials, such as zinc or iron, were used, the metal salts formed would be injurious.

In Germany the census is taken every five years.

NEW UNITED STATES JUDGE

For Northern District of Alabama—T. H. Aldrich Introduces a Bill Providing for Such.

COINAGE WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

House Committee is Considering the Senate Bill.—The State of Virginia Refuses to Pay Uncle Sam What She Owes, and Further Legislation is Recommended by Carlisle

Washington, D. C. (Special Correspondence).—Truman H. HAldrich, of Alabama, has introduced in the House, and had referred to the Committee on Judiciary, a bill providing for the appointment of a judge for the Northern District of Alabama. The bill provides that the President of the United States shall have the power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a judge for the Northern Judicial District of Alabama, the said judge to receive a compensation of $5,000 per annum, for his services, such compensation to be paid in quarterly instalments.

The second section of the bill provides that the jurisdiction of the present Judge for the Middle and Northern Districts of Alabama, and his successors, shall hereafter be confined to the said Middle District of said State.

Mr. Aldrich thinks that the judges of the Judicial Districts of the State have too much to do, and says that the reason why the dockets are so full at the present time, is because there are not enough judges to try the cases. He believes that he can secure the passage of his bill and will make every effort to do so before the final adjournment of congress.

The House Committee on Coinage, Weights and Measures, Saturday, began the consideration of the Senate bill providing for the appointment of delegates to the International Monetary Conference, to be called in the future. Senator Chandler made a brief argument in support of the bill and was followed by Senator Newlands, who said that the bimetalists of the country were in favor of restoring the value of silver, and if it could not be done by national methods they were willing to do it by international means. There had already been four international conferences, he argued, but they had been mere debating societies and had accomplished nothing, and he was afraid that if another was held the result would be the same. He said that the delegates to these conferences generally went without authority to commit the countries they represented and, consequently, no results were obtained. That, in his opinion, the matter could be settled or adjusted by diplomatic correspondence. The Committee adjourned without action and will, probably give further hearings before taking final action.

Replying to a house resolution, asking what steps had been taken to collect or procure a settlement of the principal and interest of certain State Bonds and Stocks, now belonging to the United States, Secretary Carlisle transmits a communication from the Attorney General, stating that further legislation, by Congress, was necessary before the department can force a settlement. The State of Virginia refused payment on her bonds when the demand was made.

The Comptroller of the Currency, has received information of the suspension of the First National Bank of Franklin, Ohio. At the date of its last report the bank owed its depositors $75,000, a surplus of $10,000 and had assetts, including bonds, of $158,000. Its capital is $50,000.

* * *

Senator Chandler and other friends of the Nicaragua Canal bill have recently held conferences with Speaker Reed, and other house leaders, regarding the possibility of the bill being brought up in the house in the event it should pass the Senate. The result is that the bill will, doubtless, be abandoned for the time.

Consul General Lee telegraphs the State Department, under date of Saturday, that Sylvester Scovel, the Correspondent of the New York World, in Cuba, had been arrested at Tunas, in Santa Clara Province. The able Consul General will watch the interests of Scovel as an American citizen.

It is reliably reported that Secretary Olney has received from President Elliott, of Harvard University, an invitation to fill the Chair of International Law, in that institution, after the expiration of his term of office in the State Department. The Secretary, it is stated, has taken the offer under consideration.

Senator Nelson introduced, in the Senate, Friday, last, a substitute for the bankruptcy bill now pending before that body. It provides for voluntary bankruptcy for persons owing $200 or more, and gives preference to debts due to the United States or to the state in which the debtor resides, and to those due to servants or laborers, for their wages.

* * *

It is already evident that the new tariff bill will not increase duties on everything. For instance, the majority of the Ways and Means Commitee, have, informally, decided to cut the duty on steel rails nearly half. The duty on same, under the present tariff, is about equal to $7.84 a ton, but it is not likely to exceed $4 under the new tariff bill. Improvements in methods and lessening the cost of rails by American manufacturers, is given as the reason for this cut.

The populists in Congress do not take kindly to the suggestion that the party abandon silver as an issue, and that a national conference be held to define their policy. They say that the platform adopted by their national Convention last July is all the definition of the policy they will need until the next convention assembles.

A story is current here that Hon. H. Clay Evans, of Tennessee, will be made Commissioner of Pensions under the McKinley administration. The President elect is said to have intimated as much to a recent visitor from this city, to Canton.

TO MAKE SUGAR IN FLORIDA.

Cuban Planters Have Purchased the Big St. Cloud Plantation.

A special dispatch to the Manufacturers' Record (Baltimore) from Kissimmee, Fla., gives particulars of the purchase by Cuban sugar planters of the extensive St. Cloud sugar plantation near Kissimmee, established by the late Hamilton Disston, of Philadelphia, and R. E. Rose, of Florida.

A syndicate of Cuban planters has purchased the entire sugar plantation, including a large sugar mill, teams, and considerable adjacent land. The capacity of the sugar mill will be doubled at once and 2,000 acres of cane will be planted this fall. The Cubans will take possession as soon as the conveyance papers have been completed.

This is regarded as the most important movement ever made in Florida looking to the largest development of the sugar producing interests of that state.

The late Hamilton Disston undertook the development of sugar growing in Florida on a large scale, buying the St. Cloud plantation and investing in a sugar mill about a quarter of a million dollars.

INSPECTORS WERE MISTAKEN.

Colman Had a Right to Proofs of Stamps in His Possession.

There are no new developments in the postoffice department concerning the alleged "periodical stamp" robbery.

The chief postoffice inspector is still investigating the matter. It is apparent that the postoffice inspectors who made the arrest have made a mistake.

It is stated that the proofs of stamps found in Colman's possession are fifteen years out of date, and are legitimate articles of traffic among stamp dealers and collectors; also that Colman understood this and his refusal to go into detailed explanation of his possession of such a quantity of the proofs as was found upon him was simply a matter of business.

ARGUMENT IN RYDER CASE

Will Be Heard By the Supreme Court On February 15th.

The supreme court has set February 15th as the date for hearing of the argument in the Ryder case.

The case was appealed to the supreme court from the lower court, the appeal for a new trial being based on sixty-seven grounds. One of the grounds on which the motion is made is an affidavit to the effect that M. H. Jamerson, one of the jurors in the case, expressed himself beforehand, saying that the prisoner should be hanged.

An affidavit has been received from Jamerson, who is in Texas, stating that he did not state any such thing. The affidavit comes too late, however, to be used in the record that will be presented to the supreme court.

Diamond Thief in Limbo.

Andrae Manro was arrested at New York Friday, accused with having, with two others, stolen a package of diamonds from George E. Gall, a jeweler, of New Orleans. The robbery occurred on December 2.

A handsome business block will be erected in Columbus, Miss., where the Hatch building was destroyed.

TO MAKE STEEL

The Birmingham Rolling Mill to Erect a Big Plant.

MEANS MUCH TO THE STATE

Work to Begin at Once Converting the Birmingham Rolling Mill Into a Steel Plant.

TO BE IN OPERATION IN SIX MONTHS.

Converters Large Enough to Supply The Entire Mills With Steel, Will be Placed.—Birmingham and All Alabama Are to Be Congratulated.—Other Newsy Items.

Birmingham, Ala.—The Birmingham Rolling Mill, which needs but little additional machinery to adopt it to such purpose, will be turned into a steel plant within the next six months. Work has already commenced and will be pushed to completion.

It was given out Saturday, positively, that the steel plant is to be built. A proposition of the Birmingham Rolling Mill Company, made to the citizens of the city, has been accepted. Birmingham has subscribed the amount of stock required, the work of securing the subscriptions having been by the Rolling Mill management, in connection with a committee of the Commercial Club, consisting of Major W. J Milner, Mr. M. V. Joseph and Mr. N. E. Barker. For more than two years the Birmingham Rolling Mill Co. has been adding machinery to its plant from time to time, for the working of steel, until it has reached that point where all that is necessary is the machinery for the actual conversion of the pig iron into steel.

To secure this improvement in its plant, viz., steel converters, about $75,000 was necessary, and after consultation, it was decided by the Rolling Mill people that, if the citizens of Birmingham would subscribe $35,000 of the necessary amount, the other would be raised by them and the work would begin at once by putting in the converters.

The Commercial Club took up the matter and the required amount of stock was soon taken.

A meeting has been called of all the stockholders of the Rolling Mill Company, for February 12, at which time preferred stock will be issued to the subscribers to the steel mill. This meeting will, also, authorize the purchase of converters for the steel mill, and work will begin, immediately thereafter, on converting the Birmingham Rolling Mill into a steel plant. Preliminary work in cleaning up and making changes in the boiler room is now being done.

Converters large enough to supply the entire mill with steel will be placed. The plant will be the largest of the kind in the south and one of the largest in the country. Within six months steel will be made and worked in the Birmingham Rolling Mill.

Mr. James G. Caldwell, President of the Rolling Mill Company and whose home is in Louisville, spent several days in Birmingham, and will make this city his home, so it is said, in the future. The people of our city are rejoicing over the outlook.

CHRISTIANS MASSACRED.

Uprising of Mahometans In the Island of Crete.

A dispatch to the Central News (London) from Athens says that desperate fighting has occurred between the Christians and Mahometans in the island of Crete.

The Mussulmans set fire to the city of Canea and the place was burned. The city is in a state of anarchy and a Christian is safe nowhere.

Many Christians who had locked themselves in their houses were driven out by the flames, only to meet death at the hands of the Turkish soldiers, who shot them down at sight.

A number of Christians have succeeded in finding refuge on the warships in the harbor, but the outlook for those still in the city is very precarious.

The situation is so critical that marines have been landed from the British and French warships to protect the consulates of their respective governments.

A later dispatch says that the Christian quarters in Canea have been almost destroyed. The various consulates are crowded with fugitives.

The dispatch further says that fully 300 persons have been killed in Canea. Many of them lost their lives while attempting to reach the warships.

A story is current in Washington, D. C. to the effect that Hon. Clay Evans of Chattanooga, Tenn., is to be Commissioner of Pensions under the McKinley administration.

SHOVING THE QUEER.

Q. Van Huss, of Morristown, is Caught Red-Handed.

Morristown, Tenn.—Q. Van Huss is under arrest here for passing counterfeit money. He got on a westbound passenger train and asked a passenger, Fred Johnson, of Knoxville, for change for a silver dollar, and it was given to him. Johnson finding the coin was bogus, reported the matter to the Chief of Police at Knoxville, who telegraphed the authorities at Morristown, and Van Huss was arrested. He had a preliminary trial before United States Commissioner Brown, and the evidence was very strong against him. Mr. Witt testified that Van Huss had told him that he had "worked a man," and had received good money for a bad dollar. There have been several dollars of this brand going round this section, and it is possible that this trial may result in the arrest of the counterfeiters. The prisoner is a member of a highly respectable family. He was committed for trial.

HALL'S TRIAL BEGINS.

He is an Alabamian, and the Case is An Old One.

Pensacola, Fla.—The trial of Collier Hall, a wealthy citizen of Mobile county, Alabama, was called at 3 o'clock Monday. The afternoon was consumed in getting a jury, which was completed at 6 o'clock.

Mr. Hall is under indictment for a murder committed near Bluff Springs in this county, in 1871. The indictment was returned in that year, but for some reason has lain unnoticed until a few months ago.

Mr. Hall has been a resident of Mobile county, Alabama, for over twenty years, and is highly respected by the citizens of the county and the citizens of Mobile. The trial will be a long one, and creates much interest in the county. The strongest possible defense will be made by eminent attorneys.

FLORIDA BANK SENSATION.

President of the Merchants' National Under Arrest.

Ocala, Fla.—President R. S. McConnell of the Merchants' National Bank, of this place, which failed on January 14, was arrested Monday charged with falsifying returns and embezzlefunds. The warrant was sworn out by Bank Examiner McDonald, who who has been investigating the Institution's books.

The State of Florida loses $30,000 by the failure, State Treasurer Collins having deposited that sum without security. McConnell and Collins were political allies. McConnell is critically ill and is being guarded at his home. He has no visible property here, but it is alleged he has made heavy investments in North Dakota.

STRICKEN WHILE PRAYING.

Sudden Death of Rev. Fred J. Estes at Columbus, Ga.

Columbus, Ga.—While in the act of praying, Rev. Fred J. Estes, a local Congregational minister, dropped dead Sunday night.

Mr. Estes attended services at the Free Will Baptist Church here and was called upon to pray. He began to do so, when suddenly he fell to the floor, expiring almost immediately. He was stricken down with a supplication from his lips.

HOUSE OF REFUGE

Burned, But the Eight Hundred Inmates All Escaped.

New York, N. Y.—Fire damaged one of the wings of the House of Refuge on Randall's Islands to the extent of $5,000. When the fire broke out over 800 children of both sexes were in the building. They were removed to another building. The trasfer was made without excitement and no casualties occurred.

UPWARD TENDENCY

In the Price of Iron and Steel at Pittsburg.

Pittsburg, Pa.—A revival in the iron and steel business is expected here. Prices of steel billets are about 5 cents higher than last week, and orders at last week's figures were refused. Pig iron prices are also advancing slightly.

BURNED AT HER WHARF.

London, Eng.—The British bark Mark Curry, Captain Liswell, in port at Iloilo, Philippine Islands, for the Delaware Breakwater, has been burned at her wharf. She had on board a cargo of 1,200 tons of sugar.

PUT INTO COMMISSION.

London, Eng.—A dispatch from Athens to the Exchange Telegraph Company, says the Official Gazette has published a royal decree ordering all available Greek warships to be put into commission immediately, and requiring several of them to be sent to Crete with the least possible delay

Some Interesting Visitors to the President-Elect.—Considerable Amount of Cabinet Talk

PRESIDENTS PRIVATE SECRETARY.

GOSSIP FROM CANTON.

Mark Hanna May Be Postmaster-General.—Bill Stevens in Evidence.

Canton, Ohio.—The indications now are that the present intentions of M. A. Hanna will occupy the Cabinet guessers the rest of the week. It is rumored here by many of Mr. Hanna's Cleveland friends who visited Canton, that he may decide to accept the position of Postmaster-General. The most generally accepted opinion is that Mr. Hanna thinks he will not be appointed to the Senate by Governor Bushnell, though the rumor that Governor Bushnell has decided to appoint Lieutenant-Governor Jones to fill the seat in the United States Senate which will be vacated by John Sherman on the 4th of March, is not thought to be wholly reliable.

The earnest effort on the part of the loyal Republicans attached to both wings of the party in Ohio is now being made to continue the harmonious relations which have existed in the State for the last year and a half, and it is by no means certain that Governor Bushnell may not at the last moment appoint Mr. Hanna to the Senate, although up to this time he has in no way indicated his willingness to do so.

Whether Mr. Hanna is appointed to the Senate to fill Mr. Sherman's unexpired term or not, he will be a candidate for election for the regular full term before the Legislature, which is to be elected next Fall, and which meets to choose a United States Senator in January next. Many of Mr. Hanna's friends want him to go into the Cabinet, and Major McKinley has desired it ever since his election. The belief that he will be appointed Postmaster-General is growing hourly.

The recent visit of General Alger to Canton was not fraught with importance. He came to present the wishes of some Michigan friends. There was a little talk about an Assistant Secretary of War, but nothing of a definite nature respecting this important appointment was done.

The visit of Chairman Gowdy, of the Indiana Republican Committee, was one of interest. He spent the day in Canton, and had an extended talk with the President-elect. Mr. Gowdy says Indiana will be modest in her demands upon the President-elect, and when pressed, confessed that he would like to be appointed Consul-General to Paris. As a matter of fact, applicants for offices from Indiana have not been as numerous in Canton as from many other States. There at least twenty-applicants for the post of Consul-General at Paris.

The appointment and acceptance of J. Addison Porter of the position of Private Secretary to the President-elect, puts a stop to further guessing. Perry Heath, of Indiana, who was a good deal talked of in connection with the office of Private Secretary, came here yesterday in response to a telegram from the President-elect. Mr. Heath was offered a very handsome appointment, which he has long desired, and which he accepted. He applied for the position several months ago, and Major McKinley, who has known him for many years, and who thinks highly of him and of the work he did in the campaign, said he was glad to be able to give the appointment he wanted.

Among Major McKinley's callers last night were two colored Republicans, C. H. Deas, of South Carolina, and W. J. Stevens, of Alabama. The name of Dr. Seward Webb, of Shelburne, Vt., has been presented to Major McKinley for consideration as a Cabinet possibility, and was being seriously thought of, when, owing to sickness in his family and business engagements, he asked Gen. T. S. Peck to visit Canton and withdraw his name.

GEN. CLAYTON'S MODESTY.

Mr. McKinley Surprised Thereat.—Minister to Mexico.

Little Rock, Ark.—Hon. L. H. Remmel, of this city, late Republican candidate for Governor of Arkansas, is authority for the statement that General Powell Clayton will be the next United States Minister to Mexico, succeeding Hon. M. W. Ransom. Mr. Remmel held a conference with Major McKinley last week, and says that the President-elect was surprised at General Clayton's modesty. The appointment will be made a few days after March 4.

JOHN BULL'S METHODS.

London, Eng.—The plan formulated by the Government for increasing the strength and efficiency of the navy contemplates the construction of five battleships and three first-class cruisers, and an addition of 10,000 more men.

A DOSE OF LEAD.

Administered to a Highwayman By a Postal Clerk.

Los Angeles, Cal.—A private message was received in this city late Monday night stating that two masked robbers held up Santa Fe westbound tain No. 1 at a point a few miles from Peach Springs, Ark.

The train was stopped by means of a red light, and the engineer was covered with a revolver in the hands of one of the robbers who ordered him to keep quiet.

The robber then uncoupled the mail and express car, and with his companion got aboard the engine and ordered the engineer to run up the road a bit.

There the train was stopped and the robbers proceeded to open the door of the mail car. The door was opened by the mail clerk, who, with a revolver shot one of the robbers, killing him instantly.

The other robber, after grabbing a bundle of registered letters, made good his escape.

The dead robber was taken to [illegible] Springs.

AN EPOCH FOR FLORIDA.

Cubans Purchase an Immense Estate and Will Make Sugar.

Baltimore, Md.—A special dispatch to the Manufacturers' Record from Kissimee, Fla., gave particulars of the purchase by Cuban sugar planters of the extensive St. Cloud sugar plantation near Kissimee, established by the late Hamilton Disston, of Philadelphia and Mr. R. E. Rose, of Florida. A syndicate of Cuban planters has purchased the entire sugar plantation, including a large sugar mill, teams, and considerable adjacent land. The capacity of the sugar mill will be doubled at once, and 2,000 acres of cane will be planted this Fall. The Cubans will take possesion as soon as the conveyance papers have ben completed. This is regarded as the most important mprement ever made in Florida looking to the largest development of the sugar producing interests of that State. The late Hamilton Disston undertook the development of sugar growing in Florida on a large scale, buying the St. Cloud plantation and investing in a sugar mill about a quarter of a million dollars.

OUTBREAK AMONG MINERS

At Leadville, Col., Feared—Rifles Are in Evidence.

Leadville, Col.—This town was greatly worked up Monday night over the rumor that the miners were preparing for another outbreak. Everything points to preparations for a midnight outbreak, in which fires will be started in many rooming blocks throughout the main portion of the city. This much is known as a positive fact. Union rifles were distributed last night, and a number of consignments of rifle cartridges have been received within the last few days billed to Union men.

CRISIS IN AFFAIRS

In Little Portugal.—The Ministry Resign.

Lisbon, Portugal.—Premier Hintze Dobeiro Saturday delivered to the King the resignations of the entire Ministry, informing His Majesty that the Cabinet had found themselves unable to grapple with the present economic and financial situation, and had therefore resolved to retire from office.

The King accepted the resignation and summoned the Progressist leader Senor Luciano de Gastro, to form a new Cabinet, in which Senor Barros Gomes, member of the Council of State, will be appointed Minister of Foreign Affairs.

DEAD IN THE WOODS.

Meridian, Miss.—Word has been received in this city, that Charles Peavy, a citizen of Chunky, Miss., dropped dead, while out hunting. It appears that Peavey went out hunting for turkey and was successful in finding a large bunch of the fowls. He shot a large gobbler and as he went to pick it up he fell dead. His family became alarmed when he failed to return home for dinner. Upon instituting search, his body was found in the woods, cold and stiff. His death is supposed to have been due to heart disease. The deceased leaves a large family.

MONTEVALLO, ALA., FEB. 13, 1897.

The indications now are that Chairman Hanna is not in it for a portfolio in the cabinet, and the surmise is that he will aspire to Senatorial honors.

Hon. Cecil Browne, of Talladega, and the Montgomery Advertiser are having a little tilt. The matter of difference between them seems to be a question of democracy, or which is the democrat.

The meeting of the Alabama Field Trials club at Madison, Ala., has been postponed to February 15, and the closing of entries extended to February 14. The Memphis & Charleston Railroad will make a rate of one fare for the round trip, and the Louisville & Nashville Railroad one or one and one-third fare.

WHY PICNICS ARE SOCALLED.

Everybody knows what a picnic is, but most folks would find it hard to say how it got that name, and yet it is simple enough when you come to learn it. When a picnic was being arranged for, the custom originally was that those who intended to be present should supply the eatables and drinkables. A list of those necessities having been drawn up, it was passed around and each person picked out the article of food or drink that he or she was willing to furnish, and the name of the article was nicked, or ticked off the list. The open air entertainment thus became known as a "pick and nick." The custom is said to have dated from 1802, so that the picnic is wholly an institution of the nineteenth century.—Ex.

The lower house of the General Assembly on Monday passed the proposed new mining law without amendment by a vote of 82 to 2. It is a voluminous bill, covers the whole mining situation and repeals all mine bills now in force in the state. It is believed to be a particularly equitable one to both the mine operators and operatives. The Senate devoted most of its time Monday to the passage of the guarantee bond company bill which requires that all guarantee companies doing business in the state shall deposit with the State Treasurer $50,000 to guarantee the payment of the Alabama policy holders. It is stated that if the bill as amended becomes a law the foreign companies will retire from the state. The revenue bill is one of the most important measures that has been engaging the house this week.

SKULL CRUSHED BY AN AX.

A special of the 8th from Blocton to The Montgomery Advertiser says:

A deplorable tragedy occurred here this afternoon about half past one. Ike Creel killed Lige Price by striking him on the head with an ax.

Creel is a half witted fellow and the boys of the town have been in the habit of throwing rocks at him and teasing him in every conceivable way. This evening Mr. Price got drunk, pulled his knife out and told Creel he was going to kill him. Creel had an ax in his hand and told price that he wasn't going to do any such thing and then stepped up to Price who shoved him away from him. Creel then drew his ax and struck Price on the head with such force as to break the skull and make a big hole. Doctors were called to the scene immediately but they were unable to do the poor fellow any good. Mr. Price leaves a wife and two small children.

About two weeks ago Creel hit a small boy on the head with an ax which almost killed him, but he was allowed to go free on account of his being an idiot. Constable Tom Talford caught Creel shortly after he had done his bloody work and now he is peeping through the bars.

LATER—Later reports state that Price is still alive and there is a possibility of his recovering.

Gen. S. D. Weakley, an aged and prominent citizen of Florence, Ala., dropped dead on the street in Florence on the 3rd inst. He was about 85 years of age.

The papers of Monday announced the purchase of about $1,000,000 worth of print cloths, The whole matter is, that Mr. Borden and his associates of Fall River, having confidence in the future market, have advanced this large sum in order to relieve the mills. There will perhaps be a slight curtailment of production by the mills, for the present, but it is hoped that it will not be very many weeks before the consumption will be in excess of the current supply. Mr. Borden, in the meantime, will be able to dispose of the stock which he has just purchased and the mills will again be put to work at their full capacity. There are many other men, like Mr. Borden, who stand ready to risk their money in business enterprises, just as soon as they can be reasonably assured that a fair profit upon their investment will be the result Alabama is an inviting field for such enterprises. Let our legislators be careful that they do nothing to darken the present encouraging outlook for the State.—Advertiser.

The Journal de St. Petersburg of January 19 speaks very discouragingly of Senator Wolcott's bimetallic mission, saying it is greatly to be feared on Mr. Wolcott's behalf that he will not carry back any hopeful impressions for believers in the white metal. Of course he won't. Everybody knew that before he started, Mr. Wolcott best of all. His trip was solely to justify his action of last fall in the eyes of his Colorada constituents. International bimetallism is the merest moonshine, judging from present conditions.—Courier-Journal.

Last weeks issue of The Chronicle announces that Mr. C. C. DuBose has leased that paper to his brother Mr. H. C. DuBose, who will hereafter be its sole editor and manager. The Sentinel wishes The Chronicle success under its new management. Mr. C. C. DuBose will give his entire attention to the job department and The Sentinel predicts for him that success his talent and energy deserves.

WHAT BECAME OF THEM.

State Herald 10th inst.

News reached this city yesterday afternoon that the little town of Magline on the Louisvilld & Nashville Railroad was disturbed over the disappearance of two of its young people. A young man named Benge went for a walk Sunday afternoon with Miss Ingram, and they were last seen going toward Dogwood station, about a mile distant.

From parties who were on board the afternoon train last Sunday it was learned that the young people had boarded the train at Dogwood station. On board they met a friend and told him that they were coming to Birmingham to get married. The gentleman, wishing to assist the young people in the accomplishment of their desire, advised them to leave the train at Bessemer and come into this city over the dummy line and that by doing so they would escape any officer who might be waiting at the Birmingham depot.

The couple got off at Bessemer, as directed, but have not succeeded in getting married as yet. No license was issued to such a couple up to last night.

Although they spoke in all seriousness of their intentions of getting married the young people may have returned to their homes without having become husband and wife. At any rate, nothing has been seen of them since they left the passenger train at Bessemer Sunday afternoon.

This space is to be filled with Morgan Bros advertisement.

They were driving through the woods north of Ashby when the horse suddenly imagined itself to be scared at something and started to run. They kept it in check for a while but finally the bit broke, leaving them powerless, while the horse availed itself of the down grade to make up for lost time. Seeing thas the beast was heading toward a high rail fence Mr. Oakley jumped out and escaped with slight injuries but Mr. Hoskins was not so fortunate. He stayed with the buggy until the crash came and, after crawling out from the wreck and feeling of his anatomy, found himself the sad possessor of two broken arms and numerous bumps and bruises. Fortunately neither of the parties were seriously injured.

NOTES FROM THE A. P. I. G.

We are, in name, Industrial School Girls no longer. Our legislative body on Saturday morning, February 6, rechristened us and "Alabama Polytechnic Institute Girls" we now are. The initials are causing some merriment among the pupils.

Miss Lillie Slaton, one of our advanced pupils, was delighted by a visit from her brother, Prof, C C. Slaton of Jemison. He was accompanied by two of our worthy legislators, Rev. A. J. Hearn of Choctaw and Hon. L. H. Reynolds of Chilton. These gentlemen were greatly interested in all they saw and heard and left us greatly impressed with the future usefulness of our school. Mr. Hearn has a lovely daughter, Miss Cora, attending the school.

Rev. Herring of Calera preached at the Methodist Church Sunday night and we were honored by his presence at our opening exercises on Monday morning.

Our church folks begin to realize that our churches are too small and are casting about to remedy it.

Our president knows that the girls appreciate a good thing when they hear it from the storm of applause which greeted him after some admonitions and commendations he gave us several days since.

Miss Evans has organized a class in physiology which she will teach in connection with her class in cooking. Our president has generously donated the range for that department and the carpenters are now fitting the first floor of Lyman's Hall for that purpose. We hope to have everything in "apple pie" order in the course of a week.

Another valuable addition to our institute came this week in the form of three new pianos, two having mandolin attachments.

Miss Mamie Beck is again with us at school after an illness of several weeks.

Miss Pearl Taylor has returned from from a visit to her home at Huckabee.

Miss Christabel Mahan spent Saturday and Sunday at her home in Brierfield.

Miss Julia Finch left for her home in Selma, Tuesday. We wish her a pleasant visit and a speedy return.

Miss Regina Roswald left for her home in Montgomery, Monday. We ere sorry to lose Regina from our school for she is a bright and beautiful girl.

Miss Kate Owen, a pupil from Centerville who is displaying a wonderful talent in art, is again with us after an absence of three weeks.

Capt. Reynolds, Mrs. Babb and Misses Lee, Bush, Crumpton, Dale and Jackson went to Birmingham Monday evening to attend a concert at which Camilla Urso performed. They are all loud in their praises of the great artist. The president says he was obliged to go along on the same principle that parents go to the circuses.

Miss Ethel Bush has left for her home in Mobile. We hope to see Ethel back soon,

We notice in the Selma papers that Mrs. Ruth McEnery Stewart is a visitor in that city. We are sorry she cannot visit us since she is so near, for it must be a great treat to hear this noted Southern writer lecture.

Mr. Russell, the photographer, came up and took a picture of the entire school, Wednesday. Almost every girl was there, decked out in their new uniforms with Oxford caps and white tassels, all looking their very prettiest.

We girls are jubilant over a trip to Birmingham which our president has said we shall have in the near future. We intend visiting all the places of interest around the city, especially Howard College and the Athenaeum.

Visitations to the school are numerous and the president, faculty and pupils always give them a warm welcome. We hope soon to be honored by a visit from the editors of THE NEWS. The editor-in-chief, we learn, once taught a school in one of our buildings, now devoted to dressmaking, art and scientific cooking and household arts. Come and see us.

In a case in court a New York woman alleged as one of her complaints against her husband that he could not be kept from washing the dishes and doing the other work about the house contrary to her wishes. Her protests angered him to such an extent that he assaulted her, and he was put under bonds to keep the peace. From this it would appear that the New York man would make an ideal helpmeet for a woman who devotes her time to politics and the uplifting of the masses.

NEW AND IMPORTANT DETAILS OF FEMININE DRESS.

A Promenade Costume of Green Broadcloth Which Is Fanciful In Design—Evening Wraps Trimmed With Fur.

IN the double-column illustration a promenade costume is shown of green broadcloth trimmed with fancy black and gold braid; stylish bolero's opening upon a high corsage of black satin, above which is a vest of pretty plaided silk crossing diagonally over the bust, the right front overlapping the left and showing a tiny V-shade or enpiecement, also of black satin, corresponding with the close-standing band and fashionable Medici collar.

Although fanciful in design says May Manton, the bodice is simple in construction. The fronts are arranged over glove-fitting lining fronts, that close through the centre. The small V-shaped piece at the neck closes at the left side underneath the diagonally crossed vest, which also closes on the left side invisibly with the high corsage.

The back of the waist is also mounted upon a fitted lining; smooth underarm gores separating the fronts from the back. The bolero, stylishly pointed at the fronts, is provided with oblong fanciful revers. The sleeves, of modified dimensions, are completed at the wrists by overlapping pointed cuffs.

The skirt fully emphasizes the latest innovation representing the new bell skirt. It is cut with circular fronts and sides, while the back is gored and arranged at the top in plaits turning towards the centre-back in fan shape. The lower edge has three rows of braid; similar braid being carried down the seams of the front gore to form deep pointed tabs. The free edges of the bolero and cuffs are also outlined with braid.

To make this waist for a lady in the medium size will require two and one-half yards of forty-four-inch wide material.

FUR-LINED CLOAK OF SATIN-FACED CLOTH.

exceedingly effective and inexpensive. One exquisite model seen was of bengaline in deep dull red. The lining was of maize brocade, showing a ground of tha faintest shade of green interwoven with flowers in the same warm tint of red. The garment was cut in the three-quarter length.

To make this cloak for a lady in the medium size will require three and three-quarter yards of forty-four-inch wide material.

STYLISH SLEEVES.

Sleeves are one of the most important details of dress at present, the variation being more noticable in them than in any other part of the toilette. No. 1 is a popular design adapted to all manner of weaves and textures. In the present instance the material chosen was oris purple cloth. The shaping is effected with smooth under and full upper portion over fitted linings, so arranged as to flare stylishly above the elbow, the adjustment below being close. The wrists, completed by a circular cuff, may be plainly finished if preferred.

No. 2, developed in petunia glace silk, presents a snug fit from above the elbow to the wrist, which has a point extending over the hand in Venetian style. The puff is a continuation of the upper portion of the sleeve with the fullness of moderate dimension arranged on the front seam in deep plaits and on the back seam in close gathers. All seasonable fabrics will develop by either of these models. New sleeves in last year's bodice means a wonderful transformation. With the aid of a well-fitting pattern old-fashioned sleeves may be readily modified. To make these sleeves for a lady in the medium size it will require one and three-eighths yards for No. 1 design, and one and five-eighths yards for No. 2 design, of forty-four-inch material.

LADIES' LONG CLOAK.

An opera and concert wrap of amethyst satin-faced cloth, lined with chine silk and trimmed with white Thibet fur, is shown herewith. The garment, enveloping the entire figure, is circular in shape and has a centre-back seam; it fits the figure smoothly at the top by means of the small darts on each shoulder, expanding below to fall in soft rippling flutes. A noticeable feature is the stylish hood of unique shaping that falls deeply across the back and shoulders. It is lined with chine silk and gathers at the outer edge to form a pretty frill. Its advantages are manifold, being useful as well as ornamental, as it can be thrown over the head when walking to or from the carriage, thus insuring protection from draughts.

About the neck is a high flaring collar of the fur, its outer edge forming the fashionable flare according to the present mode. The closing may be effected invisibly through the centre-front with cloak hooks and loops, or the wrap thrown carelessly across the shoulders, displaying the handsome gown beneath. Perforated lines in our pattern give a choice to the wearer of either a three-quarter or full length wrap.

The mode is adapted to cloth, velour, silk, satin, bengaline or brocade in evening tints, while ermine, mouffion or llama will serve as decoration. A pretty lining of bright-hued silk is almost indispensable. When a question of economy arises, however, the garment can be lined with merino, cashmere or albatross that can be had in exquisite shades of lilac, cornflower blue, green or pink. Dove-gray cashmere lined with rose-pink would be Keeping a Weathercock.

Old Bartle was a perfect example of the type which sees only the poorest and meanest sides of life and society, and one of his friends, a blacksmith with a quaint humor, thus accounts, in a conversation with the squire of the English village in which both men lived, for Bartle's idiosyncrasies:

"It's my belief, squire," said Samson, "that there old chap Bartle have a-swallowed the east wind, and it haven't agreed with un."

"Swallowed the east wind?" said the squire. "Why so, Samson?"

"Why, how else could he go on as he do? From morning to night, from one week's end to another, it's nothing but grumble, fidget and growl.

"First it's the dreadful accidents, the fires and the murders; then it's the fever and riots in Ireland; the paupers, the jails and the strikes. Everything's going wrong, and there's no good news anywhere.

"Why bless 'e, he come into my forge the other morning, and what's he do but begin foragin 'about among my tools and putting them to rights—'making 'em tidy,' he says—and upsetting things to that degree that every bit of fire went out of the coals and put me all of a cold sweat.

"'Be off, Bartle!' I says at last. 'Get away out into the sunshine there, and take a good drink of that, and see if it can't clear all them cobwebs out of your brains.' And with that, squire, away he goes out of the place like a mad March hare!"

"Well done, Samson!" said the squire; "well done! If he would but take your advice, that wretched old croaker would be a different man in a month. Now he is nothing but a nuisance to himself and all his neighbors. Good-night, Samson. How's the wind?"

"West, sir—west to everybody in the place but old Bartle. But he keeps his own weathercock, he do, and it's nothin' but east-by-northeast and dirty weather. It's a pity such people was ever born."

Statues.

To the uninitiated it is always a puzzle to know how a bronze or marble statue is made. The natural impression is that the sculptor, armed with mallet and chisel, chips his conception from a huge block of stone after modeling it in clay.

Such was the method of Michael Angelo, but to-day another manner prevails. The sculptor having modeled his figure most carefully, a plaster cast is taken. In the meantime, skilled mechanics have prepared a block of marble.

The plaster cast is placed beside this block and used as a model, the stonecutters copying point by point, measuring the cast with square, rule, and callipers.

The cutting goes on until a general outline of the statue is attained, when a skilled artisan, specially trained, takes it in hand, making a most faithful copy of the model under the sculptor's personal superintendence and direction.

When his work is completed, it only remains for the artist to give the finishing touches, a line here, an indentation there, bringing the statue into nearer realization with his conception.

A DECADE OF AGONY.

A Young Lady of East Syracuse Tells Her Story.

From the Standard, Syracuse, N. Y.

Miss Rosamond Ash, who resides with her father, Mr. C. S. Ash, on Manlius Street, Syracuse, forwards the following testimonial to the virtues of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and account of her sufferings, which is startlingly interesting:

MANLIUS STREET, SYRACUSE, N. Y.,
August 16, 1896.

"For the past ten years I have been a fearful sufferer from the most painful type of inflammatory rheumatism, which would make its appearance on the least possible provocation. Winter was when I suffered the worst, and it generally attacked me from my hips down, and I had to go to bed. While these attacks lasted, if anyone touched the bed even, I would scream with pain, as the least contact was unbearable, for every joint and every muscle gave me excruciating agony.

"While I was in this terrible condition, my pastor, Rev. Mr. Campbell, came to visit me, and told me he knew of a case very similar to mine that had been entirely cured by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and advised me to try them, as the physicians were not doing me any good. On this my father bought me two boxes, which I took according to directions, and I began to recover, getting stronger every day. I kept on with Dr. Williams' remedy until I had taken two dozen boxes, and by that time every trace of rheumatism was gone, and I am now as well as ever I was.

"If you have any doubts as to my statement, I refer you for its confirmation to Rev. Mr. Campbell, of Hastings, and Mr. Server, of Hastings, the latter being Superintendent of the Methodist Sunday School, who know all of the facts surrounding my extraordinary recovery. Pink Pills saved my life and gave me health and strength, and we will never be without them in our house.

(Signed) "ROSAMOND ASH.
"Manlius Street, East Syracuse, N. Y."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Hard to Please.

A man was taking his usual dose of pork and beans in a restaurant at Olympia and found two silver dimes in the beans. Calling the waiter, he howled out in an impatient manner:

"Here, what kind of a lay-out is this? I have found twenty cents in my beans!"

"Well, you are hard to please," replied the waiter. "Yesterday you growled about not having any change in your diet!"—Seattle Times.

"You see, to start with," said a Cleveland, Ohio, compositor, my work—that of setting type at the case—allows me little chance for exercise, and is too confining for anybody who is in the least subject to indigestion or dyspepsia. That has been my trouble for years, and I attribute the recent noticeable improvement in my physical condition to the occasional use of

I first heard of them through a fellow-workman who, on hearing my tale of woe, one day offered me a Tabule and said he would guarantee it to act on the liver. I took it under protest, but was surprised with the result. It was gentle but effective, and since then I have gradually noted an entire change in the working of my system, and I think that Ripans Tabules are the best remedy for liver and stomach troubles this side of anywhere. They are really in my case a substitute for physical exercise."

BOMBARDED THE GREEKS.

A Dose of Bomshells Given the Insurgents Around Canea

BY THE SHIPS OF THE POWERS.

British Vessels Opened the Ball, and a Hot Reception it Was That the Islanders Got.—The Greek's Loss Was Very Heavy.—King George to the Front.

London, Eng.—A dispatch from Athens, dated Sunday, to the Central News says that the fleets of the Powers bombarded the insurgent positions in the vicinity of Canea.

No details of the bombardment are given.

The dispatch adds that the Greek dispatch boat Peineios has exchanged shots with a Turkish frigate, but in this case also details are lacking, and both reports are accepted under reserve.

It is reported that 700 Greeks and a number of pieces of artillery have been landed at Kisamo Bay. A British torpedo boat stopped the Greek steamer Taurium, which was landing provisions and munitions of war at Kolymbar Bay, and escorted her to Canea.

The excitement in Athens continues without abatement, and the popular voice is loud for war if the annexation of Crete to Greece can be obtained in no other way. The populace demand that no attention be paid to the warnings and demands of the Powers, but that Greece maintain her position in the face of Europe. A vast crowd gathered this afternoon in front of the palace and repeatedly cheered the king and the royal princes, whose actions meet with the fullest approbation.

This information was quickly followed by confirmatory dispatches from Canea, saying that the admirals commanding the foreign fleets there yesterday visited Colonel Vassos, the commander of the Greek army of occupation, at his camp at Aghai. What transpired there has not been made public, but upon the return of the admirals they invited the commander of the Greek warship Narvaracos Miaoulis to visit them. The invitation was accepted, and when the commander met the admirals he was informed that an attack would be made upon the Greek troops and the Greek warship if Colonel Vassos advanced into the interior.

Subsequent to the interview, the commander, accompanied by Rear Admiral Harris, commanding the British fleet, proceeded to the camp of Colonel Vassos, who was informed as to the decision that had been arrived at by the commanding officers of the foreign fleets.

Sunday morning the insurgents in the vicinity of Canea began firing on the town, despite the warnings that had been given. The firing was continued for some time, whereupon the admirals of the foreign fleet ordered their vessels cleared for action, and soon the guns of the fleet were throwing shells into the insurgent camp. A British cruiser was the first of the warships to open fire, the vessels of the other nations following in succession. Forty shell were fired.

The forts fired blank cartridges at the Greek dispatch boat Peninicios, which had exchanged shots with a Turkish frigate. After shots had been fired by both vessels, the frigate withdrew. The German warship Kaiserin Augusta has arrived at Crete and landed marines, who will share in the foreign occupation of the own.

It has been learned that the ultimatum of the admirals to Colonel Vassos was against his attacking Canea. It apparently did not forbid him from marching into the interior of the island, where Colonel Vassos purposes to occupy several strategic points. One report states that the ultimatum declared that if the Greek troops or the insurgents approached any nearer to Canea than they were the fleets would shell them, but if they were quiet they would be permitted to land food. Colonel Vassos replied that he did not intend to attack Canea or the flags of the Powers. He would remain on the defensive unless he was attacked. Notwithstanding this assurance, fighting took place to-day on the hills to the East of the town, the combatants, who were Cretan Christians and Mussulmans only, were in plain view from the ships in the harbor.

The reply of the Mussulmans to the fire of the Christians was very feeble, and it could easily be seen that they would be compelled to abandon their positions if the Christians pressed them. Their gun practice was so very poor that it excited ridicule on board the ships. The main position of the Christians was in a hamlet on the ridge of the hills, where they had hoisted the flag of Greece. This position was about 4,000 yards from the war ships.

At half-past 4 o'clock the flagship displayed signals for the Dryad, Harrier and Revenge, and one vessel of the Italian, German and Russian squadrons to open fire on the Cretan position. The order was quickly complied with. The British vessels fired forty shells and the other vessels about thirty. The aim of the gunners was very good, and it was soon seen that the position of the insurgents was becoming untenable. In about ten minutes the Greek flag was hauled down, and as soon as it disappeared the order, "Cease firing," was given, and the guns of the fleet at once became silent. Thereupon the flag was again hoisted on its staff. The rocks in the vicinity were crowded with Cretans. The Mussulmans, emboldened by the fleet's aid, now began a a lively fusilade on the Cretans, who were engaged in removing their wounded.

The Christians were evidently dispirited by the action of the fleets, and made no attempt to return the fire. The action of the foreign warships has caused the deepest indignation here, and the supporters of the Sultan are bitterly denounced on all sides. It is declared that the Powers in upholding Moslem rule by force of arms have made a melancholy and degrading spectacle that Greece will never forget.

When the Turks learned of the approach of reinforcements of the Greeks they took position on the heights, and for three hours made a desperate defense. The Greek troops were all young men who had never seen service, but they fought with admirable courage. They drove the Turks from one position to another, and captured the towers of Ayah and Monkundra and the barracks of Lividia, which they burned.

The Moslems retreated, taking with them three cannons. The Greeks pursued them to within a mile of Canea, and then retired to Platania. The Turkish loss is unknown, but numbers of wounded were taken into Canea.

The Greeks suffered severely. Three officers were killed and one officer severely wounded.

The Athenian student corps fought beside the troops.

The Lokal Anzeiger has a dispatch from Copenhagen saying that King George, of Greece, has wired his father, the King of Denmark, that he is going to Crete to command in person the Greek troops there.

The admirals of the several fleets at Canea have decided to land guns to defend the town in the event of the Greek troops or the insurgents advancing.

Wounded Moslems in the hospitals declare that victims of the Sarakimo's massacre were offered a safe conduct to Selino, where they would be exchanged for hostages. The offer was accepted, but on the march to Selino the Christian escort and other Christians attacked and massacred them.

It is believed that the report of the massacre of 2,000 Mussulmans at Sitia is greatly exaggerated.

NEW POLITICAL PARTY

Is Wanted By the Silver Republicans. Address Issued.

Washington, D. C.—In an address of the silver Republicans of the United States, the signers declare that political parties, which are practical instruments for executing the will of the people respecting the principles and policies of government, should represent and respond to public opinion in its attitude toward the problems which the experience of the nation from time to time brings forward for solution.

For years, they assert, events have been forcing up in the country the necessity of reform in our monetary system; until to-day the most careless observer cannot fail to see that the nation is approaching a settlement of this momentous controversy through the agency of political instruments now being fashioned to its hands.

The silver Republicans, the address asserts, believe that adequate treatment of all other issues must await the correct decision of the dominant one now presented. They eulogize the party words of the party as deeds of patriotism, and they cannot follow those who have usurped the dominion of that party into shameless abandonment of the American interest and the tyranny of an alien monetary system, and they urge upon all silver Republicans and upon all citizens, upon whatsoever previous party, to take steps to perfect an organization to the end of effecting a national organization.

The signers are Senators Teller, Dubois, Cannon, Pettigrew, Mantle and Jones, of Nevada, and Representatives Towne, Hartman, Shafton, Allen, of Utah, and Wilson, of Idaho.

A YOUTHFUL SUICIDE.

Atlanta, Ga.—A special from Lawrenceville, Ga., to the Constitution says that the 12-year-old son of F. P. Jackson committed suicide at his home four miles from the town. The boy was an invalid and a great sufferer. He fastened a trace chain around his neck and to the limb of a tree. He stood on a fence and jumped off.

CRIMES AND CASUALTIES.

A Chapter of Accidents and Other Interesting Matters.

SERIOUS INDIAN TROUBLE.

Chief Pablo Attacked His Guard, and Was Killed.—Prominent Young Man Drowned—Snow Slides Cause Deaths in Colorado.—Wrecked By a Washout.—A Collision.

Nogales, Ariz.—At Elplomo, west of here, there is serious Indian trouble For three weeks, since the Government had a misunderstanding over a lot of cattle with a band of Papagoa Indians, there has been trouble with the leaders with prospects for bloodshed At the same time Governor Raymon Carral sent a new commissario of police to this station.

Carral sent for the chief of the Papagoas, known as Pablo, to settle the former difficulty. Sunday morning the chieftain entered the town with about twenty-five armed retainers. Clemente E. Hazard, the commissario, instantly arrested Pablo and put him in jail, intending to liberate the prisoner Four Indians were killed and three severely wounded.

Fearing another attack the women and children were assembled on a surrounding hill near the offices of the Mexican Mining andDeveloping Company. A courier was sent for aid and about Monday night five men arrived with twenty rifles and a supply of ammunition. When the courier left Wednesday there was much apprehension, owing to the fact that on the previous evening Chief Pablo attacked his guard, and was killed with the knife that he tried to use in escaping

PROMINENT MAN DROWNED.

George C. King, of Marion, Loses His Life at Fike's Ferry.

Selma, Ala.—George C. King, a prominent young man of Marion, was drowned at Fike's Ferry, on the Cahaba River, Sunday. He was en route from Marion to Summerfield. His aunt, Miss Jannette Sturdivant, was in the buggy with him. The boy in charge of the ferry allowed the rope to slip from his hands. The swift current carried the flat down the stream. King grabbed the chain and jumped to the bank to secure it, but tripped and fell. His head struck the boat and he rolled beneath it. The horses became unruly, but the lady held on to them. She saw King rise at the turn as the boat passed rapidly away. She called to him, but no response came.

The body was recovered a mile below. The funeral occurred at Marion Monday morning. The business houses closed, and the Circuit Court adjourned during the services. The town is in grief. Deceased was the son of Charles King. His mother is prostrated and in a serious condition.

SNOW SLIDES

Cause Death and Suffering in Colorado.—Narrow Escapes.

St. Louis, Mo.—Snow slides have wrought much damage, and at least two lives were lost in the past twenty-four hours, says a Monday's dispatch from Denver, Col.

Mail Carrier E. J. Bell, who was supposed to be dead, has saved himself, and about the only damage apparent, excepting his weak condition, are a few frozen toes. Bell was caught in a slide under about twenty-five feet of snow. Rescuing parties took off about fifteen feet directly over him and gave him up for dead. He lay unconscious until about 8 o'clock. When his senses returned he heard water trickling. The water had brought him aid and saved his life. He dug to the stream and then to the surface. Then he walked three miles to the nearest house and fell unconscious as soon as he realized he was saved.

James Petty was carried over a precipice with a pack train Saturday, most of the burros being killed and himself only slightly injured.

A snow slide caught the cabin of the Cleopartra Mine, near Pitkin, killing Marvin Mertley and injuring his three partners. Mertley's relatives live in Pennsylvania.

At Ophir, Col., a snow slide demolished the railroad station and twelve freight cars. The station agent and his wife were in the building at the time, eating dinner. Timbers fell in such a shape that the man was but slightly hurt and his wife did not receive a single bruise. About as rapidly as the roads have been opened they have been closed by the slides

WRECKED BY A WASHOUT.

One Death and the Injury of Three Others the Result.

Washington, D. C.—The engine and express, mail and baggage car of train No. 1, Chesapeake & Ohio Railway, were derailed at Glen Station, Ky., Monday morning by running into a washout, caused be extremely heavy rains. No damage was done to the sleeping cars. Mr. Stout, a railway employe, was killed and three passengers in the combination car were slightly bruised.

A NUMBER WERE INJURED.

A Wreck Caused By a Collision with an Extending Car.

MARK HANNA WINS.

Governor Bushnell Says That He Will Appoint Him.

Columbus, Ohio.—Governor Bushnell has furnished the following to the Southern Associated Press:

"It has been my intention to make no announcement in relation to the action I would take in the matter of the appointment to fill the prespective vacancy in the Ohio representation in the United Sates Senate until the vacancy actually existed. But on account of the manifest interest of the people and their desire to know what will be done, I deem it best now to make the following statement:

"When Senator Sherman resigns to enter the Cabinet of President McKinley I will appoint to succeed him Hon. Marcus A. Hanna, of Cuyahoga County, to serve until his successor is chosen by the Seventy-third General Assembly of the State. I trust this action will meet with the approval of the people.

ASA S. BUSHNELL."

AN ATLANTA SENSATION.

Otis Smith, Prominent in Social Circles, Short Several Thousand.

Atlanta, Ga.—Otis Smith, a young man, prominent in social circles here, has been under arrest in a private office on South Broad street for three days. He is short in his accounts. The estimates of his shortages range as high as $12,000. He is cashier of the Georgia Security and Banking Company and is a member of the firm of H. L. English & Co. He has admitted being short $2,500 to the Security and Banking Company. This is not a regular banking institution. Its funds are invested in real estate, and the money which Smith appropriated was interest on purchase notes. He also touched H. L. English & Co., and H. L. English individually, and the Brooks Lumber Company, of which he is secretary. It is charged that he got several hundred dollars from the Atlanta Traction Company a few years ago when he was bookkeeper. A warrant was issued against him to-day charging him with embezzlement.

WOMEN WIN.

Can Hold any Elective Office in Missouri Unless Barred.

Kansas City, Mo.—Division No. 1 of the Missouri Supreme Court Monday rendered a decision, the effect of which is to open to women nearly all the elective county and State offices in Missouri.

The decision was in the case of the State vs. F. P. Hostetter, Clerk of the St. Clair County Court. Mr. Hostetter was appointed to fill an unexpired term, and at the next election Mrs Maggie Wheeler was elected to succeed him. He refused to surrender the office on the ground that women were ineligible. The State sued to oust him, and by the decision succeeded.

The court held in this decision that woman is eligible to hold any elective office in the State which is not specifically barred against her by statute.

LEE DENIES IT.

Havana, Cuba.—The report that United States Consul-General Fitzhugh Lee has requested his government to send a warship to enforce his demands in regard to the killing of Ruiz and the arrest of Scott, both American citizens, is denied by General Lee.

The case of Scott will be the subject of an interview between Consul-General Lee and the Marquis Ahumada, acting Captain-General, to-day, when General Lee will demand Scott's release, or at least that he be freed from state of incommunicado in which he is now placed.

SHOT IN THE LEG.

An Altercation Between Two Montgomery Men in a Hotel.

Montgomery, Ala.—In an altercation in the Galates Hotel, Monday night, Howard Metcalf shot and painfully wounded in the upper part of the leg, James D. Strippling, a well-known stock broker. The ball which buried itself in Stripling's leg first penetrated Metcalf's left hand. Neither wound is serious. Both men were arrested.

The fight is said to have resulted over a wager.

THE WAR IS OVER.

The Cretan Difficulties are Settled By Granting Autonomy.

THE POWERS TO APPROVE.

The Governor Appointed By the Porte. A Demand on Greece to Vacate the Island.—This the Greeks Consent to Do.—A Summary of the Situation According to Continental Dispatches.

Constantinople, Turkey.—It is announced here that the Cretan difficulties have been setteled upon a basis of autonomy for the island, the Porte nominating the Governor of Crete under assent and approval of the Powers.

In view of the possibility that Greece will oppose such arrangements, large quantities of munitions of war are being hurried to the Greek frontier and the Turkish troops there are being rapidly reinforced.

DEMAND ON GREECE.

Vienna.—According to dispatches received here from Athens Tuesday morning, the representatives of the Powers made a demand upon the Government of Greece for the withdrawal of the Greek troops from the island of Crete.

It was the intention of Emperor Francis Joseph to have started for Cape Martin for a season of recreation yesterday, but in view of the still unsettled state of affairs in Crete, the Emperor has deferred his departure until next Sunday.

GREECE MUST VACATE.

Paris.—The Gaulois asserts that the Powers have called upon Greece to vacate Crete within twenty-four hours, and that Greece has consented to do so, provided that autonomy of the island is guaranteed.

Crete.—The foreign Consuls have pursuaded the Moslems and Christian combatants in the Selinos district to agree to a week's armistice.

NATURAL GAS

By Exploding Shatters a Newspaper Office and Injures Five People.

Chicago, Ill.—A severe explosion of natural gas at 7 o'clock Saturday morning in the engine room of the Chicago Chronicle, at 164 and 166 Washington street, badly shattered the basement and injured five persons, some of them seriously. Pipes leading from the street sprung a leak and the explosion was caused by ignition from the electric light wires.

John McMillan, foreman of the press room, was the most seriously injured and his recovery is doubtful. He was blown against a wall and badly burned. One arm was so badly crushed that it will probably have to be amputated.

Larry Hargrove, the engineer, was blown thirty feet, and badly injured internally.

John Stenger, pressman, was seriously burned about the face.

John Wheeler, driver for Case & Martin, who was standing in front of the Chronicle Office, was blown half way across the street and Charles Williams, who was standing on the sidewalk over the gas pipe, was blown as high as the second-story of the building and badly injured.

Matthew Beines, mailer, was badly burned.

A few minutes after the explosion flames leaped through the basement floors and consumed the business office and destroyed the Western Union Telegraph Company's branch office, adjoining.

All the wires leading to the office, including the wires of the United-Associated Presses, were broken. The editorial rooms of the Chronicle were flooded by water and badly damaged by smoke. The force of the shock from the explosion broke every plate glass window in the building and tore up the sidewalk in front of the office. The wall separating the press room of the Chronicle from the Journal was blown down, and the water from the engines flooded the presses and damaged the large stock of paper.

It is difficult to ascertain the exact losses, as the firemen and police will not allow reporters to enter the building, owing to the frequent explosions of gas in the basement. Horatio Seymour, publisher of the Chronicle, estimates the damage at $10,000.

SUCCESSFUL JAIL DELIVERY.

Oneonta, Ala.—Four prisoners broke jail here Sunday night by filing the bars of the cells in two and picking a hole in the brick wall. Robert McMurray, assault to murder; Tim Fortner, horse stealing; Pink Livingston, assault to murder; Anderton, larceny, are the names of the escapes.

The accident occurred about noon.

—The people in the vicinity of Lincoln, Talladega County, are very much aroused over the total stock law measure recently passed by the Legislature. They have "whereased and resolved" and passed, almost unanimously, the "nullification act." The greatest trouble arises from the fact that the stock law takes immediate effect. If enforced it would cause many farmers to lose a part of their stock, as they have no pastures and no time to make any, and the stock is not fat enough for market. Many farmers in favor of the law have decided to ignore it for the present year for the sake of their neighbors, so the fences will remain up for the larger part of beat 1.

—Mr. Thomas H. Clark, of Montgomery, who has been in Washington recently, looking after his contest for a seat in the Fifty-fifth Congress in place of Hon. Jesse F. Stallings, informed the Alabama members Friday that he had abandoned the contest.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

Montgomery Advertiser, 20th inst:

The General Assembly has adjourned and it was very hard to find a member in the city yesterday.

Among the most important general laws that were passed are the tax commission, the oil and mine inspecting laws, the revenue law amendments, the tax rate, the regulation of insurance business in the state, the prohibition of combinations in rates, the abolishment of the slot Machines, the prohibiting of pools and the gambling devises of all kinds, and the last, but not least, is the exemption to capital, not exceeding fifty thousand dollars, invested in the future in the manufacture of cotton in the state.

Among the most important general bills that failed are the calling of a constitutional convention, to give arbitrary powers to the railroad commission, to take the convicts out of the mines and work them on state account, to abolish the lease system, to repeal the Sayre election law, the abolishment of bucket shops and the prohibition of trusts.

The Sayre election law was left as it existed before the meeting of the General Assembly, as was the convict law, The House repealed the Sayre law and reenacted the old law of 1886, but the Senate committee would not have it. The Senate passed Mr. Cunningham's convict bill working by the state, and abolishing the lease system, but the Conference Committee could not agree, and it failed at the last moment,

There were a large number of local bills left on the calendar of both houses, while the number of local bills passed is appalling, and leads to the conclusion that something must be done to take this local legislation out of the assembly altogether. Whenever we can have a constitutional convention this will be done.

Prospectors from the North and Northwest are making their appearance every few days in this section. These gentlemen, generally are looking for locations for locating colonies and mostly want several thousand acres of land in a body. There is plenty of land in Alabama advantageously situated for colonizing that can be secured at a low figure and if these gentlemen desiring to establish colonies will bring the right sort of people our citizens will be glad to welcome them and to encourage their enterprises in this direction.

Alabama is a great state. Her future is equally as bright as any state in the Union. It is of recent years that the merits of Alabama have been known to the world. Her unlimited wealth in ores was not even known to her own people. Her healthy climate and vast farming territory had not achieved its present popularity, The glad tidings has gone out, and the state, with its matchless wealth, is known to the world.—Goodwater Advocate.

There was a divorce case tried in North Dakota last week before a jury composed of six men and six women. It resulted in a mistrial—the jury dividing six against six. They wrestled with the case three days with the result as stated. It is said that two marriages will result among the jurymen and women from their lengthened and unsuccessful efforts to sever the marital bonds of a couple that had concluded that marriage was a failure.—Selma Times

The legislature at its recent session exempted cotton mills in Alabama from taxation for a term of ten years. A wise law.

A KIND WORD FOR THE SOU. RAILWAY.

Montevallo, Feb. 22, 1897.

Editor State Herald.

Having noticed the correspondence between Prof. J. H. Phillips, superintendent of the public schools and Mr. James Weatherly, attorney for the Southern Railway, I desire space in your columns to add a word, and throw some light on the attitude of this corporation in its dealings with the educational institutions of the south.

At the outset I wish to state that I neither uphold the action of the Southern railway in refusing to pay the tax imposed upon it by the statutes of the state nor do I condemn the efforts of Dr. Phillips and others in attempting to have this tax paid. I know nothing of the merits of the subject, but having brothers, sisters, daughters and friends whose interests would be effected by the closing of the public schools, my sympathy would naturally lie with the side represented by Dr. Phillips. Be this as it may, however, I cannot allow the illiberality of the Southern to be questioned or criticised, without a word in its defense.

Last spring while in Washington, endeavoring to secure the passage of a bill through congress to donate some public land to the Girls' Industrial School at this place, I called, in company with Capt. E. W. Booker, on Mr. W. H. Baldwin, the second vice-president of this road, and gave him a full statement of the condition, of this school, and the limited means that we had at our command. I told him of the impoverished condition of our state and the great good such an institution as ours would accomplish. After a patient hearing he asked me what I wanted. I told him our greatest need was an endowment and good and sufficient buildings. He then asked me what I wanted him to do. I told him I wanted him to go before the public lands' committee with us and urge the favorable report of our bill, and then I wanted him to give us free transportation on all the material used in the construction of our buildings. With the most gracious and magnanimous spirit he replied, "Gentlemen, you shall have all you wish. I will go with you at any time before the committee and I will instruct our traffic manager to move all your building material on our line free of charge." The next day, according to arrangement, we called for Mr. Baldwin and took him to the capitol where he made a most excellent representation of our cause, and before we left the room a favorable report had been written on the bill. Six months elapsed before our building begun and some questioned the matter as to whether the Southern would stand to its promise, Mr. Baldwin, in the meanwhile, having resigned his position. On presenting the question, however, to Mr. W. W. Findley, who had taken Mr. Baldwin's place, instructions were immediately given to freight our material free from all points that we desired and at the close of the year the benefits we derived amounted to over $2000. Now I present these facts, not to prejudice the case in point between the schools of Birmingham and the Southern railway, but to show that corporations do have the interests of the people at heart, public opinion to the contrary notwithstanding.

H. C. REYNOLDS,
President Alabama Polytechnic Institute for Girls, formerly the Girls' Industrial School.

The Legislature adjourned on last Thursday night and the lawmakers have all returned to their homes.

The county of Montgomery is to be congratulated on the manner in which Judge Winter and Hon. A. D. Sayre, contestants for the City Judgeship, have conducted affairs. There is to be no unseemly wrangling, double courts and other vexations. The matter will no doubt be soon decided by the courts as the question rests upon the construction of a statute and a constitutional provision.—Advertiser.

Prof. J. J. Nash, of the Boys' High School of this place, is scheduled to deliver an address next Friday morning on "The Importance of Method in Early Training," before the Teachers' Institute which is to be held at Columbiana next Friday and Saturday.

A. J. Lee, our handsome station agent, is the proud possessor of a new bicycle which he received Wednesday evening. Dr. Givhan will be his constant attendant on all his tours and be in readiness to sew up the bruises and broken bones acquired by the enthusiastic cyclist.

The post office fight at this place, while still in its infancy, is beginning to attract some attention. So far, a democrat, a republican, a pop and a citizen of Calera are the only participants in the race but there are undoubtedly a few hundred more modest patriots in the vicinity waiting to be forced in by admiring friends.

We have been notified by the adjutant of Howard College that cadets Frank H. Farrington, Henry W. Fancher and J. L. Fancher, of this place, have been placed on the honor roll of that institution for the six weeks ending February 15. This will doubtless be gratifying intelligence to the numerous friends of the young men.

DOGWOOD ITEMS.

Quite a crowd from this place attended church at Ebenezer Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Newton of Montevallo spent Sabbath with relatives here.

James Lacey of Maylene was in town the fore part of the week on business.

W. E. Harrison went over to Blocton and Belle Allen this week to collect taxes for Shelby county.

Will Harper and James Harrison paid the "city" of Calera a flying visit one day last week.

Gallant Jinks stepped up to Dogwood and bought a fine grey horse one day this week.

T. F. Harrison is working the old Harrison mine. It will only be a short time until he will open up with a full force of men. B. Y. H.

ACCIDENTALLY SHOT.

From Shelby Sentinel.

On last Saturday morning while Billy Bowden and little Jimmie Graham, of this place, were out rabbit hunting near the residence of Mrs. M. Bowden, an unfortunate accident happened. A rabbit was run from cover and as it ran off Billy Bowden threw up his gun and fired. Unfortunately little Jimmie Graham was in range of his gun at the time and ten or twelve feet away. Some shot struck him on the right cheek entering from the rear and one penetrated the back of his head.

Physicians were summoned at once and every attention given him. The wounds while very painful however proved to be not very serious, though his face may be considerably scarred for a time the indications are that he will soon fully recover from the effects. The escape was a narrow one. Had his position been a few inches further to the right the whole load would have entered his head and the result would probably been fatal; as it was he received only a few scattering shot.

OHIO CONGRESSMAN'S IDEA.

Pennsylvania Avenue Lined With Skeleton Stands Preparatory for Accommodating the Inaugural Visitors.

NATIONAL CONGRESS OF MOTHERS.

Sundry Civil Amendments.—The Senate Committee Adds a Million For Luck.—Mark Hanna and the Senatorship.—Another Battleship.—Minor Items.

Washington. — (Special Correspondence.)—Representative Beach, of Ohio, made a statement to the House Committee on Foreign Affairs today in explanation of a resolution introduced by him for securing a uniform standard of value in commerce by the use of international coins. The measure is particularly designed to bring about closer trade relations between the United States and other countries of this hemisphere and the East. It requests the President to begin negotiations with China, Japan, the republics and colonies of the American Hemisphere, Canada and the Hawaiian Islands, for the purpose of securing a uniform standard of value. All of the countries mentioned in the resolution are silver-using countries, and Mr. Beach said that one result of his project, if it succeeded, would be to increase the demand for American silver. The greatest hindrance to trade with neighboring nations was the system of exchange through London. These international coins would take the place of London exchange. They would not be adopted for general circulation in the countries which might adopt them, nor need they be made legal tender in those countries. Silver would be the material best adapted for the coins, and its present and prospective value should be taken into consideration in adopting such a coinage.

The Senate Committeee on Commerce has agreed to report favorably a number of amendments to the sundry civil appropriation bill providing for improvements to rivers and harbors, including the following $273,000 to complete the improvement of the Great Kanawha river. West Virginia; $318,050 for dredging a channel in Mare Island strait to enable all classes of vessels to reach the naval establishment of Mare Island; improving harbor at Oakland, Cal., $360,577; $200,000 for a steam revenue cutter with headquarters at New York; $125,000 for vessel for coast survey purposes in Alaskan waters; $85,000 for steam tender for construction and repair duty in third lighthouse district; $130,000 for dredge boat at Sabine Pass Tex.

An amendment was agreed to directing the Secretary of War to designate a board of five engineers of the army to investigate the question of movable dams and to recommend the best type for various conditions of the service. All these amendments go to the Committee on Appropriations for consideration and final report.

Pennsylvania avenue is lined at every available point with the skeleton supports of the grand stands that are being built to hold the thousands who will view the inaugural parade on March 4. At each of the triangles along the avenue which mark the intersections of the streets stands are being erected by the parties who bid successfully for the privileges and the passer-by is informed by large placards that he may purchase coupon tickets for seats in the stands. Prices will range from $1 up to $4 and $5. The President's reviewing stand is being erected immediately in front of the White House and is shaping into a very elaborate and rather ornamental structure. The decorations will be profuse and patriotic. Across the street from the President's stand and extending the full length of Lafayette Square another stand is being built. Next to the one that Mr. McKinley will occupy: this will be the most desirable in the city. The parade appears at its best when passing the White House. The young man who bid successfully for the Lafayette Square location is an employe in the Treasury Department and counts upon making at least $2,000 on March 4. Mark Hanna has purchased 250 seats on this stand.

In addition to the stands which are being erected each window and point of vantage along the avenue has been or will be rented for reviewing purposes. At frequent intervals the passerby is met with large signs, which read: "Seats in this window for the parade $5. See plat inside." In many instances the prices are lower. A rather remarkable fact is that vacant rooms on the avenue, ordinarily for rent, can not be rented now at all without reserving to the owner their use on the 4th of March, and in many cases the owners will refuse absolutely to consider propositions to rent until after the inauguration. Every possible source of revenue is being prepared for untilization on that occasion.

* * *

Mark A. Hanna is giving himself far less concern about the question of his entering the Senate to succeed Mr. Sherman than are the newspaper correspondents who speculate upon political possibilites. The quiet, undisturbed deportment of Mark Hanna is the natural sequence to absolute confidence such as the Republican national chairman is believed to enjoy. Among many politicians here there is firm belief that Mr. Hanna will enter the Senate as surely as he lives to see the entrance of Senator Sherman into the Cabinet. The phase of the case upon which this faith is based is interesting and has not been incorporated in the press so far.

The navy appropriation bill for the next fiscal year has been practically completed by the House Committee on naval affairs. The bill carries about $33,000,000 which is about $3,000,000 more than the appropriation for the current year. The committe has decied to put in the bill the new battleship, of the first-class, recomended by the sub-committee. It is to cost, including the hull, armor and machinery, not more than $3,750,000.

The National Congress of Mothers, which holds its first session in this city, has outgrowin the expectations of its most sanguine promoters by the number of delegates in attendance, the importance of its discussions and the interest manifested in its proceedings. Some of the lady promoters, who recently estimated the probable attendance at 200 or 300 ladies, were overwehlmed by the presence of 1,800 or more at the first day's session, with constant accessions. This neccessitated a sudden and complete change of plans for the housing of the congress and conducting its exercises.

The United States Civil Service Commission will hold an examination at the postoffice in Chicago, on Mar. 24th, to obtain elegibles to the position of Assistant Printer in the printing office of the railway mail service in that city. Applicants will be given practical questions relating to the the trade, and in addition they will be given a light examination in spelling, letter-writing, penmanship, arithmetic and copying from plain copy. The position pays well, and some good printer will get a good place.

A WOMAN'S CRIME.

Emma Griffin Must Face the Grand Jury On a Serious Charge.

Birmingham, Ala.—Emma Griffin, the young white woman who was arrested a few days ago on a charge of arson, it being alleged she set fire to her husband's room, in a small house on the South side, was given a preliminary hearing before Judge Feagin in the Inferior Criminal Court. The evidence went to show that she had a falling out with her husband and that she had made threats that she would burn up her things. Fire was discovered in the room, and but for the prompt arrival of the Fire Department the entire building would have been consumed. Judge Feagin bound her over to await the action of the next term of the Grand Jury, and fixed her bond at $200.

HAD BEEN TO THE RACES.

A Rotund Purse Maddened Him, and Huffman Made a Bad Break.

Nashville, Tenn.—A bold attempt to rob from the person was tried in the union railway station at 7 o'clock Saturday morning. Mrs. J. C. Symmes, wife of the private secretary of Ed Baxter, general attorney for the Southern Railroad, while about to board the train, discovered a man just as he had taken her pocketbook containing diamonds worth $400 and a roll of bills. She notified her husband, who gave chase, caught the thief, and recovered the pocketbook. The thief gave his name as D. F. Huffman, race horse man, and had reached this city only half an hour before the attempt to rob was made. He claims to be from New Orleans, and being dead broke he could not resist the temptation.

WRECK ON THE MIDLAND.

Engineer Adams Had His Arm Broken and Face Badly Bruised.

Troy, Ala.—A wreck occurred on the Alabama Midland at Shell Shore, near this city at 4 o'clock Monday morning. The train consisted of an engine and caboose. The "bald," or middle, drive-wheel twisted off and ran into an embankment.

Engineer Adams had his arm broken and his face badly bruised. The train ran until it stopped of its own accord about a quarter of a mile from where the wheel left the engine. The fast mail came about two hours later and put the dead engine into a side track.

The physicians of Santa Clara County, California, have come to the conclusion that lodge work is derogatory to the profession, and have pledged themselves that for three years they will not render medical or surgical services at a stipulated fee per capita. The agreement does not apply to hospitals nor purely public charitable institutions.

Thirty-eight States have already combined their courts of law and equity. Tennessee clings to the antiquated system that they have abolished, however, and consequently is put to an expense of over twice as much as either Georgia or North Carolina for the salaries of judges alone, not to speak of the extra cost of the clerks who are necessary for the additional judges. And each legislature increases the number of judicial officers.

The Charleston News and Courier says that South Carolina is in better financial condition than at any time since the war. The merchants have made good collections, the manufacturing enterprises are in a healthy condition, the farmers having generally paid all debts contracted in making the last crop, and they discharged a great deal of their past indebtedness. There has been a great falling off in the purchase of farm supplies from outside resources, the cribs and smoke houses are better filled than they have been in years, and hog and hominy are triumphant.

Governor Leedy, the new Executive of Kansas, had a unique invitation to supper recently, which he has accepted. It was from a small boy whom two years ago Mr. Leedy, then a Senator, had befriended. The youngster sold papers, but he was so small that the other newsboys all reached the Capitol with the evening newspapers before he could get there. The Senator saw him and asked why he let them beat him. The boy, who was out of breath, replied that he guessed his legs weren't long enough, and the Senator said he would lengthen them by taking him inside the chamber, which he did, and the lad's success was assured.

Governor Jones, of Arkansas, has approved a bill to require railroads to carry bicycles as baggage.

SATISFIED SISTERS.

WHAT POSTPONED THE TRIP TO HOT SPRINGS.

From the Tribune, Cullman, Ala.

Two well known ladies of Holly Pond, Cullman County, Alabama, are the Misses H. A. and M. F. Shepard, and they are held in the highest esteem.

Two years ago, Miss M. F. Shepard, was stricken with terrible sickness, from which she suffered long. The history of the case is so interesting that we publish the lady's own version as it is every way worthy of perusal:

"Two years ago last February, I was stricken with a terrible pain around my heart, which prostrated me for hours, and from then on I grew weaker until spring, when from impaired circulation and impoverishment of the blood, a stomach difficulty set in, bloating my body fearfully. Of course I was confined to my bed and to add to my sorrows a general attack of rheumatism followed, so that motion was painful, and locomotion impossible.

"Several physicians were consulted but they gave me no relief, until the last came, who so helped my stomach difficulty, that after several months I was able to sit up. The rheumatism, however, stubbornly stayed, and I was advised that my only hope was the Hot Springs of Arkansas. I was preparing to make the journey, when I was recommended to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

"During my illness, I had taken two boxes of these self same pills, but not in the way recommended, as I was taking other remedies. Now though, I determined to try them properly, as I was no longer under a physician's care, and could do as I pleased, and my sister, Miss H. A. Shepard, at my request, ordered six boxes of Pink Pills for me, as I could not leave the house and could only hobble with the aid of crutches.

"By the time I had finished the pills, I had given up crutches, though I was still almost a skeleton from the ordeal through which I had passed. I am now quite fleshy, and the only agent that has caused the change is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, for I used no other medicine. My right hand is still drawn so that I can only use the thumb and first finger, and my back is still lame, but I am in better health than for many years. None of my friends expected me to live, and at one time it was feared my reason was giving way. I do not know how to pay a sufficiently high tribute to Dr. Williams' medicine. It is, I believe, the grandest blood medicine that was ever prepared.

"Now, having stated my own case, let me refer to my sister, Miss H. A. Shepard, who had a scirrhous growth on her right temple. This was terribly inflamed and spreading so fast, that I prevailed upon her to order five dollars' worth of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and test their virtue as a blood cleaner, as the only means of arresting the rapid growth of the cancer. This she did, and has taken about seven of the boxes, and is still taking them. The sore has stopped spreading, and appears to be healing. When she began to take the pills she was the thinnest living being I ever saw that could move about. Now she has gained in flesh, her skin has regained its normal appearance, and she is stronger, and her general health is better than it has been in many years. God grant she may be spared the horrible death with which she was threatened. My sister's case, more than my own, has induced me to write this statement, in order that it may be made public.

"M. F. SHEPARD,
(Signed) "Cullman Co., Alabama."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

A Cougher's Coffers

may not be so full as he wishes, but if he is wise he will neglect his coffers awhile and attend to his cough. A man's coffers may be so secure that no one can take them away from him. But a little cough has taken many a man away from his coffers. The "slight cough" is somewhat like the small pebble that lies on the mountain side, and appears utterly insignificant. A fluttering bird, perhaps, starts the pebble rolling, and the rolling pebble begets an avalanche that buries a town. Many fatal diseases begin with a slight cough. But any cough, taken in time, can be cured by the use of

GENERAL LEE RETURNS.

No Business Improvement in Cuba Until the War is Ended.

Consul-General Fitzhugh Lee arrived from Havana on board the Seguranca Tuesday. When asked as to whether he would return to Cuba or not, the general shook his head and said:

"I cannot answer that, and I would rather not talk on Cuban affairs until I make my report in Washington."

In speaking of the case of Evangelina Cossio Cisneros, the general said:

"The young woman is now confined in Casa Recohidas. She has never been tried, and I do not think it was ever intended that she should be banished. The stories of her ill treatment are very much exaggerated, and were it not for the hubbub which has been raised about her, the girl would probably have been released long ago. In fact, I was given to understand that her name was on the pardon list. She has comfortable quarters, and is treated as well as possible under the conditions. There is a good deal of suffering in Cuba, but the Americans, numbering about 1,400, are being cared for from the fund of $50,000 which was appropriated for that purpose. They receive relief daily and up to the present time about $15,000 has been expended."

"Is there any sign of business improving or a change for the better in Cuba?" asked the reporter.

"No. I'm sorry to say that there is not," replied the general, "and there will not be any improvement until the war is ended."

"When will that be, general?"

To this last question General Lee replied in Spanish, a free translation of which is: "That is too much for me; I can't say."

Gen. Lee's Intentions.

Speaking of the report that Gen. Fitz Lee might be coming to Virginia to look after his interests in the contest for Senator Martin's seat or to confer with the members of the board of visitors of the university with reference to accepting the presidency of that institution, a gentleman said there was no doubt that Lee was written to and urged to return to Virginia for conference with his friends regarding both of these matters. As a rule, it is those who are Lee's warmest supporters for the senatorship who are desirous of seeing him made president of the university. They wish to talk the situation over with him, persuade him, if possible, to take the presidency, and failing in that, they will go to work for him for the senatorship.

The following are the names of those who have accepted:

WAR IMMINENT.

A Dispute in Guatemala Over the Dictatorship.

News just received from Guatemala is to the effect that the country is in a bad way, financially and commercially. During the month failures amounting to $8,000,000 were reported. This total is a trifle misleading, as it represents Central American money, which is very much depreciated in value.

Reni Barrios, the man who was president and who declared himself dictator of the republic a couple of months ago, is exceedingly unpopular because of his recent high-handed action, and there is a demand that Prosper Morales, a lawyer and former minister of war, be chosen to succeed Barrios. To prevent this Barrios intends calling a session of the assembly very soon in order to have himself confirmed as dictator. If he is successful war is almost certain, because the country will not longer submit to his oppression. If he is defeated war is just as sure, because he cannot afford to be driven out of office.

Ex-President Barillos, who made it possible for Barrios to succeed him, has declared that he will never draw his sword excepting to fight Morales, who has threatened to stop his financial operations.

Barrios is alleged to have killed a number of prominent citizens of his country because he thought they were not in sympathy with him. Besides these, 243 men of lesser importance are said to have been slain by his order.

WRECK ON THE SANTA FE.

Fifteen People Killed and Several of the Bodies Cremated.

One of the worst accidents in the history of the Santa Fe railroad occurred three miles east of Emporia, Kan., last Tuesday. Twelve or fifteen persons were killed and as many more badly hurt. The fast mail train, going east, and the Mexico and California express was pulled by two locomotives, and when they struck the engine drawing the fast mail the boilers of all three engines exploded and tore a hole in the ground so deep that the smoking car of the west bound train ran on top of the three engines and two mail cars and balanced there without turning over. The cars in the hole and the smoking car burned to ashes in a short time. In climbing out of the smoking car several men fell through the rifts into the furnace, and it is impossible to tell whether they escaped or were burned to death.

The west bound train carried seven or eight coaches, and its passengers included many excursionists who had been to hear Hon. William J. Bryan speak at the county fair at Burlingame. Mr. Bryan himself was on the train, but was riding in the rear Pullman some distance from the cars that were wrecked.

It is stated that the wreck was caused by a miscarriage of orders from the trainmaster.

Camphor Industry.

Secretary Wilson of the agricultural department says that arrangements will be made by the department for the thorough introduction of the camphor tree in Florida. He added that there was no doubt that the tree would be a success there, as it had already passed the experimental stage.

The department will give all possible encouragement in the way of supplying seed and young trees, and Mr. Wilson predicts that the country will soon be producing a sufficient supply of camphor for its own needs. He also announced his purpose to adopt a policy for the encouragement of the growth of the English walnut, which, he thinks, will do well anywhere south of Washington.

The little daughter of 'Squire W. A. Newton, at Pulaski, Tenn., was burned to death Wednesday evening, her clothing catching fire from matches.

The Old Howard to the Front.

The new department of Civil and Mining Engineering added to the course of Howard College, at East Lake, Ala., completes one of the most desirable courses of study offered by any college in the country. The college curriculum now includes all regular collegiate courses, a professional course in Philosophy and Pedagogy, and a professional course in Civil and Mining Engineering.

The desirability of the course is attracting students from all sections, and the opening on Sept. 21 promises to be very large.

Postponed to September 28.

For several reasons that indicated best, the State Normal College at Troy, Ala., has postponed its opening to September 28. This will suit many students who could not enter at an earlier date. Troy is a remarkably healthy place, being 600 feet above the gulf, and no such thing as yellow fever has ever been known there. The college authorities anticipate a grand year's work.

HOLDS ON.

Bradstreet's Reports No Check in the Onward Movement.

COTTON FABRICS IMPROVED.

The Advance in More Than One Hundred Articles Was 3.4 Per Cent in August. Heavy Grain Exports Marks the Week's Record—Iron Strengthening.

Bradstreet's review of trade says: The business week has been marked by a continuation of comparatively free buying from jobbers and commission merchants in anticipation of wants, at almost all important distributing points. At a number of centers special rate excursions of merchants have increased the week's volume of business, notwithstanding the intervention of a holiday.

Cotton fabrics have improved their position in view of increased demand and cheaper raw material. There has been a falling off in general trade in portions of Texas, due in part to the unwillingness of planters to sell cotton at its present price, but at central western points, notably Chicago and St. Louis, business has been quite active. Western iron and steel mills are practically independent of buyers for the remainder of the calendar year.

The August advance in prices for more than 100 staple raw and manufactured articles, products, live stock, etc., amounted to 3.4 per cent, following a 3.1 per cent advance in July. During the first six months of the calendar year prices referred to fell away about 2.6 per cent.

Exports of wheat (flour included as wheat) from both coasts of the United States and Montreal show a falling off from last week, but are still very large, aggregating 5,461,500 bushels, with the exception of last week, when the total exports aggregated 6,268,247 bushels. They are the largest for any week this year, and compared with exports in the like week a year ago of 3,999,191; in 1895, of 1,810,000; in 1894, of 2,789,000, and in 1893, of 5,357,000 bushels.

Corn exports are the largest for any week since last spring, aggregating 4,943,348 bushels, against 2,656,000 bushels last year, 849,000 bushels in 1895, and 69,000 bushels in 1894, and 859,000 in 1893.

There are 173 business failures reported throughout the United States this week, against 198 last week, 308 in the week only a year ago, 213 two years ago, 223 three years ago, and as compared with 300 in the like week of September, 1893.

There are 32 business failures reported from the Dominion of Canada this week, compared with 30 last week, 41 in the week a year ago, 32 two years ago, and as contrasted with 86 in the like week of 1893.

TWENTY-FIVE KILLED.

Two Trains Collide in Colorado and Many Are Hurled Into Eternity.

The most disastrous railway wreck that has ever happened in Colorado occurred near New Castle, Col., on the morning of September 10.

The Denver and Rio Grande passenger train No. 1, west bound, collided with a Colorado Midland stock train, going east, wrecking both engines and several cars in each train.

Shortly after the collision fire broke out in the ruins. The mail, baggage and express cars, smokers, day coach and tourist sleeper were burned.

A number of passengers who were not killed outright, but who were pinned in the wreck and could not be extricated, perished in the flames. There were about 200 passengers.

It is estimated that twenty-five were killed and as many more wounded, scalded and burned, of whom six are likely to die.

The accident occurred at the worst possible point. Two minutes more of running time and they could have avoided the wreck, as each engineer could have seen the approach of the other train. The trains collided on a curve around the mountain, and there was no opportunity to even slack up the speed.

Plenty of Gold.

Reports from Golden, South Santa Fe county, N. M., say that in sinking a tubular well to secure a water supply the drill passed through 50 feet of solid quartz, every foot of which showed free gold. Some of the gold nuggets are as large as grains of wheat. The discovery was made on virgin ground at a depth of 350 feet.

Nine bids for the location of the reformatory for juvenile offenders were opened by the Florida board of state institutions. Marianna captured the prize, with 1,000 acres and $1,750.

CLIFTON NEWTON.

The McKinley prosperity wagon hasn't started South yet.

We wonder why cotton stays behind in the prosperity procession?

We are getting lots of protection—cotton low and everything else high.

We expect great things from our Industrial School. President H. C. Reynolds says they will have about four hundred girls. Montevallo is proud of her school.

The best way in the world to run a paper aground is to try to please everybody. We will take your advice, but can't use it. We are going to run the paper to suit ourself.

A business man told us the other day that business was looking up, and that money was circulating more freely. This may be, but we have not seen it. Money don't circulate around us.

We are Democrat, of course; but we don't intend to make our paper a partisan sheet. We will do all we can to bring our people together. We believe every man has as much right to his opinion as we have to ours.

Every subscriber to the NEWS can do much for the paper by becoming a reporter for it. That would greatly help us in getting out a readable sheet. The trouble with most subscribers is, they are not content with being reporters, but want to write the editorials.

We have met with hearty support—in fact, better than we expected, which shows that Montevallo is an enterprising city. Her merchants know the value of advertising—in fact, everybody knows it pays to support their home paper. The public generally judges a town by its paper.

Who wouldn't be a newspaper man, when he can sit in his thin board shanty with no money and less friends, and be blamed for a thousand things he never thought of, work hard, help men into office who forget all about it afterwards, get cheated out of his earnings, puffs up everything and everybody—yet many people will not take his paper, but will borrow and read it, and curse the man who got it up.

She was a remarkably sensible young lady who made the request of her friends that after her decease she should not be buried near a brook where babbling lovers would wake her from her dreams; nor in any grand cemetery where sight seers conning epitaphs might disturb her, but be laid away to her last sleep under the counter of some merchant who does not advertise in the papers. There, she said, was to be found a depth of quiet slumber, which neither the sound of the buoyant foot of youth nor the weary shuffle of old age would intrude.

IN MEMORIAM.

REV. D. Y. WYATT.

HALL OF CENTRAL LODGE
No. 70, A. F. & A. M.,
MONTEVALLO, ALA.

WHEREAS, It has pleased an All-wise God, in His providence, to remove from our midst our much loved and highly esteemed brother, Rev. D. Y. Wyatt, who departed this life July 31, 1897;

AND WHEREAS, Brother Wyatt was for many years a member of the fraternity, and a most zealous and efficient Presbyterian minister for over 40 years, whose abundant labors were crowned with eminent success, and one of our oldest and best citizens, beloved by all, and most loved by those who knew him best. Therefore be it

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Wyatt, his children have lost a loving and devoted father, the church one of its strongest pillars and brightest lights, the fraternity a good and honest member, society a member whose life was brilliant with virtures and good deeds, and the country a citizen whose life was worthy of imitation.

Resolved, That while we bow in humble submission to this decree of the Almighty Power, which rules the universe, we sincerely mourn our loss, and especially the great loss of the bereaved family, to whom we tender our heartfelt sympathy, and in this dark hour of their affliction we would direct them for comfort to our Heavenly Father, who doeth all things well.

Resolved, That the members of the Lodge wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days, that these resolutions be spread upon the pages of our Lodge book, a copy be furnished for publication, and that a copy be presented to the family of our deceased brother.

When you come to Montevallo to do your trading, don't fail to call on Morgan Bros. before buying elsewhere. They have just opened up a new and fresh line of dress goods, novelty suiting, ribbons, etc, for the ladies. Their clothing department is complete in every respect. See their advertisement in another column.

Mr. John T. Wilson, living about 5½ miles southwest of Montevallo, had the misfortune to lose his residence, all of his meat, lard and molasses, and a lot of household goods by fire last Saturday night. The fire originated in the smoke house, and was first discovered about eight o'clock. Mr. Wilson's loss is about $1,000, with no insurance.

A young lady once asked us how to make "not enough" out of the word "enough." After a moment's meditation and thought we told her it was quite easy, and explained as follows: Take, we said, the 3rd, 2nd and 1st letters of the word "enough" for the first, and the 6th, 4th and 5th for the second, and you will have two words that signify something that is not enough for any young lady. Arrange the letters according to the above direction and see what you get.

SIX MILE ITEMS.

The Academy opened Monday morning with an enrollment of 84, with a fair prospect of 30 to 40 more in a short time. Quite a number of patrons were present. Rev. W H Connell opened the exercise by reading the 2d chapter of Proverbs with a short comment, and offering a short prayer. Prof. Rasco gave a hearty welcome to all. Rev. J. M. Langston, chairman of the board of trustees, made an address, giving an interesting account of Six Mile school contrasting the past with the present. Capt. R. H. Pratt followed with some very expressive remarks on education. Rev. S. Smithson came next, and said we have all we need in the persons of our teschers and if the parents will co operate with them, they will have a school indeed. Rev I. N Langston, one of Bibb's noblest sons, followed with some great argument to push forward in education. Prof. H. L. Hicks came next with wit and humor, and made a splendid talk on getting and how to get a practical education. Prof. A N. Clayton, the new principal was next, and made a practical talk on education. Mr. R. J. Rotenberry offered some timely remarks of encouragement. Mr. H. L. Wallace said the war prevented him from getting an education, but he was a friend to education, and thanked God for the star rising in our beloved Bibb, which fits persons for every calling in life. Mr. Newton Langston gave some of his peculiar wit and humor. He also made some telling remarks aptly suited to the occasion.

The sick of our town are all about well again.

C. H Moore has enlarged his store house and has greatly improved his stock of general merchandise.

Mr. Mose Cottingham's children have moved to Six Mile to attend school.

Mr. Burgess Little, cashier of the Shelby County Bank, went over to Montevallo Monday to take charge of his duties. Mr. Little is a good business man, and while cashier of the Blocton Savings Bank made a host of friends, who wish him success in his adopted home.

The Oyster.

The oyster has no greater enemy than the starfish. It appears difficult however, for a fish to open the shell of an oyster, which requires a certain amount of skill even with an oyster knife; but the starfish has a peculiar method of leverage upon the opening of the two shells which the oyster cannot resist. Biologists used to think that the starfish simply starved the oyster until it opened of its own accord; but observation has shown that by the pressure it applies the bivalve speedily becomes a victim to its ingenious enemy.

A New York student of political economy and social science says: "Let us agree that the sum each of us may hold shall be limited to $2,000,000." We are not disposed to quarrel over a little thing like that; but such an agreement would be sure to work great hardship to many of the newspaper boys.

A New York clergyman thinks he has found a Biblical rebuke to flirting in Proverbs x.. 10: "He that winketh with the eyes causes sorrow." But how about "she" that winketh? And what proof is there that this text wasn't aimed at the soda fountain?

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

STRIKE CRISIS.

Deputy Sheriffs Fire Into Infuriated Miners.

MORE THAN A SCORE KILLED.

The Men Went Down Before the Storm of Bullets Like Ten Pins, and the Groans of the Dying and Wounded Rent the Air—Troops Ordered to the Scene.

The strike situation reached a terrible crisis on the outskirts of Latimer, Pa., Friday afternoon, when a band of deputy sheriffs fired into an infuriated mob of miners. The men fell like so many sheep, and the excitement since has been so intense that no accurate figures of the dead and wounded can be obtained. Reports run from fifteen to twenty-odd killed and forty or more wounded. Many of these will die. One man is said to have counted thirteen corpses. Four other dead are in the mountains between Latimer and Hartleigh. Those who were not injured carried their dead and wounded friends into the woods, and the estimate is baffled.

The strikers left Hazleton in the afternoon, announcing their intention to go to Latimer. As soon as this became known a band of deputy sheriffs was loaded on a trolley car and sent whirling across the mountain to the scene where the bloody conflict followed. After reaching Latimer they left the car and formed into three companies under Thomas Hall, E. E. Leehes and Samuel Price. They drew up in line at the edge of the village with a fence and a line of houses in their rear. Sheriff Martin was in command, and stood in front of the line until the strikers approached. They were seen coming across the ridge, and Martin went out to meet them.

The men drew up sullenly and listened in silence until he had once more read the riot act. This finished, a low muttering arose among the foreigners, and there was a slight movement forward. Perceiving this, the sheriff stepped toward them and in a determined tone forbade an advance. Some one struck the sheriff, and the next moment there was a command to fire. The guns of the deputies instantly belched forth a terrible volley.

The strikers were taken entirely by surprise, and as the men toppled and fell over one another, those who remained unhurt stampeded. The men went down before the storm of bullets like ten pins, and the groans of the dying and wounded rent the air. The excitement that followed was simply indescribable. The deputies seemed to be terror stricken at the deadly execution of their guns, and seeing the living strikers fleeing and the others dropping to the earth, they went to the aid of the unfortunates whom they had brought down.

Governor Hastings ordered out the Third Brigade, of which General Gobin is commander, and instructed General Schall to hold the First Brigade in readiness. The troops mobilized at Hazleton, and were on the scene before daylight. Capt. R. A. Paxton, U. S. A., attached to the national guard, started for Hazleton by direction of the Governor.

SEEKING PEARLS

People Flocking to the Ouachita Beds Near Malvern, Ark.

The excitement over the discovery of pearl-bearing mussels in the Ouachita river and its tributaries is running very high at Malvern now, and scores of people have engaged in the occupation of gathering the mussels and opening them in search of jewels.

Men and boys in every station of life, regardless of race or color, are flocking to the streams in which the mussels abound, and from early morning till dewy evening can be seen wading in the streams, shoveling out the rough-shelled gem-producers, which they are confident contains the highly prized pearl.

Several very fine specimens of the pink variety of pearls have been found and also those of a pure white variety. In most every instance they are imperfect in shape, but occasionally one of perfect shape and fine orientiss is secured.

VIRTUALLY ENDED

Is the Great Strike So Far as Certain States are Concerned.

The great miners strike, which was declared on July 4, was brought to an end Saturday so far, at least, as Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and West Virginia are concerned, by the action of the interstate convention of miners, which has been in session at Columbus, O., since last Wednesday.

After a day of voting and wrangling the convention adopted a resolution accepting the proposition of the Pittsburg operators. The vote was 495 for and 317 against accepting the terms of settlement; eleven votes were not cast. The delegates from Illinois, who had 250 votes, were unanimously against a settlement. Indiana and West Virginia voted solidly to accept the operators' proposition, but there were scattering votes among the Ohio and Pittsburg delegates against it.

The proposition accepted provides for 65 cents in Pittsburg district, all other places where a relative price can be obtained to resume work and contribute liberally to the miners who do not receive the advance, at which places the fight is to continue to a bitter finish.

Col. James M. Cox, of Mobile, administered the oath of allegiance to the sixty-two members of the Eufaula Rifles the past week. The measures for their uniforms have been taken, and they will soon receive them. J. R. Barr was elected captain, and Hamiter Graves first lieutenant.

Praising Alabama Wheat.

The operators of the Boyd flouring mill in Huntsville, in an interview, state that Madison county wheat is superior to wheat raised in Tennessee and Kentucky, and equal to that of Indiana and other wheat-growing States. Previous to this year the farmers of the county have planted very little wheat, having doubts of its quality. However, this year the grain forms a great part of the farmers' product.

Dummy Line Sold.

The Birmingham Railway and Electric Company have bought the Powderly dummy line. The arrangements are complete, but there are a few minor details in regard to the transaction yet to be arranged. It is said that the Birmingham Railway and Electric Company will equip the road with electricity and make a loop over its present division and the Powderly line.

Lands for Settlement.

Uncle Sam's lands, the titles to which have recently been perfected in the Perdido decision, are being rapidly disposed of under the settlement laws at the land office. These lands were claimed by the Perdido Land Company but in view of an adverse decision of the government recently, the lands became a part of the public domain, and are being disposed of to settlers. The lands are located in Baldwin and Monroe counties, and are worth something over two hundred thousand dollars.

Committee to Go to Washington.

It is probable that the special committee appointed by the Birmingham Commercial Club to look after the matter of endeavoring to secure the government armor plate plant for Birmingham will visit Washington in a few days for the purpose of appearing before the special naval board that have the matter in hand and urging them to visit this city and investigate its claims. Congressman Underwood of this city, Congressman Gaines of Tennessee and Congressman Livingston of Georgia are expected to accompany the committee to Washington. The committee will meet Monday to take steps on the subject.

Big Deal in Coal Lands.

A big deal in coal lands has just been consummated. The parties were L. B. Musgrove and Maj. G. D. Fitzhugh and associates on one side, and wealthy New York parties on the other. The New Yorkers have bought fifteen thousand acres of coal lands in northwest Walker and Marion counties. Mr. Musgrove put in about eight thousand acres and Fitzhugh and associates the rest.

The purchasers will at once set to work to develop the lands by opening up large mines. Another town will spring up in the corner of Walker county and another field of development be opened.

Two Important Raids.

The revenue officers in Northern Alabama have made two important raids this week. At Rockway, in Limestone county, Deputy Collector Logwood and Deputy Marshal Charles Logwood captured and destroyed a 250-gallon copper still, together with all appurtenances, and 2,000 gallons of beer. The still was owned and operated by W. T. Harrison and James Robinson, who were arrested and carried to Huntsville.

Near Milan, in Jackson county, Deputy Marshals Skelton and Arnold captured and destroyed a moonshine establishment that has been running for several years past. It consisted of a fine copper still with a capacity of 120 gallons and a copper worm. This was owned by Walker Matthews, one of the wealthiest men in Paint Rock valley, who has made whisky for two years past in open defiance of the revenue men, who have never been able to locate his place of business.

Surveying the Warrior Canal.

United States Engineer Joseph Ripley, accompanied by Assistants Barnes and Swift, left Birmingham with a corps of men on the official survey of the proposed Warrior river canal. The surveyors will probably set stakes at a convenient point and work both ways. Mr. Ripley has spent the greater part of the past week on the route, with City Engineer Kendrick, and has his plans mapped out for the work. The route of the proposed canal is as follows: Beginning on Five Mile creek, about eight miles above Birmingham, it will pass through North Birmingham, thence to Bessemer and Valley Creek, continue along Valley Creek to Lock No. 3, on the Warrior river, thence to Tuskaloosa. From there the route extends along to the Tombigbee river, thence to Mobile along the Alabama and Mobile rivers. Valley creek will have to be locked, dammed and considerably deepened at points, and it is estimated that eight locks will have to be erected along the Warrior river between the mouth of Valley Creek and Tuskaloosa.

State Treasury Statement.

The fiscal year with the Alabama State Treasury concludes on September 30, but it is already evident that the receipts for this year will be between $50,000 and $60,000 in excess of those of last year, whereas the increase in the disbursements will reach probably $200,000.

This increase in disbursements is due to the expense of the last legislature, which cost the State $53,000; an additional interest of $70,000 on the bonded indebtedness of the State, by reason of the increase of the contract rate on the graduated bonds; an additional appropriation of $15,000 by the last legislature to the Girls' Industrial School at Montevallo; an increase in the appropriation to the Deaf, Dumb and Blind Institute at Talladega of $11,000, and an increase in payments from the school fund of $33,000 for public school purposes; the appropriation for codifying the laws, $12,000.

These several appropriations consumed $194,000 of the increase in disbursements and the balance represents the increase that is natural in the expense account of a growing State. Had it been possible to avoid these several extraordinary expenses, and had it not been for the Lott shortage, the treasury would have shown a profit this year of considerably over $60,000.

MISERY AND DEATH.

Gloomy Outlook for People Who Have Rushed to Alaska.

The steamer Cleveland has arrived from St. Michael's, bringing with her from the Yukon gold fields a story of distress and disaster.

The miners she has on board and officers in charge of the ship tell the story of the sufferings at Dawson. The winter has set in at the mining city of the frozen North and two great stores of the place have closed their doors, for they have nothing to sell. Those who have been seeking gold now must seek food or starve.

While there may be a tendency to exaggerate the actual condition of affairs, there can be no question that famine threatens the adventurous men and women who made their way to the Klondyke. Hundreds of unruly spirits are flocking to Dawson. Threats of violence are being made on every side. The first signs of winter are apparent on the River Yukon, which is beginning to freeze and in a few weeks will be closed. Enormous prices are now being paid for food at Dawson, and it is impossible that more than seven vessels with provisions can reach Dawson before the river is a mass of ice.

Drunkenness, gambling and disorder were rampant, and conservative observers predict the most serious consequences. There is gold everywhere, but the people of Dawson want food more than they want gold now.

The new stockings for women look like neckties.

ARKANSAS LADIES DON'T LIE.

Mrs Martha A Johnson

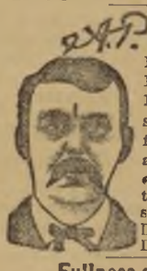
Malvern, Ark., says: Have used Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine 10 years, and find it a great deal better than "Zeilin's Regulator" and "Black Draught." It has been of great benefit to my Daughter and Niece during their monthly troubles for Obstructed Menstruation. There should be no home without it.

The Turn of Life.

The cessation of the menses usually occurs between the ages of forty and fifty. Great irregularity takes place in the periodic discharges for some time before the final cessation, the female usually experiencing sudden flashes of heat, fullness in the head, headache and other evidences of constitutional disturbance. The nervous system sympathetically responds, and there is great irritability and melancholy, the patient is discouraged and has a sense of fullness or suffocation.

At no time in her life does a woman need more constant care and watchful tenderness, nor has more need for a remedy to invigorate and strengthen her. The bowels should be kept regular with Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine, and if Dr. Simmons Squaw Vine Wine is used during the whole of this critical period, it will invigorate and enrich her blood, soothe and strengthen her nerves and thus relieve the suffering and enable her to pass safely through the dangers, prolong her life and afford her strength and joy in her declining years.

A. P. Ewton



Pine Bluff, Ark., writes: Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine has been a God send to myself and family for 20 years. It cures Chills and Fevers, Bilious Fevers, Sick Headache. I think there is no comparison between it and "Black Draught" and "Zeilin's Liver Regulator."

Fullness of Blood in Head.

Where there is great determination of blood to the head, the blood-vessels of the brain become greatly congested, and there exists flushed face, giddiness, especially on stooping, and throbbing pain in the head, increased by movement. It may be caused by living too freely; too late rising in the morning, combined with an inactive life. Menstrual derangements in females will often occasion it. Dr. Simmons Squaw Vine Wine is especially made for this, and it cures.

JUDGE KILGORE DEAD.

The Well-Known Ex-Congressman From Texas Passes Away.

Judge Kilgore, ex-Congresman from Texas, died at Ardmore, I. T., Thursday.

As a member of Congress from Texas, Judge Kilgore was one of the best known men in public life. He was called "Buck" by his intimate friends, and attracted wide public attention in the Fifty-first Congress by kicking in a green baize door which had been locked by order of Speaker Reed during one of the filibustering scenes that made the first "quorum counting" Congress memorable. He supported President Cleveland ardently, and after he was retired from congress the President appointed him one of the judges of the Indian Territory.

Mr. Kilgore was born in Newnan, Ga., February 20, 1835. In 1846 he removed with his parents to Rusk county, Texas, where he received a common school education. He served in the Confederate army, first as private and by successive promotions reached the grade of adjutant general, serving as such in Ector's brigade, Army of the Tennessee. He was wounded at Chickamauga and in 1864 was confined as a prisoner in Fort Delaware. He was admitted to the bar after the war and in 1875 was a member of the Texas constitutional convention. He was a presidential elector in 1880 on the Hancock and English ticket and in 1884 was elected to the State Senate for four years and in the following year was chosen president of that body for two years. He was elected to the Fiftieth, Fifty-first and Fifty-second Congresses as a Democrat.

They say there are five or six miners imprisoned in the burning mine, but they cannot be reached on account of smoke and fire. These men are no doubt killed. The explosion was caused by natural gas.

Says 100,000 Volunteers Are Ready to Back Him.

He says Spain must abandon Cuba, and the loss of that island will emphasize the existing deep discontent. It is expected that the pretender will shortly issue a manifesto.

SURPRISED.

United States' Attitude Causes a Sensation in Madrid.

OVER-CONFIDENCE IN WEYLER

The General Impression at Madrid is That the Spanish Government Will Try to Drag Negotiations Along, Unless It Rejects Uncle Sam's Good Offices.

The attitude of the United States has caused a great sensation at Madrid, because opinion has been lured on by the optimistic communications of the Spanish minister at Washington upon the character and duration of the correct attitude of the United States government, and that, too, despite several warnings from Mr. Olney and Mr. Cleveland's message.

The official bulletins of Captain General Weyler have also received too much confidence, when the United States every month was receiving from its consuls and special envoys totally different news.

The general impression at San Sebastian and Madrid is that the Spanish government will try to drag negotiations along, unless it rejects purely and simply the good offices of the United States, on the ground of public opinion and on the further ground that the opposition would not permit it to tolerate foreign intervention, even though amicable.

The government organs roundly deny that Minister Woodford has mentioned an ultimatum, but the public mind is not altogether relieved thereby. The policy of the government in denying and suppressing news and directly denying the truth of almost everything in any way unpalatable must always tend to increase public uneasiness.

The use of the word ultimatum is exaggerated. General Woodford doubtless expressed himself energetically, but between this and fixing a period of six weeks to end a widespread insurrection under pain of taking up the cause of the insurgents against a friendly power, there is a very wide distinction, and more especially so in the present political situation, when a change of government more or less radical cannot be distant.

YELLOW FEVER SITUATION.

Grows More Alarming at Infected Points as the Days Go By.

New Orleans.—Eminent physicians believe that the work of the Board of Health is productive of good results, and that the fever is not spreading, but on the contrary, is being confined to localities. Up to Friday there have been a few less than 100 cases and fifteen deaths. The death rate is in the neighborhood of 15 per cent. It was in 1878 16 per cent, so that up to the present time the disease is about as virulent as it was in the last great epidemic that visited New Orleans.

Mobile.—Up to and including Friday there have been forty-one cases, six deaths, nineteen discharged and sixteen under treatment. With one or two exceptions, the sick are doing well. The board have still the satisfaction of reporting very slow progress of the fever toward an epidemic visitation. Much active work of a sanitary nature is being done by the city authorities, and new methods of quarantine and disinfection are about to be put in practice under the advice of the board.

At Edwards, Miss., the situation is still growing worse. There have been 133 cases reported up to Friday, with only four deaths; 44 are convalescent, and 85 under treatment.

At Biloxi the spread of the fever is not so rapid, though there are new cases reported daily. There have been fifty-eight cases to date.

The situation in other infected towns along the coast remains unchanged, with a small number of cases developing daily.

The second case of yellow fever to develop in Louisville, Ky., was announced by Health Officer White last Thursday. The first case was that of Frank DeRumsey, who died in an infirmary in that city on August 16.

ALASKA APPOINTMENTS.

Three Men Are Now Inspectors—Assistant Surgeon at Mobile.

The secretary of the treasury has appointed Thomas S. Luke, T. A. Marquam, Emanuel Herrmann and Charles I. Roth as customs inspectors at Sitka, Alaska, at $5 per day. These appointments were made necessary by the exodus to the Klondyke region. The secretary also has appointed Ira W. Porter as assistant surgeon of the Marine Hospital service at Mobile, Ala., to assist in the care of yellow fever.

THE CUBAN LEAGUE.

President Allen Sees Freedom for the Cuban Patriots.

President Ethan Allen, of the Cuban League of the United States, on Thursday issued the following address to the membership of the League:

A year of patriotic work is about to end in grandest results. Last spring nearly every governor of this republic, at our request, backed by the legislature of his State, spoke for Cuban independence. Many hundreds of thousands of citizens, responding to the appeal of this League, have made it manifest that public opinion is on the side of the Cuban insurgents and hostile to their oppressors. Now the hour of emancipation for Cuba is at hand. The commanding voice of the nation has at last reached the executive. Though the delay has been much too long, still the retribution at hand will excuse past delinquencies. Our minister in Spain, with a patriotic president behind him, will do that which shall end the murder, plunder and medieval tyranny in Cuba, allowing its entry into sovereign states. The nation is ready with guns, if necessary. Every member of this League should be alert to uphold the president in such policy. Let all, when the moment comes, say to him: "All divisions end at the water's edge."

WHAT WAR COSTS SPAIN.

Statement of Number of Men and Munitions of War Furnished.

An official statement has been issued showing the number of men and the quantities of the munitions of war sent to Cuba and the Philippine islands during the insurrections now in progress in those quarters.

Between November, 1895, and May, 1897, the Spanish government sent to Cuba 181,738 soldiers, 6,261 officers, of whom forty were generals, 212,542 guns, 320,406 kilograms of powder, 92,088,670 cartridges, 160,712 swords, 91 cannons, 12 mitrailleuses and 29,500 shells.

Since the outbreak of the present revolution in the Philippines the government has sent 27,706 soldiers, 881 officers, of whom nine were generals, 43,100 guns, 24 cannons, 24,910 kilograms of powder, 21,726,585 cartridges and 30,604 shells.

ELECTION IN CUBA.

Bartolome Masso Vice President of the Republic.

According to advices from Puerto Principe, Senor Bartolome Masso has been elected vice president of the Cuban republic, Gen. Maximo Gomez has been appointed minister of war and Calixto Garcia major general, General Gomez remaining commander-in-chief of the Army of Liberation.

Word comes from Santa Clara that General Gomez has ordered a new invasion of Western Cuba, with a view of profiting by the rainy season.

It may be safely estimated that more than 150,000 native Cubans have disappeared from various causes. In certain towns entire families have been wiped out. Sickness continues at a high rate among the troops, probably about 37,000 soldiers being on the sick list, most of them victims of fever.

TERRIBLE CYCLONE.

A cyclone swept over Sava, Oria and Latiano, all in the province of Lecce, in Italy, Wednesday evening. Forty persons were killed, seventy people were wounded and twenty houses were destroyed and telegraphic communication with the scene of the disaster was cut off.

At Oriakora the railway depot was demolished, and all the railway men engaged there were killed. Two chateaux and thirty houses were destroyed in a neighboring village, where 20 were killed and 24 injured. At Mesagne, a province of Lecce, fifteen were killed and five injured. A great tract of country has been devastated by the hurricane.

GOLD COMING.

La Touraine, of the French steamship line, which sails from Havre on Saturday next, will bring to New York port $1,000,000 in gold consigned to the Hanover National Bank of New York.

WOMEN TURN GOLD HUNTERS.

Six Oakland women have returned from a search for gold mines in the mountains of Shasta county, California. For two weeks they tramped in bloomers over hills, through canons, fording creeks and braving all the hardships incidental to a prospector's life. They are back with a record of seven placer and quartz mines located.

They left Oakland, each one fully equipped with a miner's outfit. They returned with hundreds of pounds of ore samples and gold they had panned from placer claims.

A new powder mill will soon be in operation near Boyles Gap. Its capacity will be 300 kegs per day.

When the Angel Gabriel toots his horn over Montevallo he will stop several in their ascent for the sin of not patronizing their home paper.

John A. Gafford, who assassinated Francis Bartow Lloyd (Rufus Sanders), near Greenville, Ala. last August, stands a good chance of going by the neck-tie route.

Miss Maggie Miller, daughter of the late Judge Wm. Miller, for years one of the most prominent Republicans in Tuscaloosa and Alabama, has been appointed postmistress at Tuscaloosa, vice Major McCalla, Democrat, removed.

T. N. Lowe, alias Tom Lowe, alias Tom Smith, was convicted in the circuit court of Shelby county on the 25th inst., for robbing the express car near Calera last and sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary, the lowest penalty under the law. Surely, "the way of the transgressor is hard."

Patronize those who advertise. It is safe to patronize those who want your trade and ask it through the columns of their home paper. You will find you can do better with such dealers. The man who will ask for your trade is the man who will treat you so you will come again when once you call on him.

Did you know that no newspaper is printed for one person any more than the St. George hotel was built to please one guest. People who become greatly disgusted with some things they find in the paper, should remember that the very things which displeases them are exactly the very things that please somebody who has as much interest in the paper as they may have.

Friends, we have gone to a very heavy expense since we started the publication of the NEWS. We have met with much encouragement from our merchants, as our advertising columns show, and to all of whom we feel very grateful. We have sent out several hundred sample copies of the NEWS every week since we started, and as our subscription list is not as large as it ought to be, we appeal to our friends to come to our support. We cannot afford to hire a printer, buy paper and ink, and publish a paper every week without some compensation. A good many seem to think that the NEWS is issued weekly free. But such is not the case. We will send out more sample copies this week, and those of our friends who wish to subscribe will please call and pay their subscription; and those who do not wish to take it, will please be kind enough to so inform us.

Montevallo is growing. We all both see and feel it. What are you doing to help the town's growth? If you are following the first impulse that comes to us all, you are speculating on the growth of the town and the necessities of the people. You are figuring to yourself how much you can make here, how much there.

If you are following a nobler impulse that also comes to us all, you are preparing to make sacrifices for the benefit of the people and the town.

"What does it profit a man if he gain the whole world and 'ose his own soul?' What does a man do for himself if he works for self and self interests alone, and does uothing for his neighbors, his friends, his enemies—for humanity?

MR. REYNOLDS EXPLAINS.

HE WRITES CONCERNING THE $1,000 PAID HIM AT MONTGOMERY.

Age Herald.

Montevallo, Ala., September 25.—H. C. Reynolds, President of the Girls' Industrial School, at Montevallo, has written Gov. Johnston a letter concerning the $1.000 recently voted Reynolds at a meeting of the board of directors here. The communication is dated Montevallo, Sept. 21, and is as follows.

I desire to make some corrections regarding a report of the meeting of the board of trustees held at your office last Saturday. The report states that the money lost in the Commercial bank was the private funds belonging to the girls of the college, which was in my hands to pay board, etc. Now, I contend, and the gentlemen of the board who favored refunding me the money contend that this is not the fact. I was put in charge of the school as acting president by Gov. Oats, with full authority to organize and open it on Oct. 12. 1896. I was instructed to arrange for boarding places for the pupils and advertise it thoroughly throughout the state. I immediately went to work, got up the entire expense for the session course, issued a prospectus which stated what the terms would be. This was presented to the board, and no objection was offered to it. The girls made payments on these expenses to me, there being no treasurer for the school, for which I receipted them in the name of the school, as president. In these amounts incidental fees were also paid to me, which of course belonged to the institution, and was not the private money of the girls, as the article stated. All this money was in turn deposited by me in the name of the "Girls' Industrial School" in the Commercial bank of Selma. In the latter part of December this bank failed, carrying with it not only these funds, of a $1.000 deposited in the school's name, but my private funds also.

At a meeting here last commencement the question was brought up, as there appeared to be some opposition. I asked that the matter be withdrawn. Those favoring the question have all along contended that I should be re imbursed, and they would see to it that I was. They believed it right and legal, so did I. They acted under convictions of what they deemed just and proper, and I think the account of the meeting as given out to the reporters was a reflection both on them and myself.

"With the consent of my friends on the board who have been so kind as to see fit to re-imburse me for the loss I sustained, I will cheerfully donate the entire amount to the cause."

Giving Away Brides.

Among the novel means by which some people of London subsist is that of giving away brides at the altar. The custom has grown to considerable proportions of late, and a member of a firm of fashionable costumers, in speaking of it recently, said: "You, of course, recognize the fact that in this great city are scores of hard-working girls who are miles away from their relations and who have always been too busy to cultivate many friends. Well, when these girls are about to marry young fellows who are similarly circumstanced the question arises as to who shall give away the bride.

"I can answer that question for them at once, for I have connected with my business an ex-major in the army, a member of an ancient family and a man, too, of unimpeachable character. He is poor, but he dresses well, has beautiful white hair and looks the kindly father to perfection. I introduce him to the bride and bridegroom, and he, for a moderate fee, gives the former away. Sometimes he takes the whole arrangements of a breakfast and so on upon himself, and he is a fine speaker on occasion. He is always a welcome guest with these people afterward."

A Red Handed Murderer.

Tetterine kills the germs of Tetter, Eczema, Salt-Rheum, Ringworm and other skin diseases. Most of these are caused by the existence of infinitesimal anamalculae. Tetterine murders them at once and stops the agonizing itch, then it soothes and heals the skin. At drug stores, or by mail for 50 cents in stamps. J. T. Shuptrine, Savannah, Ga.

Attention is respectfully directed to the advertisement of Messrs. Perryman & Co., Birmingham, Ala., which appears in this issue. This firm manufactures the Enterprise Cotton Mill, which is claimed to be the cheapest, simplest and most practical on the market. The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address

STATE TOPICS.

Late News Items of General Interest to Alabamians.

RECOMMEND IMPEACHMENT.

At Florence the grand jury rendered a sensational report Friday evening, recommending the impeachment of Sheriff Carson for drunkenness in office, and giving a gentle warning to the road commissioners for several beats that the roads must be worked better.

BIG FIRE AT EAST LAKE.

College Station, near East Lake, is in ashes. The entire business portion was destroyed by fire Thursday afternoon. Twenty-one frame buildings went up in the flames in the remarkably short time of a few minutes. The total loss is estimated at more than $20,000, largely covered by insurance.

PUT UP THE BARS.

The existence of a case of yellow fever in Atlanta caused Captain M. H. Amerine, State quarantine officer, to institute a rigid quarantine against that city Friday. The order went into effect at sunrise, and the regulations are the same as those applied to New Orleans and other infected districts.

IN SEARCH OF GOLD.

Col. I. B. Stone, Greer Mason, John Freeman, Schuyler Harris, J. F. Walker, P. B. Laidlow and George Ragsdale compose a party that has left Athens for Arizona, where they will seek gold. The party had made considerable preparation for the trip, and has ample equipments for prospecting.

ROASTED.

A negro woman named Duncan locked her three small children in her dwelling near Coosada last Friday night and went to a party. Fire broke out at midnight and burned the house to the ground. The children were roasted under the bed, where they had crawled, seeking protection. The woman is guilty of murder under the law of Alabama.

SHORTAGE PROMPTLY PAID.

In the examination of Commissioner Culver's books last week a shortage of $5,000 was discovered, which was promptly paid by Mr. Culver. The commissioner explains that the shortage was due to errors appearing in his vouchers, caused by the continued illness of his chief clerk, Donald Sessions, who died last month, his assistant not being able to keep up with all the work.

PRESIDENTIAL APPOINTMENTS.

The president has made the following appointments for this State:

Leander Bryson, marshal for the Middle district of Alabama; James C. Leftwitch, colored, receiver of public money at Montgomery; Robert Barbour, register of the land office at Montgomery; Judge Steele, register at Huntsville, and H. V. Cashin, colored, receiver of public money at Huntsville.

DEMAND FOR PIG IRON.

It is given out that Alabama furnaces have sold pig iron up to January 1 next year.

As a result a number of orders are being accepted for delivery after that date. Such conditions have not prevailed in this section in many months, and the activity of the pig iron market is the subject of much comment.

Fifteen furnaces are in blast in the Birmingham district, and two others are ready for the torch. Heavy shipments of pig iron are reported.

TAX ASSESSOR SHORT.

Assistant Examiner Foster has found another former tax assessor almost $3,400 short in his settlements with the State and county. Mr. Hugh J. Stephenson, of Colbert, is the unfortunate, but, according to the special report, his delinquency appears to be the result of an accident rather than of a deliberate intention to wrong the State. He is now arranging to pay the State the full amount he is due. It will take his home and all that he possesses to pay up, it is stated, but he promises that the State shall not lose a cent by him.

FIVE MINERS ENTOMBED.

Slope No. 2 of the mines at Belle Ellen is on fire, and considerable damage has already been done. Five men are beyond the flames, and are thought to be dead. They are miners who were cut off by the flames before they could be rescued. They are: Hubbard Foley and Herman Garner, white; Frank James, Henry Reeves and William Fairfax, colored. There may be others, but these are known to be cut off. The men are undoubtedly dead, as the fire has been raging some time. One of the State mine inspectors went to the scene, and at his advice the entrance was closed to prevent the ingress of air to feed the flames. It is the intention of the fire fighters to pump water into the slope.

A CONTRACTOR KILLED.

J. G. Lallande was shot and killed by A. Stoneking at Tuskaloosa Friday. The cause of the shooting seems to have been over a very trivial matter. the two men having had a quarrel over treating a crowd to cigars. There was nothing thought of the matter until shortly afterwards, when they met again in a saloon and Stoneking offered to treat to drinks. Lallande refused, saying he would not drink with one who was not a gentleman. Stoneking then left the bar and went to a hardware store, where he purchased a 38-calibre Colt's pistol. Returning in a short time and entering the front door of the saloon, he saw Lallande standing at the cigar case. Stoneking began cursing and abusing Lallande, and as Lallande turned to face him Stoneking drew his pistol and fired once, the ball striking Lallande in the abdomen, who immediately sank to the floor in a dying condition. Stoneking was immediately arrested and taken to jail. Lallande was junior member of the contracting firm of Dunn & Lallande of Birmingham, who are grading the Mobile and Ohio Railroad. Stoneking was also a contractor.

The Last Bugle-Call.

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat has discovered that the last summons to battle in the Civil War was a bugle-call to charge, given by Nathaniel Sisson on the field of Appomattox.

Mr. Sisson enlisted when the war broke out, and at its close was a bugler under Custer. His regiment was in the saddle before day on the eventful eighth day of April, and began to skirmish with the enemy. An hour later they reached the position from which the memorable call to charge was blown.

The next moment two of General Gordon's aids rode out in advance of the column. One of them carried a towel fastened to a musket. General Gordon stated afterward that the towel was soiled and ragged; but, old and torn as it was, it carried a message of peace to the whole country.

General Custer, seeing this flag of truce, halted his charging column, and rode alone to the tent of the Confederate General. When he came out he said to General Kapehart, uncovering his head, "General Lee is treating for capitulation."

The war was over.

The men nearest to him caught the quiet words and burst into a frenzied cheer. They were men who had fought bravely, but who thanked God now that the war was ended. The cheer swept down the valley, and the hills shook with the shout—which meant peace.

Let us hope that Nathaniel Sisson's bugle-call to battle on that April morning was the last that shall ever summon brother to charge against brother in this land of ours.—Youth's Companion.

A Wonderful Pump.

A pump built for the stamp mills of the Calumet & Hecla Company is considered one of the most marvelous pieces of mechanism ever put together. Without crowding in the least and with as much apparent ease as one would work an ordinary cistern pump, this great engine delivers 2,500,000 gallons of water in twenty-four consecutive hours, and does this continuously. It is almost noiseless, so perfect is the adjustment; indeed, persons standing just outside of the building can scarcely hear its beating. Standing inside by the great pit from which the water is drawn almost the only sound is the inrush of the water as the pump lifts more than a thousand gallons at every stroke. This immense piece of machinery is engaged in supplying water to the works, where 5,000 tons per day of conglomerate rock are pulverized into sand, fine enough to be swept away by the rush of water. The nicety of adjustment may be imagined from the fact that the current of water lifts and sweeps away the sand, but does not disturb the copper that settles to the bottom of the pans.

The Chilkoot Indian Packers.

"At Dyea is a small trading post, kept by a white man, around which is gathered a village of Indians or Siwash, belonging to the Chilkoot tribe. They are by no means ill-looking people. The men are strong and well-formed; the women (naturally, when one considers their mode of life) are inferior to the men in good looks. These women have a habit of painting their faces uniformally black with a mixture of soot and grease, a covering which is said to prevent snow-blindness in the winter and to be a protection in summer against the mosquitoes. Some have only the upper part of their faces painted, and the black part terminates in a straight line, giving the effect of a half mask. At the time of our arrival the Indians were engaged very busily in catching and drying small fish. This fish is very oily, and when dried can be lighted at one end and used as a candle; and for this purpose it is stored away against the long winter night."—Outing.

A Cow With a Wooden Leg.

Director-General E. C. Lewis, of the Tennessee Centennial, who owns a farm at Sycamore, Tenn., had a very valuable Jersey cow that in some way or other broke her left hind leg. Because of certain feelings of sentiment, he was very loath to shoot her if it could possibly be avoided.

Major Lewis called in a surgeon and had the leg amputated, and then a carpenter carefully fitted a wooden leg to the stump. It healed readily, and in a very short time the cow could get around as well as any animal on the place.

Peggy lived for several years after losing her leg and died only a month ago. She would, when things did not go just right, stand on her three good legs and kick everything within reach with her artificial member.

Immigration Figures.

The highest immigration record, excluding the arrivals of aliens not so classed, is that of 1882, when the prodigious number of 788,992 came, following the previous year's 669,431, till then unprecedented. In 1883 there was a heavy falling off to 603,322, and the decrease went on until 334,203 was reached in 1886. Then the tide again turned, and with some variations another climax was reached in 1892 when the figures were 623,084, the third highest mark, and not far behind that of 1881. But then began another ebb, with 502,917 in 1893, followed by 314,467, then 279,948, then by 343,267, and now this year by an astonishing reduction to 230,832, as shown by a special bulletin of the Treasury Department.

Switzerland's Army.

Switzerland, though she spends only half a million dollars yearly on her army, can turn out 100,000 trained men in two days in case of need, and has a reserve of 100,000 men and a Landsturm of 270,000.

SOUTH CAROLINA LADIES
DON'T LIE.

Mrs. C. M. Gowan

Inman, S. C., says: I have used Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine for years, with the best of results for Sleeplessness, Nervousness, Indigestion and Swollen Feet. It cured Miss S. Hammett of a complication of diseases; she says it saved her life. I think it far excels "Zeilin's" and the "Black Draught" medicine.

Falling of the Womb.

The cases of uterine displacement are very numerous and constitute a prolific cause of intense and wide-spread suffering. Its symptoms are bearing-down or dragging sensations, pain or weakness in the back, sometimes a sense of goneness at the pit of the stomach. It may result from too frequent childbearing, wearing garments that compress the waist and abdomen, over-lifting, standing on the feet too long, and general debility.

We would strongly urge the use of Dr. Simmons Squaw Vine Wine which will purify and vitalize the blood, give tone and strength to the muscles of the uterus, so that it will be kept in place. To facilitate a quick and complete recovery, we recommend as an injection our Mexican Female Remedy, which will produce the happiest results.

M. A. Rutherford

Walhalla, S. C., writes: I have used Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine more than 20 years, for Torpid Liver and Dizziness. I take a dose every two weeks and feel all right. I know it is far Superior to "Zeilin's Regulator," in my case.

Womanhood.

The health and well-being of mankind depend upon the physical health and perfection of womanhood. Among the diseases which most impair the female constitution are leucorrhœa, irregular and painful menstruation, falling or the womb, chlorosis, scanty or too profuse menstruation. These diseases can be cured. Dr. Simmons Squaw Vine Wine is a delightful remedy to take, entirely harmless, free from narcotics, purely vegetable and produces no unpleasant after-results. It is unequalled as a uterine tonic and curative agent for all female diseases, as it is impossible for weakness of the uterus and generative organs to exist when it is faithfully and persistently used. Constipation is another bane of woman's life which can be cured by using Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine.

Henry Chower, colored, was taken from the court room at Hernando, Miss., by a mob and hanged for the seduction of 15-year-old Dovie Ferguson last Wednesday night.

Mary Ortez, an Indian woman, died at San Diego, Cal., of old age, which is variously estimated at from 102 to 146, her daughter believing her to have been at least 130 years old.

Senor Calco, the Costa Rica representative at Washington, states positively that the reports that President Iglesias of Costa Rica has proclaimed himself dictator are without foundation.

Ben Hutto, colored, laid in wait for a negro man near his house at Columbia, S. C. He fired five times at the first person who walked by. It was his wife. She was killed instantly. Hutto fled.

W. H. Bone's meat market at Dallas, Ga., was blown up by dynamite Thursday morning. There was also a notice placed upon a shade tree notifying the town council to change the town marshal.

Prof. Slaby, assisted by the military balloon corps, in experimenting with Marcon's wireless telegraph at Berlin, succeeded Friday in exchanging messages without wires at a distance of twenty-one kilometres.

Official reports from all points give accounts of many victories for Dictator Barrios' arms, and now it begins to look as if the tide of war had turned strongly against the rebels. The city of Quezaltenango, which has been held by the rebels for several days, was occupied by the Federal forces without firing a shot.

BIG INCREASE IN EXPORTS.

Bureau of Statistics Issue Statement for August.

The bureau of statistics has issued tables showing the exports and imports for August, the first full month under the new tariff law. These figures show for that month the largest exports of domestic merchandise of any August in the history of the government. The exports were $79,490,264, against $66,689,981 for August, 1896.

For the first eight months of the year the exports were $61,810,000 in excess of the first eight months of 1896, so that the bureau officials believe that the exports this year will far exceed those of last year, which was itself a record-breaking year in the matter of exports.

The value of all imports, dutiable and free, for August was $39,848,312, of which $18,629,607 were free. These figures show a decrease of about $10,000,000 below those of 1896. The decrease was due to a heavy reduction in the importation of raw wool, which decreased from 4,651,000 in August last year to 2,877,877 last August, and manufactured wool from $3,079,000 to $639,000.

Wood and manufactures thereof, from $1,968,000 to $1,271,000; manufactures of cotton, from $2,253,000 to $1,623,000; manufactures of jute, flax, hemp, etc., from $2,221,000 to $999,289; iron and steel, from $1,166,067 to $887,344, and sugars from $5,340,000 to $2,956,000.

CRIME IN KENTUCKY.

Eleven White Men Assault a Young Woman—Lynching Narrowly Averted.

The news of a shocking assault by eleven men upon the young wife of a switchman, recently married, comes from Newport, Ky.

Thomas Gleason and his wife started out the Alexandria pike to visit a friend Thursday night, when two men with revolvers, and representing themselves to be officers, separated husband and wife and dragged the shrieking woman into a field, where eleven men assaulted her. The penalty for this crime in Kentucky is death.

The men were given a preliminary hearing before Judge Bennett, who held ten of them for the grand jury without bail. The eleventh has not yet been identified. Owing to the excited state of feeling and the insecurity of the Newport jail, the men were ordered to be taken to Maysville for safe keeping.

When the time came for the removal of the ten prisoners to the Chesapeake and Ohio depot to take the train for Maysville, there was such a menacing crowd around the jail that the sheriff called out the entire police force to preserve order. The train soon came, and the prisoners were safely embarked.

AN EDITOR ASSAULTED.

Brann, the Editor of the Iconoclast, Handled Roughly by Texans.

Waco, Tex.—Wednesday afternoon W. C. Brann, editor of the Iconoclast, was publicly beaten by Judge J. B. Scarborough, George Scarborough and R. H. Hamilton. The difficulty began in the Provident building, and was continued for a half block on the street until Brann fell in a hole on the street car track.

Brann was bleeding from a dozen savage cuts on the head and face.

Brann's assailants were arrested. Judge Scarborough is a trustee of Baylor University, and had a daughter in the university. He says Brann's recent attack in his paper on the university is what caused the trouble between them. Young Scarborough and Hamilton are students in the institution, and say that Brann's attack was beyond endurance.

After the affair Brann made this statement: "I was standing at the elevator when suddenly three pistols were stuck in my face. As I was descending the steps blows were rained on my head. In front of the building stood my carriage, and I was prevented from entering it. Finally I sank from exhaustion and loss of blood. As I was helped into my carriage I shouted, 'Truth will mount again!' or something like that."

CONFESSED TO EIGHTEEN MURDERS.

A man named Gustave Muller has surrendered to the city police of Rotterdam, confessing the murder of his wife and child. As proof of the truth of his confession he produced from his pocket four human ears. The police, on searching his house, found the two bodies. Subsequently he confessed that he had also killed his parents, and mutilated their remains in the same fashion. He also made the astonishing statement that he had similarly disposed of fourteen other wives whom he had married in various parts of the world

CUBAN AFFAIRS.

Spanish Cabinet Council Grants Autonomy to the Island.

BLANCO SUCCEEDS WEYLER.

Evangelina Cisneros, the Young Cuban Patriot, Makes Her Escape From Prison. Probability That Annexation to the United States Will Be Demanded.

TO RECALL WEYLER.

It was semi-officially announced at Madrid Thursday that Captain-General Weyler will be recalled from Cuba this month, and that it is probable the cortes will be dissolved in December, and a new parliament convoked in March.

MAY YET ASK ANNEXATION.

Havana, via Key West.—A well-known American, who has long resided in the island, expressed the opinion that real differences exist among the resident Spaniards as to the desirability of autonomy. He believes it will not prove satisfactory to the radical element among the Spaniards in Cuba.

After autonomy has been granted and peace is proclaimed, he believes the radical element will probably try to promote another insurrection. In that event the conservative element and the producing body of the Spanish population would at once demand annexation to the United States.

This view is adhered to by many resident Spaniards of prominence.

AUTONOMY FOR CUBA.

At a Spanish Cabinet Council Home Rule Was Given to the Cubans.

A special from Madrid says: At a cabinet council the government decided to grant autonomy to Cuba under the suzerainty of Spain, and to continue the campaign as long as may be necessary.

Senor Gullom, minister of foreign affairs, explained to the cabinet the position of the diplomatic negotiations with the United States.

Senor Sagasta, the premier, has received a cable message from Captain-General Weyler, who offers his services to the government, and says: "I shall not resign."

EVANGELINA CISNEROS,

The Young Cuban Patriot, Makes Her Escape From Prison.

Havana, Cuba.—The beautiful young Cuban patriot, Senorita Evangelina Cossio Y Cisneros, heroine of the sensational adventure with the Spanish governor of the Isle of Pines, has escaped from the Casa de Recogdias (House of Scrapings), where she had been confined several months on a charge of conspiracy against the crown of Spain and of an attempt upon the life of Gov. Berez, governor of the Isle of Pines.

According to the statements of the jailers or attendants, she made her escape some time last Thursday night. At the morning's roll call she was missing, and when search was made for her the attendants found that one of the iron bars of the room in which she had been confined had been bent outward. The bar could not have been moved except by a great outlay of strength, and all the circumstances go to prove the co-operation of outsiders in her escape.

The authorities have not yet secured any clue as to the whereabouts of Senorita Evangelina. Several of the employes of the establishment have been arrested.

GOLD RESERVE INCREASING.

Wednesday's statement of the condition of the treasury shows: Available cash balance, $212,337,848; gold reserve, $148,699,176.

The sum of one hundred thousand pounds ($500,000) in gold coin of the United States was withdrawn from the Bank of England Wednesday for shipment to the United States.

WILL DIE IN MEXICO.

It is reported that Max Stewart, the American ex-Confederate soldier who shot and killed a policeman at Parrall, State of Chihuahua, Mex., some time ago and was sentenced to death for the crime, will be shot within a few days.

The appeal from prominent officials of the United States has been in the hands of President Diaz several weeks, and it is stated that the latter has refused the condemned man clemency for the reason that the killing of the policeman was cold blooded murder.

WEYLER DEPOSED.

Capt.-Gen. Blanco Y. Arenas Appointed Governor General of the Island.

The Spanish cabinet has decided upon the immediate recall of Gen. Weyler from Cuba. A decree will be issued appointing Capt. Gen. Blanco Y. Arenas, Marquis of Plena Plata, governor general of the island. The queen regent signed the decree Saturday. According to El Herald, 20,000 reinforcements will accompany Gen. Blanco to Cuba.

In the course of the cable message sent by Captain General Weyler to Premier Sagasta, placing his post in Cuba at the disposal of the government, he said:

"If the functions with which the government had trusted me had been merely those of governor general of Cuba, I should have hastened to resign. But the two-fold character of my mission and my duty as commander in chief in the face of the enemy prevent my tendering a resignation.

"Nevertheless, although I can rely upon the absolute, unconditional support of the autonomist and constitutional parties, as well as upon public opinion, this would be insufficient without the confidence of the government, now more than ever necessary to me after the censure which I have been made the object by the members and journals of the liberal party and by public opinion in the United States, which latter is largely influenced by the former. This confidence would be necessary to enable me to put an end to the war which has already been virtually concluded from our lines at Jucaro to Cape Antonio."

Senor Sagasta replied:

"I thank you for your explanation and value your frankness. I wish to assure you that the government recognizes your services and values them as they deserve, but it thinks a change of policy, in order to succeed, requires that the authorities should be one with the ministry.

"This has nothing to do with the confidence felt in you by the government, for the liberals have always said that the responsibility for a given policy does not fall upon those who carry it out, but upon the government inspiring it. I shall communicate your decision to the government shortly."

NOT AN ULTIMATUM.

It is semi-officially announced at Madrid that the note which General Stewart L. Woodford, the United States minister, communicated to the Duke of Tetuan, the Spanish minister for foreign affairs, is no more an ultimatum than it is a commentary document. In spirit and text it is couched in friendly terms. It expresses a wish to know when Cuba can be pacified, and requests Spain to reply before October 30 in order that President McKinley may be able to incorporate Spain's answer in his message to congress.

Premier Sagasta, in agreement with Senor Gullon, the minister for foreign affairs, proposes to send a moderate reply, declaring that Spain will await events, and is taking such measures as consideration and prudence dictates until the change of policy in Cuba smooths the relations between the two governments.

The answer of Spain will not be drawn up until the programme for the reforms in Cuba has been published.

BRYAN AT THE CENTENNIAL.

The celebration of Nebraska day at the Exposition Friday was a notable success. Thousands of people were present, every regular and special train being crowded.

William Jennings Bryan, Governor Holcomb and staff, Governor Taylor and staff, prominent citizens of Nebraska, Tennessee and adjacent States, formed a procession and paraded to the exposition grounds. Among the features of the procession were detachments of the United States cavalry, Irish Lancers and German Cuirrassiers from Buffalo Bill's Wild West show.

The exercises at the Auditorium consisted of addresses by James M. Head, Gov. Taylor, Col. A. S. Colyar, Gov. Holcombe, Hon. W. J. Bryan, Senator Allen and Hon. W. L. Stark.

A public reception was given the Nebraska visitors, followed by luncheon.

SEVEN PERISHED.

The girls' cottage at the State Industrial School at Plankinton, S. D., burned last Wednesday at midnight, and seven girls perished in the building. Twenty-five escaped in their night clothes. The origin of the fire is unknown, but was probably caused by a lamp exploding.

The bodies of the seven burned to death have not all been taken out, but the position of those found indicates that they became bewildered and had rushed to the rear, where there was no available exit. The building was a new one, and the loss is $20,000, with no insurance.

THE WEEKLY NEWS.

CLIFTON NEWTON,
Editor and Proprietor.

MONTEVALLO, ALA.,
Thursday. Oct. 14, 1897.

Entered at the postoffice at Montevallo, Ala., as second-class matter.

AN ORJECT LESSON.

A few days ago we picked up the Montevallo News, a paper but four weeks old, and we could not help but notice the difference petween the advertising patronage given that paper and the patronage of the Calera papers. The Montevallo sheet is a four page affair and only two pages printed in Montevallo and a very poor job of printing at that. However, that paper has nearly eight columns of advertising from the business men of Montevallo. Then we turn to the Calera papers: In the Sentinel we find the advertisement of one Calera business firm, and until this week we have had no advertising from the business men of Calera. Montevallo is a smaller place than Calera, too.

* * * * *

Show us a live newspaper full of advertisements and you can bank on it that it represents a business town. Show us a paper that looks starved and huugry, and consequently lifeless, and in the town that it represents you will find weeds growing on its business streets and cobwebs across the doors of the business houses.—The Sunny Southland.

The NEWS does not claim to be the largest neither the best printed paper in this country, (and after putting on our office glasses and carefully perusing the Southland, we fail to find but four pages to the aforesaid paper). Bnt this we will say, the NEWS does claim to be true to the town in which it is published and earns its daily bread, and the citizens show that they appreciate the fact by giving it their patronage and thereby helping it to further build up an already thriving town. No cobwebs can be found in the town especially in the business houses. In every business house and at any time of the day can be found purchasers buying their goods in this the most liberal and cheapest market in the State.

From every point of the compass can be heard the hammer and the saw building and beautifying the already built homes. Of course we are thankful for the outside help that gave us the prime cause for this prosperity, but yon must bear in mind, brother, that it was native pluck and indomitable courage that first brought this prime cause to the front.

And now lastly, brother, when the NEWS came into our hands the material was in a pretty bad fix—old type, (all pied) old press, old everything—and as you say two pages printed from home; but, in the near future, we are going to print every line of every page at home, and with the help of the citizens and an all-seeing Creator, you will soon see eight pages where your optics can now only behold four.

FOR ASSOCIATE JUSTICE.

The many friends of Hon H. A. Sharpe, senior judge of the city court of Birmingham, are gratified to learn that he will make the race for associate justice of the Supreme Court, subject to the State Democratic Convention. Judge Sharp's splendid abilities as a jurist and spotless character make him eminently fit for that position. He has been judge of the city court of Birmingham, with both equity and law jurisdictions, since the establishment of that court in 1883, and has probably decided more important principles of law than any nisi prim judge or Chancellor in Alabama. Judge Sharpe has never received any opposition for the senior judgeship of the city court of Birmingham, a deserved compliment. He is in the prime of life, learned, painstaking, patient and just, and his nomination would be an honor to the party as his election would be an honor to the State.

GREAT SALT LAKE.

What a rest for the eyes, so weary of seeing! What a relief for the senses, well nigh overpowered with sublimity! It has been most truthfully said that Utah is the fitting complement of Colorado. After having your sense of sublimity excited to its highest pitch, having been dazzled or stunned by the vast and magnificent grandeur of Colorado's jagged rocks, piercing pinnacles, glittering, snow capped peaks and rugged, unfathomed canyons, we glide with an inexpressable sense of relief into the verdant and smiling Utah Valley, rich in orchards, golden fields of wheat and emerald seas of alfalfa and clover. This lovely valley is bounded, or rather hemmed in, on the east by the picturesque Wahsatch range, and on the west by the lower peaks of the Oquirrh.

I will not attempt to enter into a discussion of the many points of beauty and interest inseparably connected with the beautiful city of Salt Lake, since it must needs be visited to be appreciated. They are comparatively few who have not read descriptions of the immense tabernacle with its grand organ and wonderful accustics, the magnificent temple with its golden moroni nearly two hundred and fifty feet from terra firma, the world-renowned Bee Hive, Lion and Gardo houses, where the notorious Brigham reigned monarch of more than he could possibly survey, the famous Eagle Gate, the Titheing office, and other places well known because of their connection with the Mormon church. The city, as a whole, appeared to me most picturesque, seen from Camp Douglass, the U. S. military post three miles distant, and cradled at the foot of the range more than four hundred feet above the city. This point commands a wide view, below where the spires of the city "break the lines of green and level plain," and beyond, where the great salt sea lies like molten silver at the mountains' base.

Great Salt Lake, that mysterious inland sea, lies about eighteen miles from the "city of the Mormons." En route we traverse a narrow plain hemmed in by crowding ranges and covered by a peculiarly reddish grass, and as you near the wonderful place nature seems to assme an attitude of preparation which, with your already feverish expectation, combine to arouse in your excited brain the feeling that beyond the mountains, secreted in the desert plain, something indeed wonderful awaits you.

The sides of the near hills are girded by an unbroken line or rim composed of countless boulders and pebbles, round or oval, and smooth, from the action of the waves. Several hundred feet below is a wider line, and these are the water marks of the great sea which scientists tell us once covered that entire region, and whose bed can be traced in this way for over two thousand five hundred miles. During the changes and convulsions of the geological past, this sea sank and became dry, filled again, again to be swallowed up, and then yet again to be a lake. Through constant evaporation the lake became more and more brackish, reaching its present state, that of a veritable Dead Sea. For those too far from the Atlantic and remote from the Pacific, this inland sea seems providentially placed. Here is their ocean resort with the finest bathing the world has ever known, with land-locked waves and salt sea-breezes blowing from the mountains.

But the history, description and situation is but the introduction, for the most enjoyable and at the same time most wonderful feature lies in the wonderful bath. Saltair Beach, one of the many resorts on the lake, has the reputation of being the finest resort and having the most expensive pavilion in the world—the latter costing something over a half million dollars to erect. A mile from the shore the long trains run out upon an admirably constructed pier to the grand entrance, where you alight in the bracing salt breeze, all eagerness to join the hundreds who are bobbing around in every direction on the surface of the lake. As you don your bathing suit and walk down the steps, you hesitate, but for a moment, to listen to the music of the splashing waves, and then as you step down to meet them there shoots through you a thrilling sensation of exhilaration impossible to describe. As you touch the water the attraction of gravitation seems to you to have been suspended in the buoyant depths, and you cannot but imagine that all efforts of legerity of which a cork or feather is capable, you may emulate.

I have been asked if the bathers can swim. I will say here that it is only the "conscientious and energetic" who swim, the majority being content to float, dreamily and smoothly slipping away the hours in those lucent waters in rapturous listlessness. To the "worthy neophite" I would recommend "as one who has been there," that he keep his nose and mouth well above the treacherous element, for a taste of its briny water is as a mouthful of liquid flame. Even should you disregard this precaution, I believe that you will join me in declaring this wonderful bath as the most delightful experience of your life.

DECLINE OF SPAIN.

GREAT LOSS OF TERRITORY IN A HUNDRED YEARS.

Once Owned Nearly All of Both Americas—Cuba All that Is Left—That Likely to Be Dropped Because Too Hot to Hold.

Sold and Lost in War.

In losing its hold upon Cuba Spain gives up almost its final possession in the New World. It still holds a tiny island, but uses it only as a coaling and provision station.

Columbus found a continent across the Atlantic and took possession of it in the name of his sovereign. Then Spain "owned" the New World. But other explorers immediately took possession of corners of it. England took a big slice. People came from Holland and parts of England, and, banding themselves together, finally called themselves the United States.

In 1801 Spain found herself deprived of the continent she had discovered 350 years before to a great extent. The entire eastern coast was gone, both in North and South America, and there were alarming inroads in the center. But Spain still owned California, Florida, Central America and all the western part of South America.

To-day she owns nothing. Cuba is practically gone from her. She does not govern it, neither does she get its products. The rest of North America has passed away by conquest, by grant or by purchase. South America, true, has Spaniards living in it. But they have formed independent colonies and are known as Chileans, Bolivians, Peruvians and Colombians. They love Spain, but they love themselves more. They will not pay direct tribute or join in her government.

Spain must soon withdraw to the Eastern hemisphere, where she has a lovely little peninsula, and confine herself to that territory and a few rich little islands in the Pacific that still belong to her.

In losing North and South America Spain has shown not such bad generalship, nor in the opinion of her sovereigns such bad judgment. England is the only country that has been able to divide herself gracefully and govern lands across an ocean. She does it by a broad policy that allows home rule and almost absolute independence on the part of the Governor General. Victoria Regina's name is upon the official notepaper and her head upon the money, but she does not "grind" the people or compel them to pay more than they would have to pay to their own government of they were "free."

Spain in giving up her western lands had made some pretty good deals. Others were not so good. The outcome of the Cuban war will tell whether she has profited by the Cuban struggle. If she gets it absolutely back it will be hers forever to hold in a state of menial subjection—to punish and starve for generations to come. But if she parts with it and makes it self-governing, she will not get the tribute from it which the island needs to pay its own debts.

Spain's first loss, in the early part of the century, was the great district calling itself Louisiana. Spain had got Louisiana in 1762 from the French, who originally discovered it. But when Napoleon became Consul he got Louisiana back, and the big "New Orleans territory," and held them secure. This embraced all the southern and middle portions of the United States, and was the largest and richest piece of land then known.

The United States got it from the French in 1803 by paying $15,000,000, and it is said that the Spanish have never ceased to mourn that they could not have held it until this purchase, which would have enriched their then diminished coffers greatly.

Spain's next loss was Mexico, by conquest, in 1813. On that date Mexico declared herself free. And then began a long series of wars, in which all countries joined, but which resulted in Mexican independence on hard and sure grounds in 1848. Spain lost heavily by this war.

Texas still was Spanish territory. But by act of United States Congress in 1845 Texas was purchased from Spain. It had a debt of $7,500,000, which it seemed as if it could never pay off, and Spain allowed the United States to take Texas if it would assume that debt. There was vigorous opposition at the time, as the country was in a state of financial distress. But Congress insisted, and with what good results the subsequent history of Texas shows.

Spain by this act lost a territory of 318,000 square miles, and twice as large as Ohio, New York and Pennsylvania all three put together.

Florida meanwhile had been purchased of Spain in 1819 for $5,000,000. There were 67,000 square miles, and the whole country was rich in vegetation and minerals. It was called the floral region of the New World and was named for the Spanish Easter, upon which day it was discovered.

England, all this while, had been taking pieces of country from the original Spanish owners. Part of its present Canadian territory it got because the Spanish wanted to join the English. Much it got from the French, who had taken it forcibly from the Spanish. A little it got by purchase.

So rapidly did the land pass out of the hands of the Spanish Crown that, within a generation the lower half of North America from being a Spanish country became part of the United States. California was added to the United States in 1848, after the Mexican struggle. It embraced the immense tract that is now divided up into six States, and in 1849 it became the Territory of California. A few men, now known as "the forty-niners," went there and came back with such astounding reports of the richness of its fruit, the fineness of its wood and the variety of its ore that others started out. There were fairy tales told of its glittering sand. In 1850 it became a State and soon proved to be the purse of the United States, holding money that could be traded off with foreign countries for that which the United States needed.

Neither Spain nor Mexico would have parted with California, including Oregon, if they had known what lay there. The old Spanish residents tried to keep the secret, and from that fact comes the romantic Spanish stories of the West.

WRITES JUVENILE FICTION.

Western Author Whose Stories Are Popular with Young People.

Writing juvenile stories so as to interest and hold an army of boys and girls numbering not less than 100,000 week after week and year after year, is a task involving not only skill and judgment, but positive genius. There has come about a vast change in juvenile literature during the past decade. Both the wishy-washy and the highly-spiced sensational have been relegated to the background, and freshness, originality, and, above all, vim, must permeate a story nowadays, in order to attain popularity among up-to-date youthful readers.

WELDON J. COBB.

Eastern publishers say that it is the Western reading field that pays best just now. A Western man holds the palm for juvenile fiction. Weldon J. Cobb has not been known in this line under his own name until quite recently, as the same was controlled by a large Eastern publishing house for exclusive use in the mature field, until some three years since. As Dr. Williard McKenzie, Ralph Hamilton, and Paul Ingelow, however, Mr. Cobb has since 1885 been very prominently before the reading public. To his "Ready Boys" was given the best reception attending any story of its class, while "The Tattooed Boy," which won the Munro prize after the casting of 272,000 votes, was the work of the same author. He is a busy writer, one New York publisher putting out nine books from his pen in a single year.

Mr. Cobb proceeds on the basis that the average boy of to-day is ten times better informed and more critical than the youth of the last generation. One of the best signs of the time is the getting away from the trashy and improbable, and in this work Mr. Cobb has been a crusader. In complete harmony with his readers, he gets very close to their predilections and preferences—in such near touch, indeed, that among the seven hundred odd juvenile athletic and social boys and girls' clubs of the country his name is a household word.

Some of this author's best works are "The Oldest Man in the World," "The White Dwarf Elephant," "The Gilded Boy," and his first great story, "Honor Bright," which reached a sale of nearly 200,000 copies. Mr. Cobb resides with his charming wife and two happy children in La Grange, Ill., a beautiful Chicago suburb. He is about 48 years of age, and while rather retiring in his social disposition, seems to understand how to reach the juvenile heart.

SEXTET PASSENGER CYCLE.

Will Accommodate Four People Besides the Drivers.

In Chicago the other evening a gay party of young people toured the parks with the newest invention in bicycles—a sextet passenger carrier which accommodates four people besides the drivers. The latter sit on ordinary saddles and propel the machine, while the passengers occupy three handsomely upholstered seats in the box, there being room for two in front and the other two arranged a la tandem. It is a beautiful machine, built with a view to perfect grace and strength. The frame is of regular bicycle tubing, only heavier, and has a carrying capacity of 1,200 at a speed of fourteen miles an hour on an asphalt pavement. This has been carefully tested by six of the heaviest men in the factory where the bicycle was made. It is a four-wheeled machine, with heavy spokes and steel rims, and the carriage is of well-seasoned hard wood and is fastened on the frame by clamps. It is detachable, and the machine can be ridden without it. It is a very clever invention.

NEWEST INVENTION IN BICYCLES.

BLOOD FORETELLS DISEASE.

Early Symptoms May Be Easily Recognized Under the Microscope.

The doctors of the future will probably be the preventers rather than the healers of disease, says the New York World. The early symptoms of disease can now be observed so long before the actual sickness sets in that the malady may be averted with almost absolute certainty. The approach of almost all the most dreaded diseases, it has been found, can readily be detected by observing the condition of the blood. It is believed that if men would have their blood examined by blood specialists as often as their dentists examine their teeth the prevalence of disease of all kinds would be very greatly reduced. At present there are very few blood experts practicing in the United States, but the friends of the new science claim that this novel treatment will in time take the place of the common forms of medical treatment of the day. A physician who has made several valuable discoveries concerning the effect of consumption on the blood, said to a World reporter:

SHOWING APOPLEXY.

"It is now possible for medical science to foretell the approach of the most dreaded diseases many months or even years before the ordinary symptoms appear. This new science, it seems to me, will in time revolutionize the ordinary forms of medical treatment of the day. It has been found recently that the blood not only of man but of most animals gives unmistakable signs of the approach of disease. Important discoveries in this new science have been made recently in France and Germany. I believe that I may claim the credit of first discovering the first germs of the dreaded consumption.

SHOWING RHEUMATISM OF THE HEART.

"It is only necessary to see a drop or two of a man's blood under the microscope in order to foretell disease with scientific accuracy. The earliest symptoms of apoplexy, paralysis, heart disease and consumption may be recognized very readily. It will, of course, be readily understood that it is very much easier to treat any disease if it be discovered in its earliest stages. Consumption can now be detected from the appearance of the blood a year or more before any cough sets in. At this early stage the blood will be found to contain a number of small gray granules which float around in the liquor of the blood. These often collect in round patches and in time develop into red cells and pervade the lung tissues, forming tubercles. The familiar tuberculi baccilli of consumption in turn feeds upon these cells.

SHOWING CONSUMPTION.

"I have found that when a long line or rift appears sharply dividing the blood corpuscles the patient is suffering from the incipient stages of apoplexy. If this line be long and sharply defined a fatal stroke of paralysis may soon be expected, but when the line is not clearly defined there is no immediate danger. This symptom can often be observed long before there is any indication of the dread disease. One of the most curious of these blood symptoms are the web feet in the liquor of the blood, which foretells paralysis. When these appear in large numbers it is a sure indication that the heart is not strong enough to pump the blood as it should. In blood of this sort the red corpuscles often appear to be entangled in a mass of web. These are likely to clog the muscular veins, or those of the heart. If the heart veins get clogged up paralysis follows, while if the veins of the brain are obstructed paralysis of the limbs is to be expected.

SHOWING PARALYSIS.

"Rheumatism of the heart is due to the presence of dirt or other extraneous matter in the blood. This often results in the rupture of the blood vessels. When this extraneous matter accumulates to a certain extent it produces a convulsion of pain in passing the heart, and tends to stop the action of that vigorous organ. Blood of this kind may readily be diagnosed when seen under the microscope. The blood of the human system can readily be cleaned by electricity and other agents, and be freed of all foreign matter. The time may not be far distant when people will have their blood regularly examined and cleaned."

An Italian Solomon.

The Duke of Ossone, while viceroy of Naples, delivered many quaint and clever judgments. The case is related where a young Spanish exquisite named Bertrand Solus, while lounging around in the busy part of the city, was run against by a porter carrying a bundle of wood on his shoulder.

The porter had called out, "Make way, please!" several times, but without effect. He had then tried to get by without collision, but his bundle caught in the young man's velvet dress and tore it. Solus was highly indignant, and had the porter arrested. The viceroy, who had privately investigated the matter, told the porter to pretend he was dumb, and at the trial to reply by signs to any question that might be put to him.

When the case came on and Solus had made his complaint, the viceroy turned to the porter and asked him what he had to say in reply. The porter only shook his head and made signs with his hands.

"What judgment do you want me to give against a dumb man?" asked the viceroy.

"Oh, your excellency," replied Solus, falling into the trap, "the man is an impostor. I assure you he is not dumb. Before he ran into me I distinctly heard him cry out, 'Make way.'"

"Then," said the viceroy, sternly, "if you heard him ask you to make way for him, why did you not? The fault of the accident was entirely with yourself, and you must give this poor man compensation for the trouble you have given him in bringing him here."

A Magnetic Drill.

The use of magnets for lifting purposes and as a substitute for clamps is rapidly extending, and to see the ease and facility with which a five-ton casting can be picked up and carried around the shop is very striking. With the old process holes have to be bored in masses of metal in all sorts of odd and inconvenient places and at angles so that very often it is necessary to rig clamps for holding the drilling machine to its work. The application of the portable electric motor for this purpose was a long step in advance, and this method has been of great service in dealing with the armor of the new cruisers. When a portable drill, however, is coupled with a magnetic clamping device the ideal conditions are realized. Dr. Louis Bell recently described a drill of this pattern. It consists of a motor and its worm-driven drill, together with a universal mounting of four adjustable feet. When placed fairly upon a ship's plate or other mass of iron these drills have an adhesive force of nearly half a ton each. The drill can then be adjusted and clamped by the simple turning of a key, and it will then bore holes up to an inch in diameter as fast as it can be safely worked. The whole affair weighs only about 200 pounds. These portable drills in small sizes, particularly when the clamping is magnetic, are invaluable in general machine shop practice, and in modern building work.—Engineering Magazine.

Cost of Trolley Power.

A table taken from the annual reports of the railroad commissioners of New York and Massachusetts for nearly all of the street railway properties shows the cost of the electric power required to run a car one mile, under average conditions of load, etc. The table gives the number of cars owned, the car mileage per year and the cost of the electric power per mile and per passenger. Of the nineteen companies operating less than 250,000 car miles four are obtaining power at a cost of less than 2 cents per car, six between 2 and 3 cents, five between 3 and 4 cents, one between 4 and 5 cents and three at more than 5 cents; of the five companies operating over 5,000,000 car miles per year one obtains the power for less than 1 cent per car mile, three between 1 and 2 cents, and one between 2 and 3 cents; other similar figures are also given between these limits. The Brooklyn Heights Company has the cheapest power, 0.86 per car mile, followed by the Binghamton with 0.94; the cost of power for Massachusetts roads includes repairs and depreciation of the station plant, which is not the case of the New York roads.—Street Railway Journal.

An Unfortunate Admission.

Husband (shaving)—"Confound the razor!" Wife—"What's the matter now? You're dreadfully cross-tempered." Husband—"The razor is so abominably dull!" Wife—"Dull? Why, I ripped up an old skirt with it yesterday and it cut beautifully!"—Tid-Bits.

A woman as a circus clown is worse than a woman in politics.

CHAMPION FLOATER CATCHER.

Uncle Eb Jackson of St. Louis Bears That Distinction.

After twenty-five years of hard work along the levees of South St. Louis, Uncle Ed Jackson, the undisputed champion "floater" catcher of the Upper Mississippi, has retired from active operations, says the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. Uncle Eb is 83 years old and has snatched from the arms of the mighty Father of Waters a body for every pickaninny that plays around his door on Krauss street.

The contrary current breaks sharply off from the main flow about two and a half blocks below the old uncle's home, and sweeps back to Krauss street with considerable force. The bodies of those tired souls who seek rest in the Mississippi's bosom are whirled into the pool in such numbers as to earn it the title of "Dead Man's Eddy." A floating body must be very near the Illinois shore to escape this eddying current, and once is comes in contact with it a coroner's jury finds occupation. Nothing that floats has been known to get away after once entering the eddy. Here it is 90 per cent. of the water's victims are found, and here it is for a quarter of a century the old darky has plied his gruesome vocation they call "reachin'."

UNCLE EB JACKSON.

For many years Uncle Eb had a clear field and many a "hoedown" was given in the one-story shanty on the river bank when business was good and profitable. Of late years the profits from "reachin'" have fallen off largely by reason of competition. It was this competition, however, that brought the old man the title "champion reacher." With his 83d birthday last spring came rheumatism and sore eyes, but still he stuck to his post until his rivals with their sharper visions clearly outclassed him. Then he pulled his old boat high on the shore and confided to his niece he was done.

"Yessir, I ain't goin' to reach no more," said the old darky. "It ain't no use for me, 'cause dese ole eyes is gittin' dim and I'se got a good big crick in my back. I ain't as peart as I uster be, noway. I comes right here twenty-five years ago, an' I've been round dis same spot all dat time. I uster be pretty lucky, but reachin' is like any other trade. It has its ousartinties. Sometimes I gets $10 and $20 fer a floater; den at other times dey only gives me 15 cents. I'se found all kinds. Old men an' young men, women an' girls dat was purty and ugly; white folks an' niggers; yes, an' babies, too. Babies don't pay much, neither do men folks; niggers nothing. Ef you want ter make money, reach out some white gals and women. Dere's money in dem almost every time. Dere's allus some'un lookin' for 'em and dey allus gives a poor man a little somethin' for his trouble."

Plants Bleached by Zinc Works.

A faded bunch of flowers, together with a handful of withered grass, was presented to Mayor Ziegenhein yesterday by a delegation of citizens of Carondelet. The citizens came to the Mayor with a complaint that they suffer damage and inconvenience because of the operations of the Glendale zinc works, at the foot of Nagel avenue. quantities of sulphuric gases are liberated by the furnaces of the works, and these gases are carried by the wind to points far distant. Wherever they strike, so the citizens say, vegetation is blasted, all the colors are bleached out of the flowers in the gardens, and the people are made to suffer because of the hurtful odors. The faded flowers and withered blades of grass were exhibited in evidence.—Pittsburg News.

Wild Cat Stew.

The old advice to eat with closed eyes in a French restaurant will have to be given to prospective eaters at outdoor feasts in the South, if variety continues to become more spicy down there, as witness, following the cold-meat luncheon of a Maryland physician, lately noted in the New York Sun, a "rabbit salmis," given to his friends by Judge M. S. Bringier of New Orleans, which turned out to be a wild-cat stew.

The devil was to pay last night, so there were hot times in the NEWS office for a short bit. Help us out, good friends; a good paper is a good thing but it takes good money to run it. We prefer substantial encouragement while we are alive to kind words when we are dead.

On account of ill health Sam Farrington has been obliged to resort to open air work. As is perhaps well known to most of us, Mr. Farrington was employed by C. L. Chalifoux & Co', otherwise known as C. L. Meroney & Co.

There is nothing like a reputation fair dealing and low prices and for pretty girls (with apologies to A. P. I.) A merchant informs us that a customer (we presume a young man) came thirty miles, fifteen through the country and fifteen by rail, to purchase a suit of clothing in Montevallo. He went back more than pleased.

SCHOOL ITEMS.

Rev. M. P. Reynolds preached a very able sermon to the girls at the Baptist church last Sunday. Bro Reynolds is a growing preacher, and best of all one of the most devout men in this whole section. Montevallo is proud of him.

No town of its size can boast of better churches than Montevallo. We have heard some of the girls express themselves as being much pleased with their church privileges.

Miss B. M. Haley has charge of all the Latin classes in the Polytechnic. She has sixty five girls in this department.

Miss Stallworth, of Monroe county, is the assistant teacher of mathematics. She is a charming young lady, and gives dignity to her profession.

Miss Fitts is another new teacher. She is assistant teacher of English. The girls already speak of her as one of the best teachers they ever saw.

We have not had the pleasure of meeting Miss Alston, of Clayton, Ala. She, we understand, is teacher of Geology and other of the sciences. Her father, Hon. A. H. Alston, is a member of the board of trustees Judge Alston has ever been a true and tried friend of the Montevallo school, and no one has a warmer place in the hearts of the Montevallo people than does he. The people of Montevallo would rejoice to see him circuit judge of the 3rd district.

The school has five teachers of music—the best teachers in the land.

MONEY ISN'T NEEDED.

It doesn't take money to run a newspaper, it can be run without money. It is a charitable institution, a begging concern, a highway robber, B'Godfrey. The newspaper is a child of air, a creature of a dream. It can go on and on and on, when any other concern would be in the hands of a receiver and wound up with cobwebs in the window. It takes gall to run a newspaper. It takes a scintillation, acrobatic imagination, and a half dozen white shirts, and a rail road pass to run a newspaber. But—Heavens to Betsy and six hands round, who ever needed money in conducting a newspaper?

Kind words are the medium of exchange that do the business for the editor—kind words and church social tickets. When you see an editor with money, watch him. He'll be paying bills and disgracing his profession. Never give money to an editor. Make him trade it out. He likes to swap.

Then when they die, after having stood around for years and sneered at the editor and his little jim crow paper, be sure and have your wife send in for three extra copies by one of your weeping children, and when she reads the generous and touching notice about you, forewarn her to neglect to send fifteen cents to the editor. It would overwhelm him.

Money is a corrupting thing. The editor knows it, and what he wants is your heartfelt thanks. Then he can thank the printers, and then they can thank their grocers Take your job work to the job office and then come and ask for half rates for church notices.

The Lord loves the cheerful giver. He'll take care of all the editors. Don't worry about the editor. He has a charter from the state to act as a doormat for the community. He'll get the paper out somehow, and stand up for you when you run for office, and lie about your daughter's wedding, and blow about your sons when they get a $4 per week job, and weep over your shriveled soul when it is released from your grasping body, and smile at your wife's second marriage. He'll get along. The Lord alone knows how—but the editor will get there somehow.

RATTERMANN & LUTH WHOLESALE BUILDERS, CINCINNATI,

Florida's Haven for Criminals.

Tampa is entitled to the distinction of being the best place for criminals in the United States. The cause of this is the inefficiency of our courts of justice. Crimes are not punished. Bad men are imprisoned, but they live better in jail than outside. As birds in a cage sing and grow fat, so these men play the fiddle and chew tobacco, and have a good time at the people's expense.—Tampa News.

Sound Blindness.

We have all heard often enough of color blindness. Many people, although they possess perfect eyesight for reading or seeing long distances, yet can't for the life of them distinguish green and red, and many other pairs of colors. Lately it has been found that some suffer from an exactly similar affection of the hearing powers—that is, an inability to distinguish particular shades of sound arising from some obscure affection of the ear, yet quite distinct from deafness. One boy, in doing dictation, always spelt "very" "voght." He could not distinguish at all between the sounds of "very," "perry" and "polly," and yet he could hear at as great a distance as anybody. Another youngster would spell "different" "drifent." He said that was how it sounded. And several others ran the letters "r," "n" and "f" together in a hopeless way.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

Happenings of a Week Throughout Our Commonwealth.

A YOUNG MAN SUICIDES.

Green Hutto, living two miles from Abbeville, committed suicide a few days ago. He got into some scrape with a Mr. Davis, being charged with taking some goods from him. He was arrested, and while under arrest took a great dose of morphine, which, in twenty-four hours, laid him out. The poor fellow had been drinking, and his arrest mortified him very greatly, and rather than live after it he chose to fly to the ills he knew not of.

FOR BETTER FIELDS.

Sixty-eight families of miners from the Jellico district have come to work in the mines at Corona. The miners of that district have been leaving for two months, and there are now only a few left of the 2,500 who went on a strike May 1, most of them having gone to Virginia and Alabama.

The men have given up all hope of settlement, and there is little prospect of much work being done in the Jellico district this winter.

ROASTED TO DEATH.

Two prisoners were roasted to death in the burning jail at Opelika Wednesday night. The jail was a dry pine building, and burned like tinder. Laura Bennett, for drunkenness, and Jim Ferguson, for street work due, were the only prisoners injured. They were shackled to the floor, hence could not help themselves, and were burned to crisps. When the fire company had reached the spot there was nothing to do, as the building was nearly a pile of ashes.

UNEARTHING A GRAVEYARD.

An uncanny state of affairs is reported about five miles from Montgomery on the Norman bridge wagon road. It seems that the county has men engaged in filling a ravine of some sort in or near the roadway, and in order to get earth for use in filling the laborers have resorted to a neighboring hillside, which was years ago used as a graveyard. According to reports, the men, with their big plows and scrapers, have dug into eight or ten graves and have distributed human bones all around. There is some talk of the county officials being prosecuted.

WON'T GIVE UP THE PROPERTY.

A special from Guntersville says that Maj. Hugh Carlisle is having great difficulty in taking possession of the 125,000 acres of railroad land he gained recently in a suit against the Tennessee and Coosa River Railroad Company.

The lands given Major Carlisle were in dispute over twenty years ago, and during this time a large number of settlers secured what they thought to be a clear title to various tracts and erected houses thereon. The majority of them refused to vacate when the Federal Court served a writ of ejectment upon them.

The offenders have been cited to appear before Judge Bruce at Birmingham next week and show cause why they should not be held in contempt of court.

MURDER AT A COUNTRY DANCE.

At a country dance given near Seenville Thursday night, Sid Duarf, a wealthy planter, was shot and instantly killed by a man named Ekaf, a Russian. The trouble arose over Duarf's partner in the dance, who is a sister of the planter's slayer.

Ekaf had heard some ugly talk concerning his sister. He thought that Duarf was the originator of it. When asked concerning it at the dance Duarf denied it, but Ekaf, becoming enraged, pulled his pistol and shot him. The murderer then turned to flee, and M. L. Hatton attempted to intercept him. Ekaf also shot him, producing wounds from which he died in a few hours.

THE WEEK'S CROP REPORT.

The following is the regular weekly crop and weather bulletin:

The week ending October 4 was a generally favorable harvesting week over the entire section, and while it was favorable for maturing crops, showers were so light and so widely scattered as to be of no material aid to late crops or fall plowing, and very little of the latter has been accomplished.

Cotton is very nearly all open; picking has been vigorously pushed during the week, and is well advanced in the most backward portions of the State; it is practically finished in several southern counties, and the entire crop will be gathered during the current month; there is no improvement in the prospective yield, which is less than anticipated in some localities where an average crop was expected; the yield for the State will undoubtedly fall decidedly short of an average one. Corn is harvesting a lighter yield than anticipated, and will fall short of an average, and will not be enough for home use in many localities. The fodder crop this year is an unusually large and good one, and a large crop of hay has been made.

Cane has been damaged by continued dry weather, and will be but a fair yield. Sorghum has yielded fairly well, but cow peas, potatoes and late vegetables are below an average; pastures are generally poor, and stock water is scarce.

QUARANTINE MODIFIED.

The State quarantine against Atlanta has been raised. Representatives of the board of health met with the governor, and the troublesome blockade against people and freights from Georgia's capital was removed after very little discussion. The effect of the action of the authorities is to take Atlanta out of the list of infected cities, and all persons from there who have not within ten days been in any other district infected with yellow fever will be permitted to enter the State. The embargo on freights is removed, excepting as to beds, bedding, carpets and other household fabrics.

CONFEDERATE PENSIONS.

The auditor has announced that the Confederate pension warrants for the year will go out within the next week or ten days, and that there is an increase of about 1,800 names on the roll. This increase will cut the approximation down so that each pensioner will only receive $12 or $13 instead of about $17, as heretofore. The auditor is mailing the following circular letter, which explains itself: "Enclosed please find a copy of a letter this day mailed the judge of probate of your county, with the request that you aid us in giving the Alabama pensioners their small pension without cost or expense to them. These warrants will be received from you by the treasurer as cash. I, therefore, request that you not only receive them in payment of taxes, but that you cash them when convenient to do so. Besides being an accommodation to the pensioner, it will save the State the cost of transmitting the money."

Danger in Bathing.

In regard to the effect of bathing upon the ear, it is unquestionably bad. The water which enters the auditory canal causes inflammation, which passes through the drumhead into the tympanum and causes suppuration. Another danger in bathing is that the water is often dirty and causes a moldy growth in the ear, which produces a diseased condition. In regard to diving or surf bathing, the ear should always be protected from the dangers of concussion by a wad of absorbent cotton, as there is otherwise danger of breaking the drumhead. Still another phenomenon resulting from constantly subjecting the ear to water is the bony growth found quite commonly in the ear. The Ancient Peruvians and American Indians suffered greatly from this abnormal growth, as is demonstrated by an examination of their skulls.

The best acquaintance a man has is the stranger who knows neither good nor bad of him.

Had No Use for Anthracite.

Edmund Carey, of Benton, is in this city this week attending court. He was one of the early residents of Wilkesbarre, and was born Aug. 12, 1822, on a farm at the lower end of town, now known as Carey avenue, which has been named after the family. His father, George Carey, was one of the settlers who had the handling of the first anthracite coal in Wyoming valley. He helped open a stripping in Pittston township, now known as Plains township, in 1815, and in the spring of that year loaded a raft with several others and took it down the Susquehanna to Harrisburg, where they sold the raftload of forty tons of anthracite for $10. They were discouraged at such remuneration and left the transportation of coal dormant until 1820, when they took another raftload down and failed to find a buyer. They were so discouraged that they dumped their load of black diamonds into the Susquehanna at Harrisburg, and as far as these early pioneer shippers were concerned, the opening up of a coal market was ended.—Wilkesbarre Record.

The Union Jack.

The origin of the word "Jack" is unknown. The meaning, as understood to-day, is "something shown," and in this sense the application of the word is now limited to the Union flag. Some have supposed it to be derived from the jack or jacque, the tunic worn in early time by men-at-arms, those of Englishmen being decorated with the cross of St. George; which jackets, when not in use, were hung in rows, side by side, thus displaying the blood-red cross, which was at once their banner and their shield. Others regard the name as coming from that of the sovereign James (Jacobus or Jacques), who was the first to hoist it as a national emblem.

How to Laundry Fancy Linen.

To wash embroidered linens so as not to fade the colors, fill a tub half full of warm water, to which add a little Ivory Soap. Wash each piece through the suds carefully, rinse in blue water, to which a little thin starch is added. Hang in the shade to dry. Iron on the wrong side, pressing down heavily to bring out the stitches, thus restoring their original beauty.

ELIZA R. PARKER.

The Extent of His Superstition.

To a little extent I am superstitious, says a Virginian. I moved into a new house a couple of years ago, and somehow things seemed to grow worse constantly. First it was one thing, and then it was another. I mentioned the matter to an old colored auntie, who did our laundry work, and she told me it was because there was no toad frog in the cellar. She said it was good luck for a new house to have a toad in the cellar and that many builders always left a frog in the cellar when they finished a house. As it was such a simple matter to set things right I caught a toad and put it in the cellar, and, strangely enough, things began running all right immediately. Since then my cellar has never been without a toad frog, and to that extent I am superstitious.

Paved with Grass.

It is proposed to pave London roads with compressed grass blocks. The claim is made that the pavement of these blocks is noiseless and elastic, resists wear well, and is impervious to heat and cold. Its manufacturers guarantee its life for five years.

Every one believes he does not "get the credit" he deserves.

Some things may be done better in Canada than in this country. For example, there is the gold commissioner. He sits on the case on the ground where the dispute arises, hears evidence while the witnesses are yet alive and available, uses his own common sense and good judgment and renders his decision in time for the legal owner to work his claim next day. The chances are ten to one that the gold commissioner gives better satisfaction generally in a mining camp than could any poking process of appeal.

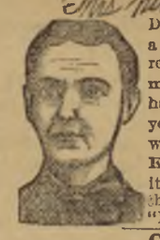
TEXAS LADIES SPEAK THE TRUTH.

Mrs. Priscilla Scales



De Leon, Tex., writes: I am a widow, and can strongly recommend Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine, it having Saved my Life 6 years ago, when I was down with Liver Complaint and Kidney Disease. I think it a far better medicine than that made by "Zeilin" and "Black Draught."

Gestation:

During the period of gestation the tension upon the muscles and ligaments of the womb is greatly increased and the blood vessels are taxed to their utmost. If there is any tendency to uneasiness or pain, we recommend frequent warm injections of our Mexican Female Remedy and two or three doses, every day, of Dr. Simmons Squaw Vine Wine. This treatment will strengthen the ligaments, will assist in holding the uterus in place, lessen pain, make the uterus more pliable and elastic, and prepare the organs for the final effort. It also lessens the danger of death to child and mother, and fortifies her against liability to convulsions, flooding and other dangerous symptoms, and with ordinary prudence guarantees a rapid recovery.

J. W. Tolliver

Celeste, Tex., says: Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine is the best in the world for Biliousness, Indigestion and Torpid Liver. Have used it 10 years, and recommend it to my friends, and they all praise it. I think there is as much difference between it and "Zeilin's" and "Thedford's" as between day and night.

Paleness.

Anæmia is a condition often called "poverty of blood" from deficiency of the red corpuscles which give to this fluid its characteristic color. It arises from insufficiency of assimilation of the proper materials of food to replenish the blood, as in chlorotic girls. It may occur in persons who have long suffered with hemorrhoids, or in women from repeated discharges of blood from the uterus. The lips and tongue lose their natural red color and become white and the face looks like wax.

The most efficient remedy for this condition is Dr. Simmons Squaw Vine Wine. The improvement produced by its use is frequently almost magical; an enfeebled heart becomes strong and equable in its action, digestion improves, the lips and cheeks lose their pallor, and the eye becomes bright and the step elastic.

ROUGH TIMES IN TENNESSEE.

Negroes and White Caps Have a Pitched Battle.

Levans, Carroll county, Tenn., was the battleground last week for waring factions, and one dead and four probably fatally wounded is the result. A large party of whitecaps went to the home of Dot Prince, a negro, and riddles the doors and windows of his cabin with bullets, breaking his arm in the engagement. The negro, with his arm dangling by his side, reached the window and fired repeatedly into the gang, groans and yells testifying to his deadly aim.

The morning sun disclosed a horrible sight. William Sires, a respected white man, was lying dead in a pool of blood, surrounded by four companions dying from hideous wounds. Three of the wounded men will die.

Intense excitement prevails, and a race war is predicted, as the whitecaps are swearing vengeance on the negroes, who defiantly dare them to do their worst.

The negro Prince is fortified within his cabin and apparently proposes to defend his home to the death.

The whitecaps have notified the negroes to leave the county on several occasions and threats are made to exterminate them if they refuse to leave.

Sires was literally shot to pieces and died instantly.

Split in Two.

A terrible accident occurred at a saw mill, some fifteen or twenty miles from Sparta, Tenn., last Saturday, in which Bud Russell lost his life.

In getting out some heavy timber they were using trucks. It seems that Russell got caught on the carriage somehow, and was carried to the saw, which struck him on the left leg, splitting it, and extending up his body, cut his right breast in two and then crossed to the right side, coming out at the neck. The right and left sides were hurled some distance in opposite directions. The sawyer seemingly knew nothing of it until he saw the pieces flying through the air. Russell was about 30 years old and leaves a wife and one child.

STEAMER SINKS.

Nearly 200 Lives Lost by the Fearful Disaster.

THE SHIP WAS OVERLOADED.

A Number of Spanish Soldiers and Several Civilians Among Those Who Perished—The Sinking Occurred About Eight Miles Off the Cuban Coast.

The coasting steamer Triton, from Havana to Bahia Honda, province of Pinar del Rio, has been wrecked between Dominica and Mariel, on the north coast of Havana province. The steamer went ashore Friday morning during heavy weather, grounding about eight miles from the coast. The purser and one of the passengers have arrived at Mariel. They say they have no knowledge regarding the fate of the captain, fifty passengers, soldiers and civilians, and the thirty members of the crew of the Triton. The missing passengers include several well-known merchants.

The Spanish gunboat Maria Cristina and the tug Louise have left Havana port for the scene of the wreck.

Later.—It is now said that the Triton had on board over 200 passengers, soldiers and civilians, and it is feared that they have all perished, in addition to the thirty men composing the steamer's crew.

Owing to the heavy sea that was running the gunboat Christina found it impossible to reach the scene of the disaster until Friday night.

Only the purser of the ship and one passenger were saved.

Among those who were lost were two navy and two army officers, a commissary official and seventy-seven privates.

On board of the Triton was $31,600 in silver to be used for the payment of the Spanish military and naval forces.

The Triton, it is said, was overloaded. She carried a large quantity of ammunition and groceries, and had on board ninety-three rifles for the government troops.

DALTON IS EXCITED.

Prominent Merchants Alleged to Be Participants in Shady Work.

T. R. Ellison, a merchant of Whitfield county, Ga., and John H. Bender, formerly a merchant of Dalton, and son of a wealthy citizen of that city, were both found guilty of receiving stolen goods in the train-robbery cases now on trial at Dalton, Ga.

T. J. Peebles, at present the local agent of the Western & Atlantic railroad at Dalton, is on trial for the same offense. The greatest excitement exists in the little town, as the evidence is being slowly elicited, showing complicity of leading citizens, whether knowingly or not, in the extensive robberies that have been going on for years, and for which the Southern railroad has had to pay large sums to shippers and consignees.

Jesse Langston, convicted Thursday of receiving stolen goods, is a wealthy merchant of Whitfield county. He was fined $750 by the court and sentenced to one year in the penitentiary, conditioned on his paying the fine within the next ten days. His sentence has thrown consternation among the other accused business men, which was greatly emphasized when it was announced that Drew M. Peebles, a leading merchant, member of the city council and candidate for mayor, was found to be missing from the city, and that forfeiture was taken in one case against him.

ENGLAND WILL CONFER.

Experts Start for America to Discuss the Seal Fisheries Question.

The British foreign office Friday intimated to the United States ambassador, Col. John Hay, that a meeting of seal experts of Great Britain, Canada and the United States will occur as agreed upon by the Marquis of Salisbury.

It is learned that Prof. Dancy Thompson, the seal expert of the British foreign office, starts for the United States immediately.

Korea an Empire.

The Korean legation at Washington received an official cable stating:

"King proclaimed himself emperor from this date, Oct. 15, 1897."

The transition which Korea makes from a kingdom to an empire is felt to have considerable significance in Oriental afiairs, although the cable to the legation gives no details of the change, and the officials here are without any information as to the causes leading up to it. It is understood, however, to be a part of the progressive policy on which Korea has embarked, following the lead of Japan and China.

YELLOW FEVER SITUATION.

Making Its Appearance in Other Towns On and Near the Coast.

The yellow fever situation at New Orleans is still very critical. Friday the number of cases reported reached high water mark, 48 cases developing on that day, and 3 deaths occurring. Total cases of yellow fever to date; 774; total deaths from yellow fever to date, 84; total cases absolutely recovered, 351; total cases under treatment, 339.

Nineteen at Biloxi.

The board of health of Biloxi reports new cases 19, total cases 374, total deaths 14, now under treatment 89.

Scranton had 9 new cases Friday. No deaths.

McHenry reports 2 new cases.

No new cases have developed at Galveston, the four cases passed on by Dr. Guiteras having recovered.

The situation at Edwards, is growing more favorable, 8 cases having been reported for Friday.

Six suspicious cases at Cayuga have been reported for investigation.

Situation at Mobile.

Only 5 cases were reported at Mobile Friday. The official bulletin issued by the board of health shows that there have been a total of 152 cases in this city, with 21 deaths to date.

Eight cases have been reported at Flomaton, Ala., seventy miles north of Mobile, and 10 at Wager, with 1 death.

THREE KILLED.

Collapse of the Robinson Opera House in Cincinnati.

"The Dangers of a Great City," on the stage ot Robinson's opera house, was cut short in its performance by a tragic realization of the actual dangers of a great city. The house was fairly well filled.

A little before 8:50 o'clock a lady in the audience says she heard a creeping noise, which continued for five minutes before the catastrophe.

Presently the plastering began to fall in small particles at first, but enough to alarm some of the timid or cautious, who retired. A little later the plastering began to shower down in great chunks.

Suddenly, and with a crash, the great central truss of the ceiling, eighty feet long and thirty feet wide, came plunging down. The ends of it struck on the two gallery wings and doubled it up in the center, sending it down into the parquet with a great scattering of joists and timbers. Nothing on the stage was harmed.

There were moans from the injured. The salvage corps with its wagon was first on the ground and it was followed by all the police patrol wagons, who carried the injured to the Cincinnati hospital.

The list at the hospital showed three dead, five dangerously, if not fatally wounded, and twenty-six more or less seriously injured

This disaster recalls one which took place in the same building in Februarry, 1876, when a score or more were killed in a rush to get out of the building on account of a false alarm of fire.

WILL STAND TOGETHER.

Five Brotherhoods Organized Into a Solid Compact.

At a meeting of the representatives of railroad workers at Peoria, Ill., Friday the International Federation of the standard railroad organizations was accomplished. After many years of failure to harmonize, the several orders have reached an agreement which amalgamates and unites them, and creates the greatest and strongest body of organized railroad labor men ever formed.

This task has just been performed by the conference of the grand officers and representatives of the several orders which have been in session in Peoria all this week. The conference was composed of committees representing the following organizations:

Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, Order of Railway Conductors, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and Order of Railroad Telegraphers.

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers will act on the question at their convention in St. Louis next May, and will at that time become a party to the federation.

Weyler Not Perturbed.

Captain General Weyler's rule in Cuba ended with the past week. General Castellanos will act as captain general until General Blanco's arrival in Havana from Spain on Saturday next, when he will immediately take the oath of office. General Weyler, although expressing regret that he has been recalled before he had succeeded in crushing the rebellion, takes the matter philosophically, and is making preparations to sail October 20. In the meantime the rebels show no signs of willingness to negotiate for peace on the basis of autonomy.

ONLY FAIR.

Activity of Merchandise Somewhat Less Pronounced.

WHEAT EXPORTS EXPAND.

Unseasonable Weather Has Had an Unfavorable Influence on the Distribution of Merchandise—Indications of a Smaller Cotton Yield Than Previously Compiled.

Bradstreet's trade review says:

The activity in staple lines of merchandise is less pronounced than a month ago, due to interior merchants having supplied their demands for the time, a gradual increase of the territory included by the yellow fever quarantine, the low price of cotton, a tendency in the Missouri river valley and spring wheat states to hold wheat for higher prices and the farmers being busy with fall planting.

Higher prices have an unfavorable influence on the distribution of merchandise throughout the central west and at Chicago and St. Louis sales have fallen off.

A well known representative of Bradstreet's, after extended investigation, gives reasons for anticipating a much smaller yield of cotton than trade requirements indicates. He looks for the Texas crop not to exceed 2,000,000 bales, or less than last year, while the Missouri valley will produce less than an average crop and Arkansas be in less favorable situation than last year. The long and severe drought of the latter part of the season, he says, destroyed all hope of a top crop and will materially cut short the latter yield.

The position of the cotton goods industry is no more favorable, but Fall River manufacturers report business brisk, prices steady and unwillingness by merchants to accept further orders.

Advances of Bessemer are reported. Pig iron and steel billets meet with quick sales, but prices are firmly held. Some steel mills are not able to keep up with orders. The domestic consumption of pig iron last month was extraordinarily heavy and promises to greatly stimulate production.

With the slackening off in the rate of distribution of merchandise the upward movement of prices is correspondingly checked, and in this the third week in succession, the number of staples for which quotations are lower are greater than those that are higher or unchanged. There are nominal advances for lard and men's shoes, but prices for pork, sugar, other forms of iron and steel than those named, for copper, lumber, coal, hides and wool are unchanged. Quotations are lower for butter, potatoes, wheat, corn, oats, flour, beef, coffee, cotton, print cloths and lead.

Wheat exports have again expanded, the total for the present week being among the largest on record. The total exports of wheat (flour included as wheat) this week from both coasts of the United States aggregated 6,039,720 bushels, against 4,825,641 bushels last week, 4,156,817 bushels in this week a year ago, 2,409,000 bushels in 1895, 3,192,000 bushels in 1894, 2,709,000 bushels in 1893 and 3,270,000 bushels in 1892.

Corn exports were 2,224,000 bushels this week, against 2,109,000 last week, 1,711,000 bushels a year ago, 1,680,000 bushels in 1895, 113,553 bushels in 1894, 1,123,000 bushels in 1893 and 701,000 bushels in 1892.

There are 196 business failures reported throughout the United States this week, compared with 237 last week, 279 in the week a year ago, 289 two years ago, 253 three years ago and 340 four years ago.

There are 44 business failures reported throughout the Dominion of Canada this week, compared with 45 last week, 30 in the week a year ago and 37 two years ago.

Where Love Has Lingered.

Benjamin F. Hunt, a former resident of Rochester, N. Y., now in his 85th year, is about to wed Mrs. Julia A. Sherman, of Watertown, whose age is given as ninety years. The event is set for the 20th instant. The bride-elect is said to be possessed of a fortune of more than $1,000,000.

JUSTICE FIELD RETIRES

From the Supreme Court of the United States.

It was officially announced at the supreme court Thursday that Justice Stephen J. Field, of California, had notified President McKinley of his intention to retire as a member of the court and had informed his colleagues of this fact.

It is expected that his successor will be nominated by the president immediately after the convening of congress in December and that Attorney General McKenna, also of California, will be named for the office.

THE FIELDS OF CLOVER.

Oh, for one more happy day,
To run and romp and play,
But in the fields, where over and over could roll once more in the fragrant clover!
For never was a joy
Like being a boy,
Out in the fields of clover.

Oh, for one more barefoot run,
After the long hot day is done,
Down in the fields of fragrant clover,
While by my side my old dog Rover
Runs after the cows
Who stop to browse,
Out in the fields of clover!

Oh, for one more vigorous swim
In the deep old pool where the light is dim,
Where down I plunge, over and over,
And when I come up, I smell the clover,
As the wind blows fresh
On my naked flesh,
Out from the fields of clover!

Oh, for one more rest at night
With my heart as free and light
As in the days now long passed over
When I played in the fields of fragrant clover!
For never was joy,
Like being a boy,
Out in the fields of clover!
—Everywhere.

HUMOROUS.

Bobby—Pa, what is an heir-at-law? Pa—Usually the lawyer, Bobby.

"In my veins," said the mosquito proudly, "flows the blood of the best families."

"Say, pa, what kind of pans do miners use when panning gold?" "Dust pans, my son."

"There is only one way to tell a mad dog. "How's that?" "Tell him by a long-distance telephone."

"How would you destroy the English sparrows, professor?" "Make it fashionable to wear them on women's hats."

"What do you consider the most important preparation for a family picnic?" "Finding a man who is willing to carry the coffee-pot."

"They say Nancy cried for two days after her wedding." "What on earth was the trouble?" "The only piece of cut glass she received was a rolling-pin."

Wife—How people gaze at my new dress. I presume they wonder if I've been shopping in Paris. Husband—More likely they wonder if I've been robbing a bank.

The Sunday school class was singing "I want to be an angel." "Why don't you sing louder, Bobby?" asked the teacher. "I'm singing as loud as I feel," explained Bobby.

When Delia meets me with a kiss
Her tender greeting soothes me not;
For well I know the truth is this:
She wants some money—wants a lot.

Mrs. Justwed—How do you like the cakes I made for your breakfast this morning. Mr. Justwed (with a groan)—Well, I used to think a person couldn't eat his cake and have it too.

Husband—Dearest Mathilde, I have made up my mind to grant all your wishes. You shall go to the mountains six weeks, you shall have a new dress and the parlor shall be supplied with new rococo furniture. Wife—Oh, Charles! What have you been doing?

"Where was the prince wounded?" asked the friend of one of the seconds in a political duel. "Where was he wounded?" repeated the second, absently, as he looked up from a mass of manuscript. "If I am not mistaken it was about the beginning of the last paragraph in the second column."

As the man in the white flannel suit went by she turned away and also turned up her nose. "He doesn't amount to anything as a tennis player," she said contemptuously. "How do you know?" demanded her country cousin, who was not posted in such matters. "Why, he doesn't turn up the bottoms of his trousers," she replied with conviction.

New Way to Light Matches.

A profitable noonday pastime among the gamins who frequent the vicinity of Reading Terminal never fails to draw a large and interested crowd, says the Philadelphia Press. One of the boys will lay ten matches in an even row on the hard asphalt. The heads of the matches all point the same way, and the matches are about an inch apart. Then the youngster swings a cord on the end of which is fastened a piece of lead.

Swinging the cord rapidly, he handles it so deftly that he hits at will the head of each match and sets it blazing. He makes an agreement with the crowd that if he succeeds in igniting in this manner each of the ten matches without missing he is to have ten cents. Usually the business men who watch the performance are so well pleased that the gamin gets considerably more than a dime for his trouble and skill.

Clocks That Turn Out the Lights.

In these days of electricity it is not essential to have somebody turn out the lights. Time switches are made which can be attached to a clock and made to turn out electric lights at any desired hour. Suppose, for instance, the lights are in a show window, and it is desired to put them out at midnight. At that hour the clock closes a circuit, permitting the passing of an electric current to the switch, which, thus released, cuts off the electric light current, and so puts out the lights—New York Sun.

THE WEEKLY NEWS.

CLIFTON NEWTON,
Editor and Proprietor.

MONTEVALLO, ALA.,
Thursday, Oct. 21, 1897.

Entered at the postoffice at Montevallo, Ala., as second-class matter.

Advertisers Will do well to get our rates and place their cards in the NEWS. There is no better medium for advertising.

Several cases of yellow fever have been reported in Montgomery.

We hear some strange things. If we knew they were true we might air them a little.

Of course we are Democrat, but we will not make war against no party that endorses the silver schedule. We ought to have a meeting and organize a Democratic silver club.

Seven cases of smallpox have developed in Atlanta within the past few weeks, and the board of health held a meeting Saturday morning and decided to begin compulsory vaccination throughout the city at once.

A fatal wreck on the M & B railroad, near Selma, occurred on Friday evening last, resulting in the death of O. J. Munn, engineer, and Jerry Godley, fireman and injuring the conductor, flagman and two passengers.

We would like to know why Montevallo is not incorporated. We understand that Calera thinks she is bigger than Montevallo. What's the matter with taking in Aldrich and Brierfield, hey? If the Sunny Southland is right, Calera is a poor place.

The Populists said that when the Democratic party endorsed the free and unlimited coinage of silver at a ratio of 16 to 1 they would come back to the old party. Now is the time for us all to come together, regardless of parties, and make a strong fight against the monopoly power. And whatever we do, let's renominate Gov. Joseph F. Johnston.

PROFANITY.

Of all the useless, worthless, good-for nothing and totally depraved habits, to which men bow in willing, voluntary bondage, the habit of profanity heads the list, and crowns the whole. For nearly all evil habits there can be some sort of an apology offered; but for this we have never heard the first attempt at a defense.

Profanity stands out a monstrous deformity in human language, with none to plead for its life, or tell a single merit due to its being. In the use of profane language, no idea is to be expressed, no taste is to be gratified, no friendship obtained, no wealth to be earned, no possible good, either real or imagined, is had in view.

Of all sinners, profane swearers serve the devil for less than any other class. Indeed, they serve for nothing, run their own risks, and bear all expenses at that. Profanity is used, like all by-words, in consequence of a lack of wisdom, evil associations and a want of good sense to supply the place of ideas. When there is a scarcity of ideas, these profane words are thrown in to keep up the sound, and to give the appearance of thoughts. But they are nothing more than wicked cheats, playing a game of deception, by trying to palm off a blustering sound for a good thought.

Profanity is a good witness of a terrible death of wisdom, foul associations, hot passions and crooked moral growth. Besides being a notorious cheat, it is an idle and wicked use of the name of the greatest and best Being in the universe, the best and truest Friend of every human creature. In this no one can believe there is any good. It breeds contempt for God, for His sacred name, and for all holy things. It outrages the best and holiest feelings of our moral natures, and our reverence for God. It confounds all our ideas of justice, goodness and gratitude. It offends the ears of our best earthly friends, God's holiest and loveliest men and women, and sends a thrill of anguish through their hearts. It is opposed to all ideas of courtesy, to all rules of politeness, and to all regulations for gentlemanly behavior.

Therefore let us not fail to attire our thoughts in the most pure and tasteful garments, and adorn them with the most refined beauties of language.

"Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain: for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain."—Ex. 20:7.

AMONG OUR EXCHANGES.

The Age-Herald improves with every issue.

What's the matter with the Sunny Southland?

The Columbiana Chronicle is up to date—it looks like prosperity.

The Shelby Sentinel has enlarged. Bro. Graham gets up a good paper.

BLOCTON ITEMS.

Cotton is still declining in price.

Last Saturday was pay-day at Belle Ellen.

Why can't West Blocton get a postoffice?

Died, in Centreville, on Saturday last, Mrs. J. T. Casey.

Mr. John Quinn, of Woodstock, called to see us this week.

Mr. L. P. Wallace, of River Bend, called to see us this week.

William Canterberry, of Vance was in town a few days since.

We regret to learn of the serious illness of W. W. Yeager, of Centreville.

Messrs. Burgess Little and Dennis Mitchell, of Montevallo, spent last Sunday with home folks in Blocton.

Died, near Blocton, on the 14th inst., of typhoid fever, Mr. Judge Miller. He was only in the bloom of life.

We are glad to state that the little child of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Dyer, who has been sick so long, is improving.

Why don't our commissioners build sheriff Vance a dwelling house like Shelby and other counties have done for their sheriffs?

Well, Mr. Coroner Walters, why don't you publish the verdict of the jury about the Belle Ellen fire? Are you going to whitewash?

Don't fail to subscribe for the News-Herald and get a nice family Bible or five of the best novels for $1.00. This is a good offer.

Cotton still comes in, although the price is very low. Our merchants pay more for cotton than any merchants in the county.

Mr. Ben Hoskins, of Aldrich, has accepted a position with Miller & Co., on the new railroad as commissary clerk. Ben is a good business man.

Sheriff Vance went up to Birmingham Friday and brought back Will Kimbrell, who is charged with numerous high crimes and misdemeanors.

The Southern railroad company have commenced putting in two new iron bridges east of here on Copperas creek, between Blocton and Hargrove, on their line.

Died, at Centreville, on Sunday, the 17th inst., after a short illness of typhoid fever, Mr. A. P. James. In the ceath of Mr. James Bibb county has lost one of its best citizens. The bereaved family have our sympathy in their affliction.

Last Sunday afternoon an alarm of fire was sounded from No. 3 mine, and soon a large crowd was gathered at the mouth of the mine. After a careful investigation it was found that the steam line had bursted, and the pnmper, thinking the escaping steam was smoke, became frightened and hurried to the top and gave the alarm.

Died, in River Bend, on Monday last, a daughter of Mr. D. L. McKinney. Mr. McKinney's friends sympathize with him in the loss he and his family sustained.

Messrs Jas Bass, E D. Reynolds and W. J. Loveland went down to Faunsdale to be present at the marriage of S. J. Morgan and Miss Margaret Walker on Wednesday last.

It seems from our directory that outside of the Tenn, Coal, Iron & R. R. Co. there is no store outside of Suttletown. Well, we guess that is correct. We go by what we see advertised in our home paper.

The subscription list of the News-Herald is growing fast. A single trip of the editor to Six Mile, Centreville, and Jamesville resulted in twenty-five new cash subscribers. Every one of them received an elegant family Bible, free, as a premium

We haven't been able to get a list of the girls—they haven't all regersted yet. We will have a directory as soon as we can get the names.

There are, no doubt, some good amateur musicians among the Polytechnic girls It not presuming too much we would suggest the organization of a string band.

We send out a good many copies regularly to people who have not subscribed. If you receive the paper we expect pay. If you don't want it, please notify us.

Read the advertisement of D. J. Moreland in another column. He can repair anything from a bycicle to a steam engine, and guarantees satisfaction in every instance.

A jolly crowd of gusts accompanied bridegroom Morgan southward on Tuesday evening. In it were E D. Reynolds of Blocton, Frank West, W. B. Reynolds and Geo. Morgan.

H C & W B Reynolds have just closed a deal for 719 yards of all silk velvet in the latest shades, at one fourth of actual cost. You can take choice of the entire lot for 29 cents per yard.

We call the attention of our readers to the card of W. J. Rhodes, to be found elsewhere. Mr. Rhodes is a practical workman and any one engaging his services can rest assured their work will be well done.

H. C. & W. B. Reynolds know the value of printer's ink. They know it pays to advertise, and they do advertise. You won't find them asleep. They keep up with, if not in front of, the procession.

Superintendent Moore, of Blocton, is as good a manager and as satisfactory a superintendent as any company ever had. The Tennessee company could hardly have found a better man for this position.

You will notice that Montevallo merchants advertise. That proves they are up to date. They take some pride in their town. We have every firm in town except one, and we expect them to advertise soon.

President Reynolds has accomplished wonders in the last few months. We don't think any other man could have filled his place. We know he will make our school the best in the south. If he don't, it won't be his fault.

Snake stories are a little out of date, but Dr Acker says that Pat McConaughy and himself saw a rattler about three feet long Sunday night between the Baptist and Methodist church. Just suppose one of the girls had seen it.

Just received—Five hundred Ladies' Capes of the most fashionable and stylish makes. Prices from $1.00 up to $10.00. Children's Cloaks from $1.00 to $1.50 — all sizes and colors.
H. C & W. B. REYNOLDS.

We offer special inducements to boarding houses. We will give, free of charge, a quart bottle of hair restorative (our own make) if we cannot demonstrate to you that we can save you money on all groceries. Give us an order and be convinced. H C & W B Reynolds.

Mike Kelley, a "Wandering Willie," called on us recently and left the following lines. We are pleased to state, however, that Mr. Kelley has gone to his winter quarters.

The Calera girls have got the blues,
The Dogwood girls can't afford new shoes;
The Brierfield girls don't treat us right,
But the Montevallo girls are out of sight.

Mr. J. S. Ogletree, of Blocton, was in town Monday. He saw from a small local ad. that a dairy was needed in Montevallo, so he came over to see about it. He went out to look at Mr. Vandegrift's farm, and was very much pleased with the location. Mr. Ogletree thinks he will locate here.

THE DICTIONARY HOLDE
Did you ever learn what fabulous results grew out of the manufacture by M. Noyes of an ornamental stand to hold the dictionary? The story reads like a fable, but to tell it one must ask another question: Have you ever noticed the advertisement of the Aermotor Company, which starts out as follows:

2,280 sold in '89
6,268 sold in '90
20,040 sold in '91

The proceedings of the House of Commons make very strange reading for an American occasionally. Recently that body of august legislators called up a usurer before it and lectured him solemnly upon the error of refusing to answer its summons and reply to certain questions of a committee. On the same day it refused to exercise similar authority toward a man of means who had offended it by the same cause. The "mother of parliaments" is not more just than other and newer bodies of lawmakers.

Pumice Stone in America.

Heretofore our supply of pumice stone has come almost exclusively from Italy. Now an American product is forcing its way into the market. This material has been found of excellent quality in Western Nebraska, and in a pulverized form. There are seven different deposits, these comprising in all about 400 acres. According to a report made by Prof. R. G. Salisbury of the University of Chicago, there are approximately 800,000 tons in sight. The deposits, with adjoining lands, have been acquired by the Chicago Pumice Company. They, however, desired also a lump pumice stone. After much search such a deposit was found in Utah, 245 miles south of Salt Lake City. This property comprises 120 acres, and it is virtually an entire mountain of the material of all degrees of purity.—Manufacturer.

Mamma—"How hot you are, Tommy; your clothes are wet through, I declare!"

Tommy—"Can't help it, ma. The heat makes me cry all over."—Pick-Me-Up.

Occasionally there is found a man engaged in commercial pursuits who possesses great talent in artistic lines. Rogers, the poet, was a banker, and our own Halleck and Stedman were engaged in business having little to do with the muse. A noted poet of the West is a marker in a poolroom, and he doesn't write verse about Derby day, either, but about daffodils and azure skies. At least one successful merchant in Chicago dallies with literature, on the side, as it were. These remarks are called out by the discovery in London that the man who composed the music for its latest successful opera is a financier, whose musical accomplishments have never been suspected even by his intimate friends.

Gladstone's Career Equaled.

Mr. Gladstone, who celebrated his 87th birthday on the 29th of December, is younger than a former American Congressman and Cabinet minister whose old age is as vigorous as that of the great English statesman. Col. Richard W. Thompson, of Terre Haute, Ind., who was a Whig leader in the days of Jackson and Clay, who was the close friend of Lincoln, and who served as Secretary of the Navy under Hayes, will be 88 if he lives to the 9th of next June.

If, instead of being influenced by a hazy and undefined feeling, we bring clear thought to bear upon it, we shall find that the only supreme and final test of conduct must ever be the convictions which we hold at the time.

Not whether any other person or the whole world approve or disapprove, nor even whether we may or may not continue in future years to maintain them ourselves, must be our question, but whether at the present moment we believe in our inmost heart that such a course is the true and right one to pursue.

If this be not our guide—if any other voice, opposing that of conscience, be obeyed—then we act in defiance of our own moral sense, which is plainly the snapping of character.

Coining of Silver.

The common impression that the government is coining no silver is a mistake. The coinage of silver is still continued, although by the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman act no bullion is now purchased by the government for use in coinage, there being on hand November 1, 1893, the enormous stock of 140,699,852.67 ounces.

Animals and the Weather.

Many naturalists insist that animals have a special sense which enables them to foresee approaching changes in the weather and conduct themselves accordingly. Hens, ducks and geese are well known to make preparations for rain, and hours before the change is apparent to human beings these creatures may be seen oiling and dressing their plumage. Pigs frequently prepare a shelter for themselves before a storm; a pig carrying a mouthful of straw is to the farmer a sure sign of rain. Dogs and horses exhibit unusual lassitude before rain, and the cat washing her face is, among housewives, a certain sign. The croaking of the "rain crow" is considered, in the country districts, as an indication of bad weather, while even ants and bees, when rain is approaching, seek their homes, the former retiring to their holes and closing the entrance, while the latter hurry to their hives as though conscious that danger was in the air.

A PECULATING GOOSE.

Carried Off a Gold Watch, and Got Servant in Trouble.

It is doubtful is another dumb animal ever caused greater mischief than a goose did recently in Lanesboro, N. Y. That goose stole a dozen valuable articles and brought about the discharge of a servant. For a long time the family of Mr. Albert Jenks has been missing valuables, and charged their disappearance to Miss Annie Coogan, a domestic. The girl was threatened with arrest to make her confess and when she protested her innocence she was discharged. As articles continued to disappear the family was in a quandary. A pet goose had a trick of knocking at the door in quest of dainties, and on being admitted would go all about the house. One afternoon recently Mrs. Jenks was amazed to see the goose take a gold watch and chain in its mouth and go outdoors. She followed and saw it hide the timepiece in its nest. Thus the mystery of the missing articles was explained. Among the dozen articles found in the nest were two gold thim-

Killed While Coupling Cars.

W. N. Waddell, of Opelika, was killed by a freight train at LaGrange, Ga., Saturday. He was a flagman and in coupling cars was knocked down and both legs severed from his body, and death quickly followed.

Fair Grounds Attached.

Saturday Sheriff O'Brien attached for debt all the lands, buildings, etc., composing the State Fair grounds, which are situated on the Birmingham & Bessemer railroad. The attachment was made on a writ sued out in the city court by Thomas G. Hewlitt against Hayden Dargin for $15,000.

Students Break Up an Institute.

The sale of the lands and building of the Alabama Mineral academy, at Huntsville, recently under a decree of the chancery court to Captain Milton Humes was continued Friday. The academy had a meteoric career several years ago, and while its prospects were brilliant for becoming a great institution, was broken up by a rebellion of students.

Lands for Northern Farmers.

John M. Green, of Chicago, general manager of the South Alabama Emigration and Development company has purchased a large tract of land located in Baldwin county from Messrs. Abbert, Samuel and Edgar Adler, of Birmingham. Mr. Green said it was the intention of the company to induce Northern farmers to remove to the South and settle on these lands.

Birmingham Quarantines Montgomery.

Birmingham has quarantined Montgomery. This action was taken at a special meeting of the city council held Saturday morning, and it was taken because of the report that suspicious cases of sickness, which it is thought may possibly be yellow fever, prevailed in the Capital city. The following places have also quarantined against Montgomery, Selma, Eufaula, Union Springs, Prattville, Ozark, Troy, Dothan and Columbus, Ga.

A Horrible Death.

Dr. Timothy Burke of Lowndes county, left Montgomery Thursday afternoon on the Hayneville macadamized road for his home at Hayneville, driving a mule to a buggy. As he was crossing the track of the Midland road a few miles west of the city his vehicle was truck by a gravel train and Dr. Burke was thrown upon the track and cut half in two by the wheels of the loaded cars. The mule was killed and the buggy demolished.

Will Make the Final Survey.

Colonel R. T. Barksdale, chief engineer of the Atlanta & Alabama Air Line, has located his camp three miles from Selma, preparatory to making the final survey, and work will be commenced immediately on the completion of the $100,000 subscription from the citizens of Selma. All but $11,000 of this amount has been subscribed and leading citizens are hustling to raise that amount. The first car load of grading tools has arrived and work is expected to begin on the 25th instant. The road is projected from Atlanta to Selma with New Orleans as its ultimate southern terminus.

Lawlessness in Dallas.

Lawlessness runs rampant near Richmond, in the southern end of Dallas county. Several months since West Ethridge rode up behind Allie Coleman, a wealthy farmer, and blew the top of his head off with a double barrel shotgun. He has managed to elude arrest. Later, Barrett Duckworth, Coleman's body servant, was assassinated in his house, and public opinion laid the crime at Ethridge's hands. A month ago Shelley Sumner, a nephew of Ethridge, was killed by Charles Nelson, a relative of Duckworth. Thursday night Frank Banks, a cousin of Nelson, was shot from the darkness while standing in the door of his home. All of the murders are thought to have grown out of the Ethridge-Coleman killing. Not an arrest has so far been made, although officers have made repeated raids. It is stated that a prominent citizen of the neighborhood, who has condemned the lawlessness, has had his life threatened.

A Refugee Train Wrecked.

Friday the regular passenger train running since the quarantine on the Mobile & Birmingham railroad between Thomasville and Selma, was totally wrecked between Eleanor and Safford, about twenty-five miles from Selma. There is no turn-table at Thomasville, and the engine was backing into the city pulling the baggage car and passenger coach. In some unaccountable manner the tender jumped the track, engine No. 11 passing over it and turning completely over down a 10-foot embankment. The baggage car turned over and rested on the engine, the coach doing likewise, falling on the tender. Engineer O. J. Munn was fatally scalded, so much so that he died a few hours later. Fireman Jere Godley was caught under his engine and horribly mangled. The passengers, all of whom escaped with a few scratches and bruises, succeeded in getting him out, but in twenty minutes death relieved his sufferings. The train flagman had his hand mashed, and Conductor Bradstreet was cut on the leg. Quarantine Officer Newman was also badl bruised on the leg.

Celebration of Alabama Day.

Governor Johnson has issued a proclamation, in which he calls on the people of the state to attend the Nashville Centennial on Alabama Day, the 22, and make that day a brilliant one. He reminds the people that the Centennial management have extended every courtesy to Alabama and has furnished the state a splendid opportunity to advertise its matchless resources. He suggests that Alabamians should show their appreciation by celebrating Alabama Day with enthusiasm and numbers worthy of their state.

Briefly Noted.

Bill Gambrill, in a difficulty at Pinson, was shot and killed by a negro, last week.

James W. McCrary, a prominent merchant of Greensboro, died Thursday, aged 77.

Farmers in the vicinity of Ozark are preparing to plant from two to twenty acres of wheat each this fall.

Sam Fields, colored, who shot and killed his wife last July, was convicted last Thursday and sentenced to be hanged.

Montgomery has closed her pest house, all cases of smallpox having been discharged and no suspicious cases remaining in the city.

Will Hunter, the desperate negro convict, who escaped from Pratt Mines last week, was shot and captured at Warrior by Marshal Blackburn.

Judge Alex Boarman arrived in Birmingham from Washington last Thursday, and the United States Circuit and District court was opened Friday.

Hon. Charles A. Whitten has received his commission as chief enumerator to retake the Lowndes county school census under the special law of 1896 and 1897.

In case the yellow fever reports should prove true at Montgomery, the governor will be forced to temporarily locate the executive office of the state in Birmingham.

About noon Thursday E. P. Lacy, a grandson of Senator Pettus, and his private secretary, while out hunting was accidentally shot in the left arm, a wound being inflicted which necessitated amputation.

Captain Beckert, of the Government Secret Service, aided by a detective, last week captured and arrested, ten miles south of Tuscumbia, John Clakely and William Hooper, charged with making and circulating counterfeit silver money.

The Jefferson Volunteers, Birmingham Rifles and Troop D, will, in all probability go to Nashville on Alabama Day. It is expected that they will carry forty men each and will possibly be accompanied by the Bessemer Rifles and the Huey Guards.

Montgomery had a yellow fever scare the past week. The board of health met and made the following statement regarding the suspicious cases: After a careful analysis of the symptoms of the few cases reported as suspicious, there is not a case that is at all typical of yellow fever and not a single case is seriously sick.

Four Daring Burglars Arrested.

Chief of Detectives Colleran and four of his men, at Chicago, Ill., have effected one of the most important captures of criminals reported for years past. As a result of the efforts of the officers four of the most successful and daring burglars of the United States and Canada are under arrest and $25,000 worth of stolen property is in the hands of the police awaiting identification.

The men under arrest are "Sheeney Joe" Rubenstein, the leader and brains of the gang; James Williams, Harry Rogers and James Flaherty.

Letters in the men's possession which have passed between them showed they had been taking a flying trip from coast to coast, robbing right and left.

The Review of Reviews says that Editor Stead, while in Washington recently, learned that unless the sealing question was settled speedily the United States will order the destruction next session of the whole herd of seals on the Pribyloff islands.

When "The Girl From Paris" and her company went to the Montgomery depot to take the train for Selma they were prevented from going by quarantine regulations. Instead of bewailing their misfortune they spontaneously burst into song and an impromptu open air concert on the depot platform elicited great applause from the by-standers.

Arbitration Prospects.

There is a good prospect of the speedy conclusion of a general arbitration treaty between Great Britain and the United States. There is reason to believe President McKinley will propose a clause in the treaty providing that before any subject is finally referred to the court of arbitration such reference shall be approved by the queen on the one hand and by the American senate on the other. It is expected such a proviso will induce the Senate to ratify the treaty.

The Competitor Case Revived.

The Spanish cabinet Friday discussed the case of the American schooner Competitor, which was captured in Cuban waters April 15, 1896, consideration of which, owing to the fear which Premier Canovas del Castillo had of stirring up action upon the part of the congress of the United States, was postponed by the late government. The cabinet ordered the ministers of foreign affairs, the navy and the colonies to examine the documents in the case, with the view of its eventual settlement by the courts.

HE WAS A BRILLLANT CLERK.

How a Virginia Prodigy Gave a 10 Per Cent. Discount.

I once had a promising bud of genius in my store down on the James River, said a Virginian to a reporter. I keep a general store there, and this bud, that promised to bloom into seven kinds of a loo loo flower, came to me from the far end of Prince George County, on the introduction of a friend of mine and his, who said as he wasn't good for anything else, perhaps he might be made handy in a store. I took him, just to be accommodating, of course, and promised to give him a chance to rise.

He was about 19 years old, and wrote poetry between times, so I put him to sweeping out as a starter. He could sweep well enough, and after a week I put him to doing the chores, and advised him to study the stock while he was resting.

After about six weeks of this kind of training I concluded he knew enough to take charge of my scrap counter, which was a counter where I put all my old stuff about every sixty days, with the most of it marked in big figures and with the additional information to those looking for bargains that there would be 10 off for cash.

Trade was lively the morning I put him at it, and he was doing as well, if not better, than the more experienced clerks, for I noticed several people getting around his way and getting out pretty quick with what they had bought. I didn't think much about the whys and wherefores until the young fellow came to me at the desk with a suit of clothes in his hands to ask me to explain something. The suit bore a large white card inscribed with a big black "$8."

"I don't quite understand this," says he. "The others I sold were marked $10.75, $11.50, $11.98, $12 and $12.48, and it was easy enough to calculate what 10 off would be and sell them for 75 cents, $1.50, $1.98, $2 and $2.48, but I'll be doggoned if I see how you're going to throw $10 off of an $8 suit, unless you want to give the customer $2, and I reckon you ain't that liberal, even at the scrap counter, are you?"

It mighty near gave me a spasm, that did, concluded the gentleman, and I put another clerk at my discount counter p. d. q.

A doctor, writing on the subject of the suppression of useless noises in cities, which he claims will hasten toward convalescence many a patient whose nerves are now too racked by perpetual racket to give the system a chance of recuperating, says he remembers one delightful ward in his training school wherein the "sister" used to insist on a "silent hour," from 2:30 to 3:30 daily. It was the only ward in the hospital which enforced this golden rule, alike beneficial to the nurses fortunate enough to be drafted there and the patients therein, who flourished and blossomed forth into amazing convalescence under the silence system and the good nursing which accompanied it. For the "sister" was a born nurse, and she had the real sympathy and womanliness which caused her to appreciate the balm and healing of that one quiet hour in the day.

It was a male surgical ward, and the patients, on first admission, used to chafe somewhat at "sister's" dictum—against which there was no appeal—of "no conversation or newspaper reading during the hour." But gradually each patient came to appreciate the soothing lull in the busy hum of the ward, and "sister" and her staff used to watch with satisfaction how patient after patient fell gradually under the soporific quiet of the time, and went off into comfortable sleep, which frequently lasted long after the prescribed limit. The good humor of the ward was most exceptional.

The senior surgeon of the hospital was never tired of saying, "The patients here, sister, get on as if by magic. What spells of witchcraft do you weave to heal them so quickly?"—Pittsburg Dispatch.

ALABAMA LADIES

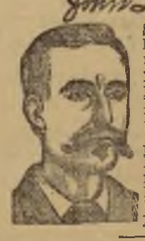
Brave as Lions.

Mrs. Mattie Davenport.

Jenifer, Ala., writes: My Husband was cured of Biliousness by Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine, which I have used 10 years. Have tried both Zeilin's and "Black Draught," and I think the M. A. Simmons Medicine so far Superior that one Package of it is worth three or four of either the other kinds.

Insufficient Menstruation

Is sometimes caused by non-development of the parts, sometimes by obstructions in mouth of vagina, and sometimes by constipated bowels, but usually results from a debilitated condition of the system, which prevents nature from overcoming any unusual exposure, such as fright or getting feet wet. Dr. Simmons Squaw Vine Wine builds up the system and cures the disorder, while Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine cures the constipation, indigestion, loss of appetite, pains in back, hips, head and limbs, which are usually present.



John L. Swain

Shellman, Ga., writes: I have used Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine 15 years. It cured me of Torpid Liver, Indigestion, Nervousness and Sleeplessness. It cured my Wife of a Female Complaint. My two Aunts have been greatly benefited by it in their old age. Have used "Black Draught" but think Dr. M. A. S. L. M. far superior to it.

Skin and Eyes Yellow.

This disorder finds its direct cause in some derangement in the liver and its closely allied glands. The bile, instead of passing out through the bowels, has been obstructed, and finding no outlet through its usual channels, has accumulated and been taken up by the absorbents and distributed over the system, poisoning the blood and disturbing all the functions of the body. In the treatment of this disease, Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine should be taken night and morning until the complexion becomes clear.

Spurn Frauds that court you for your money. The imitations that try to take the place of the Original Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine, while by interested dealers sold as "the same," are advertised as "not the same," and you may be courted and deceived for your money at the expense of your health. Beware!

MONTEVALLO NEWS.

VOL. II. MONTEVALLO, ALA., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1897. NO. 44.

Ohio is to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of its existence as a State with an exposition in 1903.

"Providence permitting, and unless the bottom drops out of the peace of Europe, there will be a world's fair in Paris in the year 1900," observes Harper's Weekly.

A citizen of Pogue Bluffs, Me., has such faith in the educational and moral influence of the press that he has ordered a good newspaper sent at his expense to each family in the town.

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat observes: It is a curious fact that a club of women formed in New York to go to the Klondike has engaged a man to do the cooking and dish washing. Unless he is fastened matrimonially he will be apt to "give notice" when he reaches the diggings.

Moonshiners have made things so uncomfortable, not to say dangerous, for J. P. Wooten, a constable in Breathett County, Kentucky, that he has recently equipped himself with an absolutely bullet-proof steel shirt. The accounts do not explain the apparent immunity of the rest of his body from the guns of the illicit distillers.

There is a lonely island in the South Atlantic known as Tristan d'Acunha, and on it lives as head of its population one Peter Green, who, during sixty years' residence, has saved many lives from shipwreck. In recognition of his services to humanity and particularly British subjects, the Queen has sent him a framed portrait of herself, with a suitable inscription.

"The Grand Army men have done wisely in rejecting the proposition to change the time of the observance of Memorial Day from May 30 to the last Sunday in May," believes the New York Observer. "There are many incidental occurrences connected with Decoration Day exercises which would introduce an incongruous element into our Sabbaths if the change were made."

Owing to the fact that it is one of the German servant girl's duties to shine shoes, and that the porters attend to it at the hotels, there are few bootblacks in Berlin. In fact, there are but six—one at each of the leading depots. Their trade, of course, comes from arriving travelers. It is curious to see among the patrons of these bootblacks who ply their vocation in the open more women than men.

The Florida Citizen rhapsodises thus: When winter comes in other lands 'tis Florida's jubilee, and joy breaks forth on every hand and laughs from sea to sea. And when our groves shall bloom again not even the frogs shall croak, we'll teach the birds the sons of men in "English as she's spoke;" no richer land on all the earth recalls the days of old than this whose dews kiss maiden sands and love them into gold.

In calling to order the Farmers' Congress at St. Paul, Minn., President B. F. Clayton made the statement that the agricultural interests of the country were sorely in need of vigorous legislation, and that more of our national lawmakers should come from the rural districts. As the warrant for this statement President Clayton declared that the farming element of the country embraced over 30,000,000 people, or more than one-third of our national population; but that in spite of this fact, the agricultural interests of the country were represented by only thirty-five members out of a total of 444 in the National House of Representatives, and by only one in the Senate. "Of course," adds the Atlanta Constitution, "this statement is somewhat exaggerated. While there may be only thirty-five members of the lower branch of Congress who style themselves farmers there are many others who are closely in touch with the agricultural interests of the country, and who have the welfare of the American farmer at heart. Still in view of the enormous percentage of our population embraced within the farming elements; and in view of the relations which this element sustains to the country at large, there can be no denial of the fact that the rural districts should be more largely represented on the floors of Congress."

The remains of George Eldridge were found floating in the Tennessee river near Lock's Ferry, six miles east of Dayton, Tenn. An ugly gash was upon the head and his body otherwise mutilated. An ax, evidently the one with with which the man was murdered, was found tied to his body with a strong hemp rope.

They were stepped upon by the crowd and several persons were bitten. All the doctors in town were summoned to give medical aid.

At Springfield, Mo., Raymond Allen, 12 years old, went to school carrying a portion of a stick of dynamite. The explosive, which the boy had found, was in his pocket with a knife, top and marbles. In getting to his seat the boy banged his dangerous collection against the desk, causing an explosion which will probably cost him his life and which was heard for two blocks. The teacher, Miss Mack, was close by and had her skirts torn into shreds, but she was not hurt.

SPAIN'S REPLY

To Minister Woodford Summed Up in a Few Words.

In the special note to United States Minister Woodford the government declares that Spain has done all in her power to end the war in Cuba, and cites the many sacrifices which have been made by the nation, the number of troops sent to Cuba and the reforms which are to be carried out in the island, which are fully described.

The note ends with the statement that "Spain will not admit the right of any foreign power to interfere in any of her affairs."

The note also declares that if the United States does not stop the sailing of filibustering expeditions from American ports Spain will re-establish the right to search vessels anchoring in Cuba waters.

Wants Fabulous Prices.

On the steamship George W. Elder, which leaves next Friday night for Dyea, Alaska, Charles E. Vest, of Portland, Oregon, will ship 4,000 dozens of eggs and about a ton and a half of poultry, fresh meats and oysters, which he expects to transport over the Chilcoot Pass to Dawson City by dog train before Christmas. The eggs have all been prepared and are ready for shipment. They were broken into cans, sealed up and then frozen. Vest has four others associated with him, and they expect to realize $100,000 out of the venture. They expect to sell the eggs at $35 per dozen and the poultry at fabulous prices.

ARMY REPORT.

General Miles Submits Estimates to the Secretary of War.

MORE SOLDIERS ARE NEEDED.

The General Wants Two More Regiments of Artillery and Five of Infantry—Will Take Fifty-eight Million Dollars to Put the Country in Condition of Defense.

Gen. Miles, major-general commanding the army, has made his report to the secretary of war. In it he makes reference to the reports of the general and other officers subordinate to him in rank. Gen. Miles says in part:

"The army, although inadequate in point of numbers, was never in a higher state of efficiency, both as to the character and qualifications of its officers and intelligence and loyalty of its soldiers. Important changes and improvements have been made along the Atlantic and gulf coasts, and especially in the mounting of modern artillery and the appliances adopted for the defense of the coast."

Attention is called to the condition of affairs in Alaska and a number of recommendations relative thereto are made.

Continuing, the report says: "During the last ten years much attention has been given by the government to the question of coast defenses, and most beneficial results are now becoming apparent. Approximately $26,000,000 has been appropriated by the government, which is nearly one-third of what is required to put the country in a safe condition of defense. Although the general desire of our people is to maintain a condition of peace with all nations and the policy of the government is one of good will and peaceful relations with all others, yet nothing could be more injudicious than to remain in a condition of insecurity and permit the lives of millions and the accumulated wealth of many generations to be destroyed or endangered by any foreign power with which we are liable to come in contact."

He recommends fortification appropriations as follows:

Hampton Roads, $463,000; approaches to Wilmington, N. C., $397,000; Charleston harbor, S. C., $150,000; Key West, Fla., $50,000; Pensacola harbor, $32,000; approaches to Mobile, Ala., $307,000; approaches to New Orleans, $319,000; Galveston, Tex., $419,000.

He recommends strongly an increase in the army of at least two additional regiments of artillery.

He also urges the necessity of adding five infantry regiments to the army and recommends that congress fix a standard of strength on a basis ot the total population. This standard, he thinks, should be a maximum of one enlisted man to every 1,000 population and the minimum one soldier to every 2,000 population.

Fever Gives Way to Tragedy.

Interest in the progress of the fever in Biloxi was swallowed up in the contemplation and excitement of a most horrible murder and arson committed upon a most estimable couple of elderly people living out on Back Bay, about three or four miles from the city.

Word was brought to the city about 4 o'clock Friday morning that the Parkhurst property had been burned and that Mr. J. L. Parkhurst and his wife had been consumed in the flames. A man named Gibson, his wife and one Volkes are under arrest.

The autopsy held showed that the aged couple had been murdered, and evidence showed that they had been killed before they retired at night. Rumors and threats of lynching are rife.

No More Appointments at Present.

The president has determined not to consider any new appointments until congress meets, owing to many requests that have come from senators and representatives that consideration be held up until they can see the president; also the great pressure of other business, which is occupying the president's time.

Thousands of Lives Lost in a Cyclone.

Advices from Manila says a cyclone occurred October 12, and that Carigara and Suruyo, on the eastern coast of Leyte, one of the Phillipine Islands, have been wiped out, and that an immense wave swept inland, engulfing the villages. The cyclone also swept the island of Samar. The full extent of the catastrophe is not yet known.

The jury in the famous Luetgert case at Chicago has disagreed and have been discharged by Judge Tuthill. The jury stood nine for conviction and three for acquittal. It was deadlocked for thirty-eight hours. Luetgert was on trial for the murder of his wife.

STILL INCREASING.

The Yellow Fever Situation Shows Marked Progress in Many Places.

The board of health reported the following new cases at Montgomery Friday night: Hugh McCutcheon, Mrs. Biggio, F. M. McQueen, Wm. McDaniel, Terrence R. Hardaway, R. O. Parker, D. L. Bray, Ed Biggio. Miss Mollie Mulcahy, child of J. Prendergrast, 6 years old. Dr. Guiteras, after visiting sixteen patients, six of whom were old cases, reported that the disease prevailing was the typical fever. In an address, he said the fever was not contagious; that the germs were responsible for its becoming epidemic. Pleasant McAdams died Friday night of yellow fever. He was only 18 years old.

A case of fever has developed at Notasulga, forty miles east of Montgomery, and two are reported at Robinson Springs, ten miles north.

Friday night at 7 o'clock the yellow fever cases had nearly reached fifty at New Orleans, and there had been five deaths.

Ten new cases were reported Friday at Mobile, five of whom were taken from the Italian bark Livomus. There were two deaths. Total cases to date, 197; deaths, 23; recoveries, 123, under treatment, 36.

President Thornton, of the Memphis board of health, Friday night officially declared that a case of yellow fever exists in Memphis. The case is that of B. H, McFerrin. He is a yard conductor, and was taken sick Sunday

One new case is reported from Cayuga, Miss.; under treatment, 15.

Bay St. Louis has 1 case.

Clinton has 11 cases under treatment.

At Edwards there are 4 new cases. Total to date, 487; deaths, 26; discharged, 436; convalescent, 48; under treatment, 37; in the country—deaths 4, all white; total cases, 55.

Selma reported a suspicious case of fever Friday night, and wired Dr. Guiteras to come and investigate.

RETURNED FROM HAWAII.

Senator Morgan Talks Enthusiastically About Annexation.

Senator Morgan and his daughters and F. M. Hatch, the new minister from Hawaii, were among the passengers who arrived at San Francisco from Honolulu upon the steamship Bolgic the past week.

Senator Morgan expressed himself as well pleased with what he saw and the manner in which he was entertained while on the islands. He is more than ever enthusiastic on the subject of annexation, and intimated that Hawaii may become a part of this country before the close of the coming year. He said:

"Hawaii is certainly going to be a state, but whether it will be at the time of its annexation or later remains to be seen. Should it be annexed as a territory the Hawaiian commissioners will recommend that the island should be admitted to statehood and a special act of congress would undoubtedly follow.

"I have favored annexation from the beginning, but I was surprised upon investigating the matter to find that the arguments in favor of the movement had been underestimated. In my opinion, Hawaii is absolutely indispensable to the United States, and we must have these islands. The only opposition found was that of a few of the Lilioukalani royalists who have no weight over there and are for the most part royalists for revenue only."

Senator and the Misses Morgans will leave here for their home at Selma, Ala., in a few days.

Secretly Arming.

It has just leaked out at Fort Smith, Ark., that the full-blood Cherokees have been secretly arming themselves and securing large quanties of ammunition for several weeks, but it has been especially brisk since the return of the attorney sent to Washington to enjoin the Dawes commission from proceeding to make the citizenship rolls. The majority of the Cherokees are opposed to the treaty, but the most bitter feeling is among the ignorant full-bloods. They are preparing to resist any attempt to change their tribal government. Several leading advocates of allotment and of treating with the Dawes commission have been warned to cease the negotiations or their lives will be taken.

Score of Women Preached.

In twenty Baltimore churches women occupied the pulpits the past Sunday, in accordance with arrangements announced at the meeting of the national board of managers of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Ordered to Keep Quiet.

The government has cabled to Lieutenant General Weyler strictly prohibiting any demonstration on the day of his departure from Spain, and intimating that if these instructions are not complied with by him he will be held strictly accountable.

IRREGULAR.

Bradstreet's Reports a Further Falling Off in Demand.

SHARP DROP IN EXPORTS.

A General Restriction of Business in the Gulf States is Noted Because of Quarantine--Production of Iron is Enormous. Steel Mills Refuse Orders for 1898.

Bradstreet's says: While the general trade movement is somewhat irregular, and there are further evidences of falling off in demand, the volume of business continues of large proportions. Speculation in wool has ceased and demand for the staple is less than for weeks past. Cotton goods are dull on the weakness of raw cotton and jobbers report dry goods slower than a week ago. Interior merchants in the central west have not distributed fall stocks as promptly as expected, and many jobbers at western centers find that they overestimated the resumptive demand when securing fall goods. Unseasonably warm weather has interfered with the movement of heavy goods at the west, but rains in Kansas, Oklahoma and Nebraska have improved the agricultural outlook. Relatively, the greatest activity in trade is reported by Kansas City and Omaha merchants. While quarantine regulations have been raised in Texas and modified in Louisiana, business throughout most of the gulf states remains practically at a standstill. Almost all the larger eastern cities report a decreased movement of merchandise and a tendency of collections to fall away, notably Baltimore, owing to its southern connections.

The industrial situation continues to furnish employment to as many persons as at any preceding period this year and at higher wages. Production of iron, steel, machinery, stoves, car structural work, glass and woolen goods continues heavy. Steel mills have orders to carry them into 1898 and decline contracts for next year's delivery. This explains the advance in the price of Bessemer pig iron, while the foundry quotations remain unchanged. The extraordinary heavy and steadily increasing production of iron is starting up furnaces long out of blast, and although consumption is heavy, it is not improbable that production may outrun it in the near future, which constitutes an unfavorable point in the outlook.

Exports of wheat (flour included as wheat) from both coasts of the United States and from Canada this week amount to 5,552,171 bushels, against 6,039,000 bushels last week, 4,067,000 bushels in the week a year ago, 2,658,000 bushels two years ago, 3,353,000 bushels three years ago, and as compared with 3,327,000 bushels in the like week of 1893.

There has been a sharp drop in the export movement of Indian corn this week, the total amounting to 1,177,543 bushels, compared with 2,224,000 bushels last week, 2,979,000 bushels in the week a year ago, 1,343,000 bushels two years ago, 920,000 bushels three years ago, and as compared with 929,000 bushels in the like week of 1893.

There 205 business failures reported throughout the United States this week, against 196 last week, 232 in the week a year ago, 259 two years ago, 221 in the like week of 1894, and 329 in the third week of October, 1893.

There are 27 business failures reported from the Dominion of Canada this week, a total considerably smaller than that of last week or in the third week of October in any of the four preceding years.

Against Annexation.

It was definitely decided at Honolulu among Hawaiians opposed to annexation that a commission composed of five men should be sent to Washington to make a determined fight against the ratification of the annexation treaty. At least three Hawaiian societies will give their support to the movement. It is generally understood that J. O. Canter, a white man, will head the commission.

Counterfeiting Scheme Unearthed.

In a musty and darkened cellar at No. 131 Sangamon street, Chicago lawyers, detectives and constables unearthed what they claim to be one of the largest liquor counterfeiting schemes ever operated in this country. The liquor dealers of the world have been working to learn the location of the plant for over a year. After four hours work $25,000 in counterfeit labels, representing all the leading brands of liquor, bottles and cases were found. The loss to the liquor dealers and manufacturers through counterfeit has been nearly $500,000, and it may even reach a higher figure.

THE WEEKLY NEWS.

CLIFTON NEWTON,
Editor and Proprietor.

MONTEVALLO, ALA.,
Thursday. Oct. 28, 1897.

Entered at the postoffice at Montevallo, Ala., as second-class matter.

Advertisers Will do well to get our rates and place their cards in the NEWS. There is no better medium for advertising.

We have had much encouragement. Only a few have found fault with our paper. We have to consider the source, as some people don't know a good paper when they see it.

The Sunny Southland says the Montevallo News is more like a Chinese puzzle than a newspaper. We can explain that very easily for our brother. Living in a small town where there are three saloons handy, we shouldn't wonder if all of his exchanges don't look to him like Chinese puzzles.

The editor of the Sunny Southland told us not long since that the citizens of Montevallo offered him three hundred dollars in cash, two hundred paid up yearly subscribers and one year's office rent free, if he would remove his outfit to Montevallo. We see he has not come yet, and we will raise the offer ten dollars.

D. P. C.

After their usual hour for recitation, in which some of their friends in town joined, the young ladies of the dormitory building of the Polytechnic Institute of Montevallo, Ala., held a meeting for the purpose of organizing a club among themselves, with a view to the pursuance of some literary work. There will be also some social feature which is to give them an occasional evening of "song and story" and recitation during the winter months, as there are quite a number of young ladies now enrolled at the dormitory.

Such a club will doubtless prove both instructive and entertaining to all concerned. The name chosen is that of the "Dormitory Polytechnic Club." The badge selected is to be a monogram pin, "D. P. C."

By special request, Mrs. Babb, our principal of the school, presided, and with her usual aptitude and grace conducted the election of the following officers:

President, - - Annie May Burten.
Vice President, - Hettie Barnett.
Secretary, - - - Ree Ogletree.
Treasurer, - - - Pattie Barnett.
Reporter, - - Bernice Dickson.
Scientist, - Annie Stacier Pittman.
Musician, - - Kate Robinson.
Bookman, - Annie Eloise Hopkins.

The faculty was elected honorary members.

The club adjourned to meet again on Saturday evening, Oct. 23, 1897, for the consideration of other business.

SATURDAY EVENING, OCT. 23.

The D. P. C. met, and the following business was arranged:

The meeting was called to order, and the secretary read the minutes of the previous meeting, after which forty-four girls were enrolled as charter members, who decided on adopting the colors of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute of Auburn, which are orange and blue.

A holloeen celebration was arranged for their next meeting, Oct. 30th, at which time a phantom entertainment will be the main feature, followed by music and recitation.

Where is Harry A. Cassin?

Failed to Appear in an Atlanta Criminal Court When His Name Was Called.

EMBEZZLED $71,000 OF FUNDS WHILE CASHIER OF AN ATLANTA BANK. SAID TO BE IN SOUTH AFRICA AND DOING WELL.

Atlanta, Ga., Oct. 25.—Harry A. Cassin, ex-bank cashier, is a fugitive from justice and not even his friends can say where the ex-cashier is. When his case was called in the superior criminal court this morning he did not respond and his counsel shook his head when asked by the court if he could produce the body of his client.

Cassin was indicted last spring for embezzling $71,000 of the funds of the Georgia Loan, Savings and Banking company, a corporation in which he was the trusted cashier. He gave bond in the sum of $10,000, which was signed by Banker F. M. Coker, of this city, whom it is said was indemnified against loss by the father in-law of the young banker.

It is said that Cassin is now in South Africa, and that he is doing well in a business venture in which he is engaged.

Cassin was at one time one of the most popular young business men of Atlanta, and was very highly connected, having married the daughter of Judge Hillyer.

Editor Nunneley, of the County Press, called to see us a few days ago.

Professors Langston and Wallace visited home folk at Six Mile Sunday.

Blocton has quarantined against all the world. Why does it not frost and kill the yellow fever out?

Our friend, John C Brock, agent at Belle Ellen, spent Sunday in our town. Mr Brock is looking fine.

The Southern passenger train from Selma to Birmingham has been stopped on account of the yellow fever in Selma.

Messrs J N and A L Campbell and Rush Collier took in the exposition at Nashville last week.

Grade work on the new railroad from here to the main line near Centreville is nearing completion. It don't take our people always to build a railroad.

Mr John Porter received a telegram Monday, announcing the death of his brother-in law, Mr W A Walburn, who was killed at Johns Monday. Mr Walburn was machinist at Johns for the T C I & R R Co.

It has been given out officially that N L Wilson has been appointed postmaster at this place. All people in our city regret very much to see our faithful friend, C C Collier, put out, but of course the Republicans have things in their power and will do as they see fit. Mr Wilson has only been a Republican a short while. He was a candidate in 1890 for sheriff of Bibb county on the Republican ticket.

Mr. J S Ogletree, of Blocton, was in town Saturday, and succeeded in closing a trade with Mr. John McMath for his farm near town. On last Thursday morning about five o'clock our citizens were aroused by the alarm of fire, and it was soon discovered that an empty house between Mr. Vandegrift's and Dr. F. F. Crowe's residences, was in flames. By heroic efforts on the part of our citizens the beautiful new residence of Mr. Vandegrift and the residence of Dr. Crowe were saved. The property destroyed belonged to Dr. J. D. Trammell, and we understand it was insured.

Just as we go to press, we learn of a fatal accident that happened Mr. Robert Killingsworth, living 7 miles south of Montevallo, on Tuesday. While working with a thrash the bands became entangled some way, throwing the machine against him, and catching him between the machine and wall, cutting him almost in two, causing death in a few hours. He leaves four motherless children, who have the sympathy of the entire community in their irreparable loss.

A protracted meeting commenced at the M. E. Church Sunday, conducted by Rev. John Andrews, of Calhoun county. Dr. Andrews delivered forcible sermons Sunday night, Monday morning, Monday night and Tuesday night, but we regret to say very little interest was manifested. He had to leave Wednesday morning, and the regular pastor, Rro. Abernathy, announced Tuesday night that the meeting would still go on, and that he would be assisted by Bro. Wheeler, a well-known evangelist. We do hope that much good will result from this meeting.

Married, at Faunsdale, Ala., on Wednesday morning, Oct 20th, at the residence of the bride's father, Hon. Mims Walker Mr. Samuel J. Morgan, of Blocton, and Miss Margaret Walker. Rev. Dr. Otts, of Greensboro, performed the ceremony, which was witnessed only by relatives of the bridal pair. The stately old house was superbly decked with flowers and garlands of roses and smilax. An elaborate breakfast was served, after which Mr. and Mrs. Morgan left for an extended trip east. After their return they will reside at Blocton, where Mr Morgan is identified with the Tenn Coal, Iron & Railroad Co.

The bride is a sister of Mrs. W. B Reynolds, and the groom a brother of Mr. G. W. Morgan, both of our town. The NEWS extends to the happy couple its congratulations and best wishes for a long, happy and prosperous voyage along the sea of life.

On last Saturday night a NEWS man, in company with another party, procured a horse and buggy from Mr. Frank Kroell, and started on a trip through the country to Blocton After driving a few miles we ate heartily of cheese, crackers and apples. Although the night was quite dark and cool, the trip was devoid of incident until we reached Pratt's Ferry. Here we decided to ford the river, and after getting about half way across our horse stepped into a hole, and we were afraid we were going wrong, and thought we would call the ferryman and get him to pilot us across After yelling until our throats were sore, and getting no response from the ferryman, we were about at our wit's end to know what to do. There we were, middle way the river, and neither of us could swim. Our partner, suffering from neuralgia and rheumatism, was afraid to get his feet damp, so the NEWS man, without any hesitation, divested himself of his shoes and socks, and, rolling both pair of his pants above his knees, he hit the water, expecting to find it very cold, but to his surprise it was quite warm. After walking very carefully (with the aid of the buggy whip), and stepping very lightly as if trying to walk on the water, he finally reached the landing, and after twisting a paper sack very tightly and applying a lighted match to the end of it, our rheumatic partner was able to see how to drive across without any further trouble. We went on all right then until we got within about two miles of Blocton, when our horse took a wrong road, and after driving about a mile we discovered we were in an old timber road, and had to retrace our way back to the main road. Finally we got straight again, and drove into Blocton about 2 a. m. Sunday. After spending a few hours with wife and babies, the NEWS man left Blocton at 11 o'clock and reached Montevallo at 6 p. m., tired, hungry and sleepy.

CARD OF THANKS.

MONTEVALLO, ALA.
Oct. 21st, 1897.

MR. EDITOR:

Will you allow us, through the columns of the NEWS, to express our sincere thanks to the noble people of Montevallo for their heroic work in preventing our house being burned this morning?

It seemed to be beyond human power to prevent a house from being burned so near the one which was on fire. But by God's providential interference and an increased energy and a greater effort on the part of the people, our house was saved from the consuming flames.

We shall always feel thankful to our Heavenly Father and to the courageous people who took such an active interest in our behalf at a time when help was so much needed.

Yours, with the greatest respect,
C. C. VANDEGRIFT & FAMILY.

A poor miner in Pennsylvania is said to have fallen heir to $75,000 by the death of an uncle who came to him in the disguise of a tramp and was kindly received. This story reads as though it had been written by some William Whiskers with a fancy for tales of imagination and a desire to have his kind treated well by those whom they would in the future solicit for "handouts."

The first thing the women will do when they get into power will be to enact a law compelling a man to love only one woman at a time.

Ant Pie.

Savages, we know, indulge in such luxuries as grubs and locusts, but for a civilized white man to finish up his dinner with a dish of raw ants seems too nasty to be credible. Yet in Mexico it is the custom—and a custom adopted by plenty of colonists and visitors.

The ant eaten is called the honey ant, and is perhaps as curious an insect as lives. With a tiny head and legs, it has a huge body as big as a large pea, and this is yellow and swollen with excellent honey.

In each nest there are 300 or 400 of these honey ants, which are attended by thousands of others. The honey ants hang on to the roof of the cells in the nest while the others feed them. They are, in fact, living storehouses of winter food. An observer says that if one of the honey ants falls from his perch a worker will go and pick him up and replace him. This is as if a man were to walk up the face of a cliff carrying a large buffalo or cart horse on his back.

Value and Price.

"I suppose, of course, that's a $100 wheel."

"That's what it is."

"How much did you pay for it?"—Chicago Post.

The life of a farmer has often been called a life of drudgery. There is no occupation that has a larger ratio of inspiriting labor to one whose tastes are in harmony with rural life. The weak point in American farming has been the lack of appreciation of the equipments necessary to a successful career. Too many of them have been willing to be thieves of the soil's resources, that they might swell their bank accounts. To the young man or young woman fairly educated there is no more promising field of enterprise.

Yellow Fever at Selma.

Selma is in the throes of the yellow fever scourge. The outcome of Dr. Guiteras' visit to that city is a report that seven cases were under treatment and that the fever has existed in a mild form for three or four weeks.

Ground in the Machinery.

Bone Bagley was caught in the machinery at Hagin's cotton gin, near Markton, twelve miles north of Gadsden, and was literally ground to pieces, When the fragments of flesh and bones were withdrawn from the ginnery they presented a ghastly and sickening sight, the largest member of his body being not larger than an ordinary sized gourd.

A Record Breaker.

The Howard-Harrison Iron Company, at Bessemer, cast its first 72-inch pipe last Saturday. It will be one of an order for twelve for the New Orleans and Northeastern railroad, to be used in culverts. This immense pipe will be the largest in existence, being 72 inches in diameter, 12 feet 6 inches long, 2 inches thick and will weigh ten tons.

Governor Cannot Remove Him.

At Rockford Judge Carmichael rendered his decision in the Moore vs. Nolen case Wednesday in favor of Mr. Moore. This case is the one in which the constitutionality of the law which gave the governor power to remove a tax assessor was assailed, Mr. Moore being the old assessor and the one Governor Johnston removed when Nolen was appointed.

Miners Organizing.

The miners of Alabama will officiate with the United Mine Workers of America, and will at once begin to perfect the organization. A convention of the miners of the Birmingham district was held Friday for the purpose of considering the question of affiliating with the United Mine Workers of America or of maintaining a distinct state organization. A vote was taken which resulted in a victory for the national organization by a majority of 33 votes out of a total of 77 cast.

Camps will be organized and a state convention will be called to perfect a district organization under a charter granted by the United Mine Workers of America. It is estimated that when the organization is perfected 10,000 men will be enrolled.

New Road Is Commenced.

The first dirt on the Atlanta and Selma Air-Line was broken Thursday in the eastern suburbs of Selma with imposing ceremonies. Mayor Meyer and members of the city council, Col. Mitchell, president of the road, and a large number of citizens were present when the first scraper, drawn by four mules, was imbedded into the earth by Mrs. Watkin M. Vaughan, who had been selected as the sponsor for the road. There was speech-making and cheering. Fifty mules and one hundred men were put to work and these will be quadrupled in a few days. When ten miles are graded track will be laid and trains put on. The road will then be pushed through Autauga, Chilton, Coosa, Elmore, Tallapoosa, Clay and Randolph counties and on to Atlanta.

Progress of the M. & O. Extension.

A well-known contractor has made the following statement regarding the state of affairs on the construction of the Montgomery & Columbus extension of the Mobile & Ohio: "Over 90 per cent of the grading has been completed. This work will have been completed in three weeks from date. The wood work is also nearly completed. Track-laying is in active progress. They have laid twenty-five miles of rails from Columbus and eight miles from the Montgomery end, thirty-three miles altogether. The track-layers expect to arrive at the Warrior bridge at Tuskaloosa in sixty days, but will be probably later than that at that point. The bridge at Tuskaloosa will not be completed for three months yet. That will be the last work to be done. The road will then be ready to be operated. Contracts for depot buildings, section houses, round houses, etc., were to have been let at Tuskaloosa on October 7. The bids were received, but letting the contracts was delayed on account of the absence of President Woolfolk, An army of men is in the field and the work is being pushed rapidly. In five months the road will be in operation.

Dr. D. I. Purser Dead.

Dr. D. I. Purser died of yellow fever at New Orleans Friday morning.

The deceased was in Alabama when the scourge broke out, and was advised by Dr. I. T. Tichenor, president of the home mission board of the Southern Baptist Convention, not to return, the epidemic making it useless and dangerous for him to try the experiment. Dr. Tichenor also called attention to Dr. Purser's usefulness in the missionary field, and suggested that he should not endanger a life so valuable to the church.

Just before returning to New Orleans Dr. Purser passed through Birmingham and delivered a sermon at the First Baptist church. He said that he would return to New Orleans if it appeared to him to be his duty to do so. He said he had been a soldier in the war, and he intended to act as a soldier, a man and a Christian, with God's help, in this matter.

He went back to New Orleans, took sick last Saturday, and the rest has been told. He died like the veteran he was—in the midst of the fight.

Dr. David Ingram Purser was born in Copiah county, Miss., December 24, 1843. He went to the front on the Confederate side when the war broke out with the "Seven Stars Artillery," and participated in seventeen engagements. His war record was a brilliant one. He began to preach the gospel actively in 1870, and served as missionary between Port Gibson and Natchez, and after at Crystal Springs and Wesson, Miss. Subsequently he did evangelistic work all the way from New Orleans to St. Louis.

The state quarantine officers were instructed Saturday night not to let any passengers from Selma stop in Alabama. Since the quarantine against Selma the trains over the Southern have been discontinued. There are no trains to Montgomery or Memphis.

A rigid quarantine is maintained by Selma against Mobile and Montgomery, by reason of which the Mobile and Birmingham and Western of Alabama railroads have abondoned their train service.

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Alabama Baptist Convention in Selma the annual meeting of that body, called at East Lake for November 12, was postponed on account of quarantine regulations.

CAR ROBBERS SENTENCED.

The Dalton Gang, Merchants and All, Must Pay the Penalty.

The most remarkable car robbery case on record in the south came to an end at Dalton, Ga., Saturday in the superior court, Judge Alonzo Fite presiding.

During the past three weeks eighteen robbers charged with systematically looting cars on the Southern railway, extending over a period of five years have been tried and found guilty. The ringleader, Walter Bohannon, was convicted in five cases and was sentenced by the court to ten years in the penitentiary. His gang, Tom Kineman, Ben Pearce, Sam Painter, Lute White, Bill Long and Ed Morris, the latter colored, received sentences from three years to one year.

The merchants convicted of receiving stolen goods from the robbers are as follows, all prominent in business and social circles in Dalton and North Georgia:

C. M. Cannon, T. P. J. Peeples, J. H. Bender, Anderson Giddens, Clee Combee, G. W. Haron, W. B. McCarson, J. Kirkefarrar, Ed Roberts and Jesse Langston. The court sentenced all these merchants to pay fines ranging according to their ability to pay from $1,000 down to $25 and one year on the chain gang, the latter sentence to be suspended on payment of the fines and costs.

NO SILVER.

Great Britain Refuses to Enter Into a Monetary Conference.

Lord Salisbury has sent to Ambassador Hay the reply of the British government to the proposals of the American bimetallist special commission, headed by Senator Wolcott. It is a diplomatically worded note. His lordship says that the government of Great Britain is not able to reopen the India mints at present. He regrets the inability to accede to the proposals of the American commissioners, Great Britain having as great an interest as the United States and France in securing a stable par exchange for gold and silver and an enlarged use of silver. In these circumstances, continues Lord Salisbury, the British government does not see the desirability of an international monetary conference, but will be pleased to consider any other practical suggestions from the United States.

Germany's action as to bimetallism will depend upon England's.

THE JOKERS' BUDGET.

OBLIGING HIM.

"I want a dollar, Jones, and I want it bad."

"All right. Here's a counterfeit."

WORSE.

Mrs. Klondike—And did the landlord press you for money?

Tramp—No'm. He stomped on me, mum.

IMPORTED OR NATIVE.

Facetious Customer—Bring me a couple of links of dog.

Obliging Waiter—Certainly, sir; Dachshund or mongrel?

DISSATISFIED.

"When did she first seem to become dissatisfied with your present?"

"When she accidentally ran across the price mark."

A POPULAR YOUNG MAN.

Miss Laura—Do you believe, Mr. Litehed, that stolen kisses are sweetest?

Chollie—Aw, weally, I don't know. I've never had to steal any yet.

MAKING PROGRESS.

"So you proposed to her," said Willie Wishington's friend.

"Yes."

"Did she give you any encouragement?"

"Some. She didn't laugh."

HAD HIS TROUBLES.

"Dear heart!" he protested.

He pressed his hand nervously to his brow.

"Give me liver," he exclaimed, abruptly, for he had but seven cents.

SELFISH.

"Why do prosperous men always say that the ladder of success is made up of broken rounds?"

"Well—they do it so that other fellows won't try to crawl up after them."

GREAT DEMAND.

"That Miss Goldrick seems to be awfully popular with the young men."

"Popular is no name for it. Why, do you know her father has actually got out a printed form of declination of offers for her hand?"

A PUZZLED YOUNGSTER.

Willie—Ma, can people leave parts of themselves in different places?

Ma—No; don't be ridiculous.

Willie—Well, Mr. Jiggs said he was going to Arizona for his lungs.

BY THE BOTTLE.

Ethel—Who was that man you just bowed to?

Penelope—That was Dobson, the great composer.

Ethel—A composer, did you say?

Penelope—Yes. He manufactures soothing syrup.

NO POSSIBLE DANGER.

"What do you consider the most absolutely certain way to distinguish toadstools from mushrooms?"

"Cook them, get some other man to eat them, and then watch his symptoms."

A RULE OF RECOGNITION.

"I can tell everything that man writes," remarked the discerning citizen.

"How?"

"If it's poetry he begins each sentence with 'O,' and if it's prose he begins it with 'I.'"

AN EXAMPLE.

"It's the man who persists as'll rise in the world," remarked Mr. Rafferty, sententiously.

"Thrue fur yez," replied Mr. Dolan. "An' fur proof Oi kin point till the tombstone iv a fri'nd thot persisted in thawin' dynamite be a shtove."

AND SO IT GOES.

"This article, 'How to Keep Well,' is not completed," said the editor-in-chief.

"No, sir; the editor of the Health Column took some lobster last night, and he hasn't been able to work today," replied his assistant.

ANSWERED.

"What are the "Powers' of Europe?" inquired the very young woman.

The veteran diplomat looked at her thoughtfully and then replied:

"For a long time past they hav been chiefly conversational Powers.

FULLY APPRECIATED.

"Wonderful!" exclaimed the enthusiastic tourist from Boston, as the steamer came in full sight of the fortress of Gibraltar.

"It is great," asserted the equally enthusiastic tourist from Chicago; "I wonder what the British Government would take to let that rock be used for advertising purposes."

CAUSE FOR REJOICING.

Sunday School Teacher: And when the prodigal son returned home his father fell upon his neck and blessed him. Why did he do that?

Scholar: 'Cause he was so glad to think he didn't come back with a wife and family, I s'pose.

NO RECOMMENDATION.

"Did you buy that horse Skeemer wanted to sell you?"

"No, sir-ee! Afraid of him."

"Didn't Skeemer say the ladies in his family drove him regularly?"

"Well, he said he let his wife's mother drive him every day."

NO MORE FUN IN IT.

Scorcher—I'm not going to ride the wheel any more.

Friend—What's the matter? Come near breaking your neck?"

"Lots of times; but that's not it. There's no more fun in it. Pedestrians have learned to be quick and it's impossible now to knock any of them down."

Alabama Marries Mississippi

Mrs. Mary Hayward

Oxford, Ala., writes: Have used Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine 25 years. I know it cures Dizziness of Head, Sour Stomach, Sick Headache, and many other diseases. I tried "Thedford's Black Draught," but did not find it to be half as good as the M. A. Simmons Medicine.

Leucorrhœa—"Whites."

This is a disorder from which few women escape at some period of their lives. It is in the nature of nasal catarrh. In a healthy condition the lining membrane of the genital organs secretes sufficient mucus to moisten them, but if the mucus membrane is congested or inflamed, the secretion becomes profuse, irritating and offensive. The best results will follow the use of our Mexican Female Remedy as an injection, and a dose twice a day for some time of that great uterine tonic, Dr. Simmons Squaw Vine Wine, will cure the complaint.

G. W. Irby

Energy, Miss., writes: M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine has been used 20 years in my Father's family for Nervousness, Sick Headache, Dyspepsia, Biliousness. My Sister was confined to bed for months from Enlargement of Liver. Our Doctor gave her up to die. She began taking M. A. S. L. M. and was soon entirely well. There is no just comparison between M. A. S. L. M. and Zeilin's Liver Regulator. The latter by careful test having been found not so reliable and been discarded.

Menstrual Irregularities.

Puberty is the period when menstruation is established. It is the time when the girl becomes a woman, and also the time from which many female diseases date. The menstrual flow usually continues from three to six days and comes on about every twenty-eight days. The quantity exuded varies from two to eight ounces, but the amount consistent with the health of one person may be excessive and weakening in another. The function is regarded as being regular when its effect upon the system is favorable. The departures from healthy menstruation are numerous and should be corrected by using Dr. Simmons Squaw Vine Wine.

MONTEVALLO NEWS.

VOL. II. MONTEVALLO, ALA., THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1897. NO. 45.

A writer in a magazine has made the prophecy that in 300 years from now the world will know only three languages—English, Russian and Chinese. The English language will be spoken all over North and South America, in Australia, India, Africa, New Zealand and the islands of Australia and the Pacific. The Russian tongue will have conquered all Europe except Great Britain, and all Asia except India. Chinese will hold sway over the rest of the world.

The commissioners in charge of the construction of the new State Capitol of Minnesota have, after several weeks' consideration, decided to build the superstructure out of Georgia marble, announces the Atlanta Journal. The edifice is to cost over a million. When Georgia built her million dollar Capitol, she went to Indiana for the stone. This shows just how far Minnesota is ahead of Georgia when it comes to selecting building stone and how far Georgia is ahead of all other States in producing it.

It is probably the general impression that posters and handbills are modern inventions, but it has just been discovered that the ancient Romans practised this method of advertising. In digging at Herculaneum there was brought to light a pillar covered with bills, one on top of another. The paste used to stick them was made of gum arabic. The bills, when separated and examined, were found to be programmes and announcements of public meetings, and even election proclamations.

The Militar Wochenblatt laments the slackness of the German people in supporting their navy. There are only thirty-four German warships, against England's 226, and to bring Germany up to the proper naval level at least 150 armorclads and cruisers are wanted. German marine trade has so increased within the last few decades that her interests are spread all over the world. There are 100,000 Germans on the West Coast of South America and in Central America, yet no German warships have appeared there since 1891. Whilst Frenchmen pay a sum about equal to $5 for the army and navy yearly, and the Englishmen about $4, the Germans pay about $3, of which only something less than a sum equal to fifty cents goes to the navy.

Maternal love cannot always be that holy thing people generally consider it. A curious proof of the fact comes from Stafford Springs, Conn. A landlord there, thinking to compliment the wife of one of his Italian tenants, told her he wouldn't think of offering her less than his prize-winning brown Leghorn rooster in exchange for such a charming child as the babe of ten months she was carrying in her arms. Two days later the woman called at the landlord's house, demanded the rooster in exchange for her child, and would not be put off until the landlord bribed her with a barrel of apples to call the trade off.

William Spohn Baker, who has just died in Philadelphia, was the owner of a collection of Washingtoniana that many judges pronounced the most complete in existence. It consists of engraved portraits and biographies of Washington, together with books of reference on Washington's time. "These books," says the Philadelphia Ledger, "numbering about five hundred, together with about one thousand engravings, principally portraits, and nine hundred medals, will, it is believed, now go to enrich the collection of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, of which for years he was an active member, holding at one time the office of Vice-President."

Consul General Fitzhugh Lee will remain at Richmond until next Tuesday to cast his vote in the state election, soon after which he will go to New York and sail for Cuba.

A wolf was killed on one of the principal residence streets of Little Rock, Ark., just as it was about to attack a party of children playing on Arch street. The animal, emboldened by hunger, had come out of the swamps south of the city. A negro named Tom Johnson saw the animal about to attack the children, and, securing a gun, quickly killed it.

GEORGE DEAD.

The Noted Single-Taxer Passes Suddenly Away.

BRIEF SKETCH OF HIS LIFE.

At the Time of His Death He was Candidate for Mayor of Greater New York on the United Democracy Ticket—His Son's Name Substituted for Mayor.

Henry George, the candidate of the Jeffersonian democracy for mayor of Greater New York, died Friday. His death is thought to have been due to apoplexy.

Mr. George had just returned to the Union Square Hotel from several large mass meetings in the Borough of Queens and Brooklyn.

The work of the night seemed to have told on him. He complained of being tired, but his friends and relatives, who awaited him, thought it was only the natural fatigue due that follows such hard campaign work as Mr. George had been doing. Not long after reaching the hotel he retired. It was about 3:30 o'clock when Mrs. George was awakened. She found Mr. George sitting in an arm chair.

Mrs. George at once grew anxious as to her husband's condition. Mr. George gradually grew incoherent and lapsed into unconsciousness.

A call was sent to a physician, and he came without delay. Mr. George was still unconscious. All efforts to revive him failed. Without a sign of recognition to those around him he passed peacefully away at 4:45 o'clock.

SKETCH OF HIS LIFE.

Henry George, political economist, was born in Philadelphia September 2, 1839. He attended the public schools until 14 years old, learned the printer's trade, went to sea, and settled in California in 1858. He worked at his trade in a newspaper office until 1866, then changed to a reporter, rose to be editor, and became part proprietor. While editor of the Sacramento Reporter he was in harmony with the democratic party, but bitterly opposed to the railroad and other monopolies of the state.

Shortly afterward he entered upon literary work, his first publication, on land-ownership, was Our Land and Land Policy. The attention which this attracted led him to a very detailed and laborious investigation into the causes of industrial depressions and the increase of want with the increase of wealth. In 1879 he published the results of his investigations under the title of Progress and Poverty, and in August, 1880, removed to New York. His books gained an immediate and wide reputation, and within a few weeks after his arrival in New York he was in receipt of requests from all parts of the country to give public expositions of his theories. He then went to Ireland to study the land question. While abroad he lectured throughout England, Scotland and Ireland. Returning to New York and resuming lecturing, his views were adopted by the United Labor party, which made him its candidate for mayor of the city in 1886. He received 68,110 votes against 90,552 for Abram S. Hewitt, democrat, and 60,435, for Theodore Roosevelt, republican.

In 1887 he was nominated by the same party for secretary of state, but was defeated.

His sixth book, Protection or Free Trade, was published in 1886, and The Condition of Labor: An Open Letter to Pope Leo XIII., 1891.

At the time of his death Mr. George was a candidate for mayor of New York, having received the nominations of the silver Democrats, Populites, single taxers and several other factions. All of these nominations he accepted and he was engaged in the campaign when his demise occurred.

The Thomas Jefferson democracy Friday afternoon substituted the name of Henry George, Jr., for the name of his father, Henry George, deceased, as a candidate for mayor of Greater New York.

Andree's Balloon.

Dispatches received from Vardoe, an island in the Arctic ocean off Finmark, which, with Vardoehuus, is the most northern point in Northern Europe, say the public there is fully convinced of the truth of the report that a whaling ship sighted Professor Andree's balloon floating on September 23 near Prince Charles promontory, Spitzbergen.

Dr. Otto Nordenskold, the well-known Arctic explorer, will superintend an Arctic exploration at the joint expense of Norway and Sweden to see whether any trace of Prof. Andree's balloon can be found.

MUST TAKE WHAT'S LEFT.

Southern Looms Are Destined to Make the Cotton Goods.

At Thursday's session of the New England Cotton Manufacturers' Association, held in Philadelphia, a large number of technical papers were read. One of the most important papers was by Arthur Parkinson, of Previdence, R. I., on the "Manufacture and Export of Cotton Goods," during which he said:

"It is well known that Southern manufacturers, with the present conditions, can undersell or compete easily with the Eastern mills on medium and coarse fabrics and the future looks dark for New England. The facilities of manufacturers have been so increased that in many lines of goods the existing manufacturing establishments can produce a vast amount more than the United States can consume, and it seems likely each year will cause stagnation for the industry, and, of course, the usual stoppages of the mills during certain periods. As a result of this continued competition in certain lines of goods for the home market, the prices are low, wages are low and tariff legislation cannot help matters for the merchant. The jobber is bound to buy in the cheapest market, and that means Southern looms will be engaged ahead and the New England mills must take what is left."

PULLMAN'S WILL PROBATED.

Two Sons Get But a Small Share—Charible Institutions are Remembered.

The will of George M. Pullman was filed for probate last Thursday. To his widow he left the homestead on Prarie avenue. Sufficient funds are also set asido to provide her with an income of $50,000 yearly during her life. One million dollars each is left in trust for his two daughters, Mrs. Frank O. Lowden, of Chicago, and Mrs. Carolan, of San Francisco. An income of but $3,000 yearly is provided for his two sons, George M. Jr. and Sanger W.

About $150,000 in sums of $10,000 and $20,000 is left to various charitable institutions in Chicago. A sum of $200,000 is given for the erection of a manual training school in Pullman, which is also endowed with $1,200,000. Five old employees are give $5,000 each. Two sisters and two brothers of the dead millionaire are given $50,000 each and another brother gets $25,000.

The total value of the estate is shown by the petition for letters testamentary $7,600,000. Of this amount $6,800,000 is personal property and $800,000 realty.

How They Stand in Georg'a.

According to the report of Judge Turner, principal keeper of the Georgia state penitentiary, there are a goodly number of farmers in the state prison, but only two newspaper men—one reporter and one printer. There are 975 laborers and 863 farmers in the penitentiary. Of the other occupations, none are represented by over 100. Carpenters come next, with 28, and brickmasons next, with 27. There are 24 painters and 21 cooks, 18 sailors and 15 coachmen. Eleven merchants are doing penal service, but the prison walls enclose but 2 newspaper men—1 reporter and 1 printer—while the school teachers show up with 5 convicts, and, strange to say, the preachers are represented by 2 zebra-striped workers. There are 58 women in the penitentiary.

Mississippi Isolated.

Mississippi has struck the final blow against railroad transportation in that state so long as the yellow fever epidemic continues. Not only is it maintaining strick quarantine against adjoining states, but her own citizens are now prevented from traveling from one town to another. Half a dozen railroads entering the state of Mississippi through Alabama were practically compelled to discontinue the running of trains of any kind.

Mysterious Rain Falling.

The people of Macon, Ga., are all stirred up over the mysterious falling of rain from a clear sky, which has been in progress for several days. The rain falls only over Rose Hill cemetery. Thousands of people visit that locality daily, but no one can account for the phenomenon.

A Wonderful Operation.

Dr. Garey, of Mexico City, has performed an operation, declared to be without a parallel, having successfully operated on and saved the life of a man who had received a knife wound in the upper right hand side of the neck, cutting into the carotid artery. The patient lost three litres of blood and was in an exhausted condition. The artery was tied and the doctor, waiting an opportune moment when the anaurism containing a small quantity of blood, removed the coagulated blood and succeeded finally in stopping the hemorrhage. The patient in fifteen days has been pronounced cured and is strong and active.

United States Senator John T. Morgan who is in San Diego, Cal., is slowly regaining his strength. He has been free from fever for over thirty-six hours, but must remain quiet for some days yet. His trouble is due to an injury to his knee which he received while in Hawaii.

To Operate Gold Mines.

The Alabama-King Mining company has been reorganized with a capital of $100,000 and headquarters in Atlanta. This company will mine for gold at Jackson's Gap, Tallapoosa county, where it owns the Bonner-Terrell properties, containing 200 acres. Three development shafts have been sunk and several open cuts have been made. Assays of the ore have run as high as $80 per ton.

Selma People Encouraged.

The yellow fever situasion at Selma continues to improve. There have been no new cases for several days, and all fever patients have been discharged. There is not a serious case of sickness of any kind in the city. In fact, the health of the city was never better. Quarantine restrictions against all infected localities have been reestablished. Dr. Mullins offers a reward of $1,000 for a trace of yellow fever in Selma, and says there has been none there since 1853.

Removing to Anniston.

The machinery of the United States Rolling Stock company's plant at Decatur is being moved to Anniston, where it will be combined with the company's plant there. It is claimed the removal will cost the company dear, as they are under an ironclad contract with the Decatur Land company not to move any of the plant. An attempt was made some time ago to remove it, but it was stopped by injunction. Since then the company made a heavy bond and is now going ahead doing the thing they were enjoined not to do.

Harsh Words Produced Death.

Last week at Huntsville Bert Hubert noticed that his 3-year-old daughter had her grand-mother's snuff box and instructed her to put it away. A delay in executing his specific request angered the father, and giving away to his temper he scolded the child in a violent manner. From a playful and happy expression the child's face became livid with conflicting emotions; her eyes suddenly gave forth a meaningless stare, and it reeled to the floor insensible. Efforts at resuscitation were fruitless, and a physician was summoned, but the child died soon after his arrival.

Fatal Accident at Gate City.

An accident at the Alabama rolling mills at Gate City Thursday morning resulted in the death of Lindsey Dorkins and William Washington, both negroes. A big band wheel in the guide mill burst while going at the rate of one hundred revolutions per minute, smashing another wheel nearby, tearing down rafters about the building and flinging heavy pieces of iron in all directions. One piece of the wheel, over 1,000 pounds in weight, was thrown into the yard where Lindsey Dorkins and Wm. Washington, two colored men, were loading iron and both men were caught by the heavy missile with the result above stated.

BRIEFLY NOTED.

John Goff, a negro miner, was murdered and robbed near Johns last week.

Dr. Charles Whelan, a prominent citizen of Birmingham, died of Bright's disease last Thursday.

John Johnson, a negro painter, fell from a scaffold in Birmingham Saturday and was instantly killed.

On a plantation two miles from Pickensville, Bill Taylor shot and killed Jim Clark. Both were negroes.

Tom Brown, the oldest colored man in North Alabama, died at Veto, or State Line. He was 101 years of age. He left in all, children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren, the large number of 357.

In an altercation between Bessie Thomas and Ella Barnes, both colored, at Birmingham last week, the latter picked up a lighted lamp and struck her antagonist with it, igniting Bessie Thomas' dress, which blazed up in a second and literally cooked the woman to death.

Hon. Augustus Barnes, one of the most brilliant members of the Alabama bar, and one of the leaders of the Bryan democracy in Alabama, died at Opelika Wednesday of typhoid fever after an illness of seven days. Mr. Barnes was twice mayor of Opelika and once a prominent candidate for congress from that district.

At Bessemer while Ernest Chappell, an operator of the Western Union Telegraph company, was going home on his bicycle, he collided with Millard Harthan, who was also on a wheel, and both were seriously injured, Chappell perhaps fatally. The young men met in a dark street on the outskirts of the town, and came together at full speed.

Atlanta is flooded with 25 cent counterfeit pieces.

A Work of Art.

An evidence of genuine enterprise and liberality is shown by the publishers of the Youths' Companion, Boston, Mass., in giving all new subscribers to their publication an art calendar for 1898—a gem of beautiful color-work far in advance of anything of the kind previously produced. Also, a magnificent illustrated Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Year's double numble of the magazine—each a prize—which will be preserved by thousands of art lovers. By sending a coupon cut from the advertising columns of the local paper of this week or last week, and following its instructions, these artistic and valuable productions can be secured.

Carlist Leader in New York.

Count Henry De Penalosa, one of the leaders in Paris of the Carlist movement, was a passenger on the White Star liner Germanic, which arrived at New York from Liverpool Thursday. Count Penalosa is one of the most enthusiastic supporters of the pretensions of Don Carlos to the throne of Spain. While he would not admit it in words, the count gave a decided impression that his visit here has some connection with an attempt to be made in Don Carlos' interest.

Gov. Atkinson Condemns Lynching.

Mob law was severely condemned by Governor Atkinson in his message to the Georgia legislature in Atlanta the past week. He advocates stringent legislation against mobs and insists that the legislature pass a law laying every county wherein such a crime is committed subjeet to a large indemnity to the relatives of the mob's victim. The governor is in favor of arming the prisoners and allowing them to protect themselves from mobs.

Carnegie Grows Generous.

Andrew Carnegie says he has offered the Carnegie armor plate works to the United States government. If the offer is not accepted the firm will sell them abroad.

He says that he only took up the armor plate business from a sense of duty to his country, and that the works have never paid.

Reforms for Cuba.

The following reforms for Cuba, it is understood, have been formally passed upon and approved by the Spanish cabinet:

The Cuban chamber of deputies is to consist of between forty and fifty members, a deputy for each 40,000 inhabitants. The governor-general is to choose from this chamber five members to form an executive committee, consisting of a president and ministers of the interior, finance, justice and public works.

The governor-general of Cuba is to have the right to veto legislation.

Wants a Postponement.

Long cable messages have been received by United States Attorney General McKenna in the matter of the Union Pacific Railway sale on behalf of the Coates syndicate, making offers that meet the objections raised. The syndicate claims that its bid would produce $20,000,000 more to the government than any other bid, and urges that the sale be adjourned until Dec. 15, to enable congress to determine as to the advisability of the acceptance of bonds in part payment.

An Edison Success.

Thomas A. Edison has succeeded in recovering by electrical means the iron contained in low grade ore. The inventor's experiments have been carried on during the past six years at the old Ogden iron mines, a few miles from Dover, N. J. His process, in brief, consists in pulverizing the ore. The powder is then allowed to fall in close proximity to electro magnets, which deflects the iron to one side, and the non-metallic matter falls to the other side by gravity.

Hottest Place on Earth.

Three or four districts claim the unenviable distinction of being the hottest place on earth. They are all either situated in deserts or in localities where desert winds are prevalent during a portion of the year. The cities on the Red Sea, both to the east and west of that body of water, are subject to very high temperatures in summer. At Massowah, when the southwest wind blows, traversing as it does 1,000 miles of arid sand, the heat becomes unendurable, the thermometer during the daytime frequently rising to a point between 130 and 145, and in the sun going to 170. The wind bears with it clouds of sand and dust from the Sahara, rendering it dangerous to be in the open air, and in spite of the heat the inhabitants are forced to shut themselves up in their houses, stopping every chink through which the wind and dust may enter. The Valley of the Euphrates is another place of high temperatures. At Bagdad the southwest monsoon occasionally sends the thermometer up to 115 or 120. The lower valley of the Ganges is intensely hot, the daily temperature during the summer season being from 105 to 112. The hottest places in the United States are the sandy valleys of Western Arizona, the temperature frequently rising to 110 or 115.

The McPherson (Kan.) Republic says: "The only excitement in town yesterday was the appearance on the public streets of a young man wearing white pants." That should be excitement enough for one day.

A Virtue and a Vice.

Vanity and a proper regard for the feeling of others should both urge you to get rid of that disgusting skin disease. Whether it be a simple abrasion, a chap or a burn, or whether it is a chronic case of Eczema, Tetter or Ringworm, Tetterine will positively, infallibly cure it. Cure it so it will stay cured, too. 50 cents a box at drug stores, or by mail for 50 cents in cash or stamps from J. T. Shuptrine, Savannah, Ga.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

A writer in the current issue of one of the magazines says the average salary of a full professor is $2,000. A full student gets no salary. He gets fired.

Switzerland is importing large numbers of American bicycles. If this thing continues we may presently expect to hear that the Alpine guides have equipped themselves with American wheels.

Clark Geare, of Martinsville, Ind., a war veteran, has just returned $350 of back pension money which he had received on account of physical disability, on the ground that he has recovered his health, and is therefore no longer entitled to a pension. The pension officials say that the case is almost unprecedented.

An enthusiastic church member of Philadelphia has just contributed $1 to the church on his birthday, pledging himself to double the amount on each anniversary of his birth for the rest of his life. If he keeps this pledge and lives long enough the church will have plenty of money, for the amount of his offering on his birthday twenty-five years hence will be something over $16,000,000.

Soldiers, sailors and marines in the active service of the United States are the only persons in the country who can send their mail C. O. D. If their letters are marked "soldier's letter," "sailor's letter," or "marine's letter," as the case may be, and under these words appears the signature of the commanding officer, the postage, but at single rates only, will be collected on delivery.

The vice of intemperance is a hard one to deal with, and in Turkey they have an entirely original way of subduing it. When a society gentleman in the land of the Sultan is found in an intoxicated condition reeling down the street he is taken and given bastinado—a cudgeling; the second and third time he is found in this condition he is chastized, but after the third time he becomes privileged, and is entitled to be carefully taken home by a policeman.

The gradual cooling of the lava which for the last few years has been flowing from the small crater at the foot of the cone of Vesuvius has occasioned an increase of volcanic activity in the central crater, which had become almost obstructed. Now the top of Vesuvius is lighted up every night by the incandescent lava within the crater, while immense pieces are ejected to a great height, accompanied by clouds of steam and ashes. This new eruption renders the summit of the mountain difficult to ascend, but the interesting spectacle attracts many visitors.

Wisconsin appears to have a measure of success in the collection of a tax on personal property. A recent compilation of th eassessment roll showed the confessed ownership of 45,574 musical instruments of an average valuation of $49, and of 29,401 watches worth on an average $15. In this matter of personal property the Wisconsin law goes deeper than in many other States, where a watch worth less than $15 is exempt. Another development of the assessment list is the comparatively high average valuation of $35 on the 408,676 horses in the State, despite the development of electric street-car lines and the favor shown the bicycle.

Says a Philadelphia marriage license clerk: "Probably 50 per cent. of those who come to us for licenses to marry imagine that before they can get the necessary permit they will be compelled to tell all their family secrets. One man who came in one day last spring was actually prepared to undergo a physical examination to prove that his heart and lungs were all right. We made out a license last week for a young fellow who had prepared with some pains evidently the following history of his bride, which he left with us: 'Miss ——, aged 28, in Phil. eight years, father and mother Both Living Both Willing grand father and mother Both dead. Mother fifty-five yrs old father sixty-five yrs old grand father seventy-six when he died grand mother died when father was eighteen yrs old all from delaware Sussex Co.'"

A traveler from Sydney, New South Wales, Mr. Philip Lowden, found two spots on the globe where Uncle Sam's country is the most idolized nation on earth. He says: "On my way to America I stopped some days at Samoa and also at Honolulu. In both countries the feeling toward the Yankee race is of the warmest character. In Samoa the people hate the Germans with absolute detestation, as they have never forgiven their bombardment by the German war vessels. In Honolulu I strongly suspect that the extravagant protestations of affection towards this country are based on the desire for annexation. The controlling element is simply crazing to be annexed to the United States. I thought that if I lived there I would feel the same way. Undoubtedly it would be a great thing for the Hawaiians to come under the protection of the Stars and Stripes."

The rush to the Alaskan gold fields is expected to make a market for the semi-wild horses of Washington and Oregon. Hitherto these ponies have been regarded as a nuisance, and as eating grass that should have fattened sheep. They have been classed with the jack-rabbits of other sections, and several times their extermination has been plotted. They have been sold in large numbers to the abbatoirs to be slaughtered and canned for consumption in France, while their hides were used for covering trunks. The price at the slaughter-house ranged from $1.50 to $4, but prices are stiffening now with the demand for the Yukon. Good prices for the larger horses of the sturdy breed have been given for their use over the mountain trails. They are just as serviceable to flounder through the mud and over the boulders of the treacherous trails as would be better horses, and they can be more readily spared if lost.

An American woman in Spain tells this story in the Independent: "Burguete is near one of the mountain passes leading into France, and from its situation is liable to visits from various orders of tramps anxious to avoid the custom-houses along the regular route. One of these gentry happening to pass through the village the day a certain theft had been reported was arrested on suspicion and whipped severely to force a confession. As nothing but a denial could be wrung from him another vagrant was arrested and subjected to the same treatment, with the same result. It was eventually discovered that a small boy, hidden behind the church tower, had been the culprit. There was no redress for the men; they expected none, and would have been incredulous if told they were entitled to any. Amazed at the indifference with which this act of tyranny was received, I expressed my own indignation. 'What would you?' was the reply, with a gesture intended to throw the responsibility of the act upon the world at large. 'They are worthless fellows; doubtless they have done other evil deeds if not this one.'"

THEY SHOOT HORSES.

Profitable Sport Pursuing the Wild Equines in Nevada.

Profitable Sport Pursuing the Wild Equines in Nevada.

The act passed by the last Nevada Legislature authorizing the killing of wild horses throughout the State has developed a profitable industry and camps of hunters have been established at all of the springs and water courses where the bands resort. The hides sell for $2 each and the hair of their manes and tails bring 15 cents a pound. The growth of the latter on the wild equine species is far more profuse than on the tamed animals, a weight of nearly ten pounds of hair being frequently obtained from one carcass.

The first hunters to take the field after the law went into effect realized handsomely, frequently shooting from six to ten a day, but since the slaughter began the animals have come to view man as a relentless foe and as soon as one is sighted or scented by a band they bound away over the hill, plain and canyon at a speed that defies pursuit, never halting while their supposed enemies are in sight or hearing.

The vast plains, hill slopes and valleys in Humboldt County, west of Humboldt River, extending to the Black Rock and Pueblo Mountain ranges on the Oregon and Idaho borders, is a favorite grazing region for wild horses, bands numbering thousands roaming at will over the broad stretches of hill and plain, keeping in fine condition subsisting on bunch grass, which, when they are exterminated, will furnsh feed for countless herds of cattle prevented heretofore from ranging in the same localities as the wild equine, who evidently claim the most productive feed ranges as their special domain, fiercely attacking cattle venturing within their boundaries.

Magnificent specimens of the equine race, weighing 1,200 and 1,300 pounds, are frequently seen among the wild bands, with heads erect and flowing manes and tails—the latter sweeping the ground, their fleetness preventing their capture by vaqueros, who rarely ever get within a lariat's throw of them. Their organs of hearing, sight and smell are amazingly acute, as the bands take alarm and can be seen speeding over hills miles away whenever travelers approach their domain.

Tame horses turned out to shift for themselves are frequently rounded up by the leaders of wild bands, and soon become as unmanageable as their captors.

The continuance of the slaughter of these nomads will obliterate an interesting feature of Nevada's otherwise vast and inanimate wastes.

The Peanut Cure for Consumption.

In dealing with consumption two things are needful; to keep up the heat and vitality, and also to kill out the tuberculous germs. One means used to keep up the heat is cod liver oil, which we do not think very much of, as we much prefer sweet cream, fresh butter and the oil of various nuts.

The Journal of Hygiene states that Dr. Brewer has a new idea concerning food for consumptives. His treatment consists of the inhaling the fumes of vinegar and the eating of peanuts. He gives his patients as many peanuts as they can eat without injuring their digestive organs. Two young ladies, who had been the round of the doctors and taken cod liver oil and tonics till they were nearly dead, were put on his treatment and recovered. Concerning these cases, Dr. Brewer says: "I now commenced feeding peanuts. One would think this a very indigestive diet, but they craved them, and, it has always been my policy to find out what my patients desire to eat, and unless it is too unreasonable I humor them. Both young ladies have become plump, and after a year's inhalation have ceased to cough, and I pronounced them well. The peanut was long known as an excellent fat producer, and much more agreeable than rank shark oil, that oftentimes is sold for cod liver oil. While not all can digest peanuts, a great many, even with feeble digestion, can eat them without discomfort. It beats the Koch lymph, and is the most satisfactory treatment I have ever tried for these diseases."

We are of opinion that freshly baked peanuts are worth trying—they are cheaper than cod liver oil, and much pleasanter to take. They are also recommended as a remedy for sleeplessness.

AMERICAN MUSICAL PRODIGY.

Miss Augusta Cottlow Among the World's Foremost Musicians.

Miss Augusta Cottlow, the American musical prodigy whose home is in Shelbyville, Ill., is said to be one of the foremost musicians in the world. Although not yet out of her studies, she has managed to amaze and delight the leading musicians of Europe with her superb performances on the piano. For the past two years she has been studying under Herr Tappert and Professor Busoni. The latter, when asked by Miss Cottlow for the amount of his charges, replied: "Gussie, there can be no talk of business between artists. You are an artist. Your music delights me. If I can be of any help to you in your career I shall do all in my power for you. You may take my aid as a courtesy from an older artist to a younger one." Miss Cottlow began her musical studies at 3 years of age. At 5 she made her debut in public. From that time she was in demand. At 9 she was placed in charge of Professor Wolfsohn of Chicago and began her studies in harmony and counterpoint under Professor Gleason. She plays the most difficult music from memory. She won New York musicians with her performances of Beethoven's concerto in C, which she played with the Thomas orchestra three years ago. She has lately turned her mind to composition. Her first piece, "A Romanza" for violin and piano, was bought and published in Germany.

MISS AUGUSTA COTTLOW.

The London papers are telling an amusing incident of the Prince of Wales' visit to Canada thirty-seven years ago. On his journey through the provinces a large number of petitions and addresses of welcome were presented to him from every class and society. One address sent by the lumberers and raftsmen of the Ottawa Valley concluded with the words: "Long may you remain Prince of Wales!"

This very doubtful compliment was no slip of the pen, for when the foreman of the raftsmen was questioned on the subject, he declared that the address meant exactly what it said:

"We are perfectly satisfied with the queen, and want her to remain on the throne as long as she can."

In view of the queen's jubilee, this former raftsman, Mr. Alan Manson, wrote the other day to the prince, reminding him of the incident, and received the following reply:

"His royal highness perfectly remembers the incident to which you refer. His royal highness greatly appreciates and thanks you for your kind and loyal sentiments, and he will not fail to make them known to the queen."

An Unfortunate Admission.

Husband (shaving)—"Confound the razor!" Wife—"What's the matter now? You're dreadfully cross-tempered." Husband—"The razor is so abominably dull!" Wife—"Dull? Why, I ripped up an old skirt with it yesterday and it cut beautifully!"—Tid-Bits.

The Minneapolis Journal editorially remarks: "We have just presented an ultimatum to Peru, who owes us $50,000." If Peru knows what is best for her she will lose no time in settling with that Minneapolis editor.

The hair is like a plant. What makes the plant fade and wither? Usually lack of necessary nourishment. The reason why Ayer's Hair Vigor restores gray or faded hair to its normal color, stops hair from falling, and makes it grow, is because it supplies the nourishment the hair needs.

TENNESSEE'S BEAUTY SPEAKS FOR HER SEX.

Pearl Ogden

Doyle's Station, Tenn., writes: Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine needs no commendation. It speaks for itself. It cures Liver Disorders and breaks up Biliousness and Bilious Colic. I think it is far better than "Thedford's Black Draught."

Menstrual Suppression.

This occurs in early womanhood, especially when the constitution is not strong. It may result from sudden exposure to cold, immersion of the hands and feet in cold water, sitting on the cold ground or damp grass, sedentary habits, confining occupations, continued standing on the feet, irregular hours and forcing the development of the mind at school. Rest is essential and moderate exercise in the open air most beneficial. The bowels should be moved at least once a day by small doses of Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine, and the restorative effects of Dr. Simmons Squaw Vine Wine should be secured by taking regularly a dose three times a day for several weeks.

A. V. Beets

Celina, Tenn., writes: Have used Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine 10 years for Sick Stomach, Loss of Flesh, Low Spirits. It also cures Liver Disease, Biliousness, Constipated Bowels. It does not gripe, and takes less to operate on me than either "Black Draught" or "Zeilin's," and it has a more thorough and gentle effect, and leaves my system in better condition than either "Black Draught" or "Zeilin's."

General Lassitude.

We are provided with five organs for keeping the blood pure; they are the skin, the kidneys, the liver, the lungs and the bowels. The blood becomes impure for one or both of two reasons:

First, something impure has been put into it; Second, the five excretory organs have not been sufficiently active.

Owing to its complicated formation, the blood is liable to many morbid changes. If any of the organs just mentioned are not in perfect working order, so that impurities are retained, the blood becomes disordered and even diseased. When corrupted, its impurities are absorbed by the tissues, causing eruptions, fevers, lassitude and langour. For restoring the above organs to a healthful condition there is no medicine so effective as Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine.

A SONG OF AUTUMN.

Ho for the bending sheaves,
Ho for the crimson leaves
  Flaming in splendor!
Season of ripened gold,
Plenty in crib and fold,
Skies and depth untold,
  Liquid and tender.

Far, like the smile of God,
See how the goldenrod
  Ripples and tosses!
Yonder, a crimson vine
Trails from a bearded pine,
Thin as a thread of wine
  Staining the mosses.

Bright 'neath the morning blue
Sparkles the frosted dew,
  Gem-like and starry.
Hark how the partridge cock
Pipes to his scattered flock.
Mindful how swift the hawk
  Darts on his quarry!

Autumn is here again—
Banners on hill and plain
  Blazing and flying.
Hail to the amber morn,
Hail to the heapt-up corn,
Hail to the hunter's horn,
  Swelling and dying!

—James Buckham, in "The Heart of Life."

A WEDDING RECEPTION

By HELEN FORREST GRAVES.

"UST what I expected!" said Miss Delavigue, mournfully.

She was sitting out on the balcony, where the mignonnete and asters were all a blaze of vivid color, to enjoy the sunset; but she didn't enjoy it any more, after Muriade Vail had told her the news. There was a band playing in the little park, whose green grass and sparkling fountain formed such a pretty picture, but she did not hear its music any longer.

"Married!" said Miss Delavigue, lifting her hands and drawing a sepulchral sigh—"married! Does the whole world think, and dream, and trouble itself about nothing else?"

"I'm very sorry, aunt," said Muriade, "but—"

"No, you are not," interrupted Miss Delavigue. "Don't begin, at this late day, to tell me falsehoods."

"I don't mean that I'm sorry because I've promised to marry Tom," said Muriade, with a bright spot on each cheek, "because that would be a falsehood. No, indeed, I'm not sorry; but I mean I'm vexed to disappoint you, aunt."

Muriade was a dark, Spanish-eyed girl, with brows like two perfect arches; a red, cherry-cleft mouth, and the most roguish of dints, scarcely large enough to be dignified with the name of dimple, that came and went in a capricious fashion in her chin. She stood, with folded hands and head slightly drooped, before the prim, elderly lady, whose black silk dress resolved itself into such perfect folds, and whose iron-gray curls hung so precisely on either side of her face.

"Didn't I take you when you were seven years old, and bring you up as a young lady should be brought up?" sadly demanded Miss Delavigue.

"Yes, aunt."

"And haven't I had you educated at Mademoiselle Melisse's, with extra piano lessons, and your voice cultivated at two dollars a lesson?" went on the old lady.

"Yes, aunt," confessed Muriade.

"And," severely went on the catechist, "just as you were getting to be a real companion for me in my advancing years, you forget all this, and run off with—Tom Whitworth."

"I haven't run off with him, aunt!" flashed out Muriade, scarcely knowing whether to laugh or cry.

"But you would if you couldn't wring a consent from me. You know you would," said Miss Delavigue. "You'd scramble down a ladder, or climb out of a fourth-story window."

"I love him, aunt," said Muriade, earnestly; "and he loves me."

"Rubbish!" said Aunt Delavigue, with an energy which nearly tipped her eye-glasses from her Roman nose. "You mean that he loves your expectations. He loves the idea of inheriting my money and this brown-stone house, and all the shares in the Mexican silver mines. That's the beginning and the end of it!"

"Never, aunt!" cried poor Muriade.

"That's well," grimly pronounced Miss Delavigue; "because I've my own ideas on the subject. I don't know that I'm at all too old to marry myself."

"Aunt!" exclaimed Muriade, in surprise.

"Why not?" said Miss Delavigue. "I suppose there can be old fools as well as young ones."

"But," pleaded Muriade, "are you in earnest?"

"Why shouldn't I be in earnest?"

"Aunt," burst out Muriade, "is it Major Larkington? Is it? Oh, I know it is! And oh, aunt, dear, I do so hope you will be happy! And Major Larkington is perfectly splendid, since he got his false teeth, only, aunt, those tedious stories of his about the war in Florida—won't you get tired of them, if you're obliged to hear them every day?"

Miss Delavigue looked in some perplexity at her niece. She had supposed that this hint would have filled Muriade with dismay and disappointment; but on the contrary that young lady appeared to accept the idea as the most natural thing in the world. And Tom Whitworth, chancing, entirely by accident, of course, to come in just about that time, coincided in Muriade's view of affairs entirely.

"The jolliest thing I ever heard of," declared Tom, who was a fair-complexioned young Saxon, with curly yellow locks, a blonde moustache and superb teeth—which latter was a fortunate circumstance, because Tom Whitworth was always laughing. "It's regular middle-aged romance!"

"I dare say," said Miss Delavigue, primly. "But what do you say to some one else getting all my money?"

"Dear me!" said Tom, lifting his blonde brows. "It was Muriada I wanted, not your money, Miss Delavigue. Of course, if you chose to leave it to us, after you had done with it, it would have been very acceptable. Ready cash always comes handy. Now, you know that, Muriade, as well as I do," in response to a warning gesture from his fiancee.

"Oh, Tom, you are such a bungler!" said Muriade, half laughing, half crying.

"Well, perhaps I am," confessed Tom. "But I want Miss Delavigue to understand the whole thing. The money is hers, and we don't grudge it to her. And we're ready to work for our own, aren't we, Muriade? I'm not rich, but my office brings me a thousand dollars a year, and we're both going to economize like everything—aren't we, Muriade? And Major Larkington's a brick, and we hope you'll be happy, exactly as we're going to be."

And Tom Whitworth squeezed Miss Delavigue's hand until the old lady cried out for mercy.

"And now, aunt," said Muriade, radiantly, "when is the wedding to be? And why haven't you said anything about it before?"

Miss Delavigue hesitated a little. She blushed. Apparently she did not know what to say on the spur of the moment.

"Well," she faltered, "Major Larkington did say something about the twentieth of December."

"Christmas-time!" exclaimed Muriade. "Oh, Tom, how perfectly delightful! Couldn't we manage to have our wedding at the same time?"

"No," said Tom, stoutly. "We must be married on the first of December. You said we should, Muriade, and you mustn't go back of your word."

"But, Tom, it would only be three weeks."

"Three weeks or three days," stoudly maintained Tom Whitworth, "you promised me, and I can't let you off."

"Well, then, you obstinate fellow," said Muriade, "we can be back from our trip just in time to dance at Aunt Delavigue's wedding."

"Agreed!" said Tom, looking very happy, indeed.

Apparently the young couple were in no wise discomfited at the idea of going to housekeeping on a capital of love, and love alone.

Tom Whitworth began to look diligently around among dim old auction rooms and musty second-hand stores, to find something astoundingly cheap and delightfully comfortable, wherewith to garnish the small cottage which he had decided to take a little out of town, so as to economize in rent.

And Muriade joined a cooking class, made herself a bib-apron, and began to come down into Miss Delavigue's kitchen to experiment in pies and puddings, dainty little tea-biscuit, and salad which might have tempted an anchorite to break his vows.

And she studied up the question of polishing brasses, cleaning plate-glass, mending china, and darning table linen with notable earnestness. And she was more affectionate than ever with her aunt.

"Because," she told Tom, "there is something so pathetic about Aunt Delavigue's happiness, coming so strangely in the autumn of her life. And I'm afraid, Tom—now don't tell anybody—that Major Larkington is only going to marry her for her money. For he is certainly ten years younger than she is, and he has only come from Philadelphia once to see her since the engagement."

"Love is like the measles," said Tom, philosophically. "Every one has it a different way."

While Miss Delavigue, who had been judge and jury all by herself, at least rendered the verdict to a public consisting of herself, alone.

"They love each other, after all. My money had nothing to do with it. Tom loves Muriade, and Muriade has not ceased to love her old aunt, now that she no longer believes herself to be an heiress. There is such a thing as honor, and truth, and real affection in the world, after all."

The first of December came, and Miss Delavigue gave Muriade the prettiest of weddings, under a marriage bell of white rose-buds and smilax, with an artistic little dejeuner, and the bride went away in a dove-colored silk dress, with daisies in her hat.

"But, aunt," she said, "it's so strange that Major Larkington isn't here?"

"He couldn't come," said Miss Delavigue. "He'll be on hand on the twentieth. Mind you and Tom get back in time!"

"Oh, we'll be sure to do that!" said Muriade. "And be sure, aunt, that you thank the major for the dear little pearl locket that he sent me."

The twentieth of December came; so did Mr. and Mrs. Tom Whitworth, fresh from the icy spray of Niagara Falls.

Miss Delavigue's parlors were once more decorated with the choicest hot-house flowers, while Souberetti's men were arranging the supper-table. The old lady herself, in pearls, point lace, and the palest of lavender silks, stood in the middle of the room, receiving her guests. Major Larkington himself was there, looking very stiff and military, and an old-young lady in a dress exactly of the same pattern of Miss Delavigue's.

"You are late, Tom and Muriade," said the hostess, beamingly. "The marriage ceremony was performed half an hour ago. The major thought he would rather have it over before the guests began to arrive. Stop! Don't congratulate me! I'm not the bride. This," introducing the old-young lady with the profusion of curls, and the slight soupcon of powder on her cheek bones, "is Mrs. Major Larkington, and my old schoolmate, Helena Dove, who has given me great pleasure by accepting my hospitality on this occasion."

"Delighted. I am sure!" stammered Tom, staring with all his eyes.

"Many congratulations!" faltered Muriade, scarcely less amazed.

And then they took advantage of a stream of newcomers, who monopolized the bridal pair and taxed Miss Delavigue with her duplicity.

"Sold," said Tom, succinctly, "completely!"

"Aunt, how could you deceive us so?" said Muriade.

"I didn't deceive you," said Miss Delavigue, laughing. "I said there could be old fools as well as young ones, and I say so still. And you yourself mentioned Major Larkington! I didn't feel myself called upon to go into any disclaimers, although I knew then that he was engaged to Helena Dove; and the only point I gained was the certainty that my dear niece and nephew were not heartless fortune-seekers, but loved me just as well as if they believed themselves my heirs, as well as the conviction that Tom Whitworth loved Muriade just because she was Muriade, and not the rich old woman's only relation."

Miss Delavigue made her will the next day, and she left all her money to Muriade and Tom, because she was easy in her mind at last.

"It was a regular conspiracy," she said; "but it revealed to me exactly what I wanted to know."—Saturday Night.

A Magnetic Island.

The stories of magnetic mountains that exert an attraction that cannot be withstood on all vessels that come into their vicinity have some foundation in reality, and that, too, in the neighborhood of Germany. The well known island of Bornholm, situated in the Baltic, and belonging to Denmark, may be regarded as a huge magnet. Although the power of this magnet is not so great that it can draw the nails out of ships, as was told of the island in the "Arabian Nights," the magnetism of the rocks on the island of Bornholm can cause a good deal of trouble to ships in quite another way. It exerts such an influence on the magnetic needle that it can cause a vessel to turn perceptibly aside from her course. This is quite possible, as the effect of this magnetic island is perceptible at a distance of nine and a half miles.—Glasgow Herald.

What "Ocean Springs" Is.

Ocean Springs, the scene of the fever epidemic, is the oldest French settlement on the Gulf Coast. In 1682 La Salle and Tonty, after having explored the Northwestern country, paddled down the Mississippi River to its mouth and claimed all the sourrounding country in the name of the French King. Several years later France sent out colonists who settled at Ocean Springs, which, however, they called Fort Biloxi, the name having been changed in recent years. The plague which visited these early colonists from time to time was probably nothing more nor less than yellow fever.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

ROOF OF THE WORLD.

AN UNKNOWN COUNTRY AND ITS STRANGE INHABITANTS.

Lassa, in the Land of the Lama, the Impenetrable Mountain Realm of Thibet—Its People Are Savage and Depraved.

A few years since, two Russian explorers, MM. Menkhoudjinoff and Oulanoff, arrived at Shanghai after a journey of two years and nine months through Thibet, in the course of which they penetrated to the capital, Lassa, and had actually had an interview with the great Dalai Lama himself. The wonderfulness of this feat can only be appreciated in the light of the knowledge that no European has ever before entered Lassa within the memory of the living world. The few explorers who have dared the perils of the wild and snowy changs, lofty plateaus, the robber Dokpas or dwellers in black tents, the Chinese guards and the Thibetan soldiery, have only succeeded in struggling through dreary miles of deserts and along monsoon-swept marshes, and have returned with only half-glimpsed descriptions of the innumerable monasteries, the prayer-mills or rattles and the buttered tea of this unique and most unknown country.

This impregnably barred Lassa is the dwelling place of the Dalai Lama, the chief priest of Thibet and Mongolia. This religious pretender is worshipped as the earthly incarnation of Buddha. Incense is burned to him before a gigantic idol of the god of Jamba, a monstrous image of clay and gilt with jeweled head, which sits enthroned in the great white palace of the Potala. Lamaism is a hybrid Buddhism, just as Mohammedanism is a hybrid Christianity.

The utter exclusion of all foreigners from this strange land has been and is undoubtedly due to the fear of the Thibetan hierarchy of priests that this absurd imposition of their red and yellow religion, which has completely enslaved the Thibetans, might be speedily overthrown by the Christian "devils;" They are afraid the wealth of the monasteries would be revealed. At present the priests own Thibet as absolutely as though they held fee-simple to every foot of its ground. The Chinese empire holds a nominal temporal sway, but dares not—if it would—disturb the Dalai Lama and his army of priests. MM. Menkhoudjinoff nd Oulanoff are the first travelers who have gazed upon and entered that city hitherto as inaccessible as the north pole.

The immense territory of Thibet is almost completely surrounded by mountain ranges of appalling magnitude, which, especially along the southern, western and northern frontiers, constitute formidable barriers against ingress. From the Pamir plateau, in the extreme west, ("the world's backbone,") radiate the great natural ramparts, which shut out India on the one hand and the Tartar countries of Bokhara and Turkestan on the other. No Asiatic or western conqueror has even dared to penetrate this mountain world, and even Genghis Khan, the scourge of Asia, whose ravages extended from Pekin in the east to Moscow in the west, was obliged, when invading northern India, to take the circuitous rout via Kashghar and Afghanistan, instead of crossing Thibet. Secure on their lofty plateau, and practically isolated from the rest of the world, the people have remained undisturbed for ages, and have developed characteristics for which we would vainly search in any other race of the globe.

The Thibetans occupy a very low position in the scale of human advancement, especially if judged from our western standard of civilization. Their culture is inferior to that of most semi-barbarous races, comparing unfavorably even with that of certain Indian tribes of the American continent, such as the Pueblos, Zunis, etc. In physiognomy and general appearance they strongly resemble the inhabitants of Swedish Lapland, as well as the Eskimos of Northern Siberia, being short-sized, broad-shouldered and possessed of the same angular Mongolian features Indeed, the Thibetans are, perhaps, the most ill-favored of Turanian races. A close interbreeding during many centuries of isolation has produced a striking facial similarity, and has developed a peculiarly repulsive normal type of countenance. A broad, very low forehead, excessively prominent cheek bones, oblique eyes, and coarse bristly black hair are characteristics which do not materially enhance the beauty of the "human form divine," but the most singular peculiarity of the Thibetan face is the almost total absence of the bridge of the nose. Among a dozen Thibetans, chosen at random, hardly one will be found whose nasal organ is not so completely flattened or sunk in the middle as to be practically level in the middle as to be practically level with the eyes. Seen in profile such a face presents a ludicrous appearance; there is one continuous line of cheek bone, with the tip of the nose sticking out like a solitary beacon. But a compensatory providence has added to the ears what is lacking in probosial circumference, and it is but fair to state that the auricular appendages of the average Thibetans are of generous size.

The Thibetans are absolutely without gratitude. They will demand tremendous rewards for feeble services, steal everything within sight, regard politeness and gentleness as indications of cowardice, and merely refrain from stabbing their guests because their courage fails them. Poisoning is popular, and the Thibetan is so suspicious of his own countryman that he will drink and eat nothing until his host partakes plentifully before him. The character of all the Thibetans, settled and nomandic is the same—cowardly, faithless and immoral. They are servile to the brave, insolent to the fearful and mere tools in the hands of the lamas, or monks. They are false to their best friends, as is witnessed by their desertion of the French missionaries who have been their most constant helpers.

Their physique is notably good, and they stand cold and hunger admirably. They are active, and at first view, lighthearted and genuine; but in reality are cunning, foul and unlovable. They are very unclean, rarely or never bathing their persons. The dress of the common people consists of a very dirty, greasy sheepskin robe which they use as bedding at night. The taste for trading is very strongly developed, and they seize every opportunity to make money. Vast quantities of tea are consumed by them, and they enjoy it, especially when mixed with butter and salt. Their tea is sold in bricks and is of a very inferior quality. During all discussions of state and in their ordinary assemblies, each man has a cup before him which is continually replenished.

The population of Thibet proper and Chinese Thibet is 8,000,000. Looking at the enormous strentch of country over which these millions are distributed, it is apparent that the country is very sparcely populated.—Boston Transcript.

A DECLINING INDUSTRY.

Same Skill No Longer Required in Making Famous Straw Hats.

A strike in the gentle, smiling valley of the Arno, says a Rome correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette, has drawn attention to the straw-plait industry there. It is one that is greatly affected by change of fashions, and has its periods of prosperity and depression. The days have gone by when the property about Florence was divided among a few manufacturers of straw hats (what the English call Leghorns), who when marrying their daughters gave them a dot of several thousand of scudi, (each scudi being worth four shillings), and a straw hat, the strands of which, less than a millimetre in width, were made of straws so fine that, after being woven, a magnifying glass was needed to distinguish them. Now rich travelers travelling through Florence go no more to the Via Porta Rossa to pay 100 francesconi (£22 for a straw hat to take home as a present.

Fashion has transformed the Florence straw industry. The profit now comes from the quantity, not the quality; and consequently the hand work at one time sought after and well paid has gradually decreased in price until the wages of the workers are infamous. When the wholesale price of a hat, all made and sewed, is a penny or two—and there are those at even a lower price—it is easy to imagine what compensation the straw-workers get for the twenty-five to thirty-five yards of made strands which are necessary for one hat.

The skill formerly required in the plaiting is, however, no longer required. Once it was an art, now every one can do it—the boys and girls who drive the cattle to pasture, the women at home, beggars, all those who have nothing else to do. In the mountains the men who break stones have been seen at straw-plaiting in their few leisure moments, and even men who drive coal carts. This "vulgarization" and overproduction will, in the end, be the death of the industry. There have been immense exportations, especially to America, and, consequently, an overstocked market; and until some means are found of diminishing the production the industry will go from bad to worse, with the gravest consequences to those who live by it.

There are exporters who buy the straw plait in bulk, paying if not sufficient for the work, more than is warranted by their own profits, and who only continues the business out of charity for the poor people of the district. But this in many cases does not prevent them from being accused of profiting by the necessities of the workers. Hence the strike.

Another misfortune for this industry is the new United States tariff, which raises the duty on worked straw from 25 to 35 per cent of its value. Besides the Italian productions have to struggle, in America, against the competition, increasing day by day, of the Japanese and Chinese straw. The outlook is indeed dark, for no matter how the poor Florentine straw-plaiters protest and strike, they have no remedy. It is a question of overproduction for a constantly diminishing market.

NO DIMINUTION YET.

Uncle Sam's Pension Roll Grows Larger, as Seen by the Report.

The first annual report of Commissioner of Pensions H. Clay Evans to the secretary of the interior was made public Friday.

There were added to the rolls during the year 50,101 new pensioners, and there were restored to the rolls 3,971 pensioners who had been previously dropped, a total of 54,072. Losses were 3,960 by death, 1,074 by re-marriage of widows and mothers, 1,145 by legal limitation (minors), 2,683 for failure to claim pension for three years and 360 for other causes, an aggregate of 41,122.

The whole number of pensioners on the rolls June 30, 1897, was 976,014. The net gain over the previous year was 5,336. It will thus be seen that the pension roll has not yet begun to show any diminution. Seven widows of revolutionary soldiers and nine daughters of revolutionary soldiers are still on the rolls.

The amount disbursed for pensions by the pension agents during the year was $139,799,242.12, and the amount disbursed by treasury settlement was $150,475.23, a total of $139,949,717. This exceeds the amount disbursed during the fiscal year 1896 by the sum of $1,854,480.

NEW YORK'S PATRONAGE.

Second Only to That of the President of the United States.

More than 55,000 persons will directly or indirectly draw pay from the city in the first administration of the mayor of Greater New York. The salaries of 33,000 of these whose names will be actually on the city's pay roll will aggregate $33,000,000. Part of this amount represents the salaries and patronage of the other officers elected on Tuesday, but this is comparatively small, most of the total representing the patronage of Greater New York's first mayor, Robt. A. Van Wyck.

Second only to the president of the United States, in the value of his patronage, the first mayor of the greater city is first in the significance of this patronage. With his colleagues-elect, of the same political party as himself, Mr. Van Wyck can lead an army of office-holders, and those indirectly employed by the city, as great as the Army of the Potomac.

Tragedy at Gallatin, Tenn.

The Dismukes-Rhodes affair at Gallatin, Tenn., a few days ago, has at last resulted in a tragedy. Thursday afternoon John Rhodes was standing in the public square, when Martin Dismukes came out of the court house and fired at Rhodes with a double-barreled shotgun. Rhodes ran a few steps and fell. Bystanders rushed in and prevented Dismukes from firing again. The gun was loaded with buckshot. One ball struck Rhodes in the shoulder and another entered just under the heart, inflicting probably fatal wounds.

The shooting was the outcome of an attack upon ex-Senator Dismukes by the Rhodes boys a few days ago. Martin Dismukes tried to kill Rhodes on the day of the attack on his father, firing once at him, but striking a bystander

Plunged Into a River.

The Chesapeake and Ohio vestibule express, known as the "F. F. V.," from Cincinnati to Washington, was wrecked near Old Shadwell, five miles east of Charlottsville, Va., Thursday afternoon. Four persons were killed and seventeen injured. All the cars except the baggage car and the Richmond sleeper were derailed. Two cars were pludged end foremost down the steep embankment and one of them went into the Rivannia river, which at this place skirts the track. The day passenger coach and the express car were badly wrecked. The accident was caused by the breaking of the axle of the front truck of the locomotive.

TRADE OUTLOOK BRIGHTER.

Resumption of Traffic and Prospective Revival in Staples Are Features.

TRADE STIMULATED BY THE COLD WEATHER.

October Made a Splendid Record on Failures—Moderate Reaction in Iron and Steel—Leading Manufacturing Industries Continue Fairly Well Employed.

Bradstreet's trade report says in part:

Killing frosts south, the raising of quarantine embargoes in nearly all states invaded by yellow fever, the resumption of traffic and a prospective revival in demand for staple merchandise constitute the trade features of the week.

Rains in central western and western states, followed by colder weather have favored farmers and stimulated demand from interior store keepers. Jobbers in northwestern states are awaiting seasonable weather to stimulate the movement of heavy dry goods and winter clothing. Features at larger Pacific coast cities are confined to sales of merchandise and provisions for the Klondike, and the heavy foreign shipments of wheat and flour. New England centers report that orders from the west exceed those from the south or east. Leading manufacturing industries continue fairly well employed. While there has been a moderate reaction in iron and steel, furnaces and mills continue well employed, and the outlook for higher quotations next year is unchanged.

In addition to lower prices for southern and Bessemer pig and for steel billets quotations for naval stores, wools, copper, coffee, pork, flour, oats and wheat are lower, while those for cotton, print cloths, sugar and beef are unchanged, and corn, lead and lard a shade higher. Exports of wheat (flour included), from both coasts of the United States and from Montreal this week aggregate 5,477,156 bushels, compared with 5,911,691 bushels last week, 3,477,000 bushels one year ago.

Exports of Indian corn this week amount to 2,199,550 bushels, compared with 1,589,000 bushels last week, 2,407,000 bushels in the corresponding week one year ago.

There are 223 business failures reported throughout the United States this week, compared with 218 last week; 223 in the week a year ago, 260 two years ago, 261 three years ago and as compared with 333 in the first week of November, 1893.

ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION.

The President of Brazil Attacked by a Desperate Soldier.

A dispatch from Rio Janeiro says: At 1 o'clock Friday afternoon a soldier of the Tenth battalion, which constitutes part of the local garrison, attempted to shoot President Moraes with a pistol. The president was just landing at the marine hospital after visiting the steamer on which General Barbardosa, minister of marine, had returned from Baia.

The by-standers frustrated the attempt, but Colonel Moraes, the president's nephew, was slightly wounded in disarming the soldier.

General Bitancour, minister of war, then interfered and was himself stabbed. The wound was so seriour that he died soon afterwards.

An Ill Fated Train.

A passenger train on the St. Louis and Southwestern road, known as the "Cotton Belt" route, was ill fated, and death marked its run Friday. Near Mount Pleasant the train ran over J. C. Beasley, ex-section foreman, who had fallen asleep on the track. He was instantly killed,

About thirty miles further west, near Greenville, three negro children were playing down among the timbers of a trestle bridge. They scampered up to the track, trying to escape. Two were killed between the rails. The other child died an hour later.

A few miles further west, near Wylie, a passenger named J. C. Davis entered the toilet room and committed suicide by shooting himself through the head.

May Open Arbitration Negotiations.

Sir Julian Pauncefote, the British ambassador, who is just back from London, probably will confer with Secretary Sherman at an early date concerning the reopening of negotiations for an Anglo-American treaty of arbitration. Mr. Sherman made known to the British authorities some months ago that the president would view with favor a reopening of the negotiations, and was hopeful that a peace treaty ultimately would be secured. The British officials were much gratified at this suggestion, but no negotiations were entered upon. Since then Sir Julian has visited London and has had an opportunity to learn the views of the foreign office.

NEGRO COLONY LAUNCHED.

Mrs. Lillian K. Ray, an English Woman, at the Head.

Saturday witnessed the formal opening of the Cedar Lake negro colony in Morgan county, promoted and backed by Mrs. Lillian K. Ray, the wealthy English woman, who represents a syndicate of English capitalists. Application was made for a city charter, and a provisional government elected. Several hundred negroes were present, and seem to be in earnest with the movement. The colony comprises 367 acres of fine wheat and tobacco lands, beautifully located, on either side of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, three and a half miles from Decatur.

Mrs. Ray has donated the lands to the colony, and built thereon school and church buildings and donated $10,000 on condition that 140 houses are built by the negroes within another year. She has enlisted the aid and support of many prominent and wealthy people. She read a letter to the gathering from President Smith, of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad company, promising aid and support to build a depot, side tracks, etc., and give all necessary shipping concessions. She has the promise of a wealthy Providence, R. I., firm to erect a 20,000 spindle cotton mill at a cost of $60,000, and a cigar factory. She will be materially aided by Thomas J. Lipton, an English millionaire. He is interested in tobacco culture, and his plantations in Cuba having been destroyed has decided to invest in Alabama, as he believes tobacco culture here will be profitable.

MONTEVALLO, ALABAMA.

Thursday. Nov. 11, 1897.

Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, consul-general at Havana, sailed for his post of duty on the 10th inst.

The Sunny Southland of Calera has moved up salt river. We understand they will issue tri-annually.

The backbone of yellow fever is about broken, and refugees are beginning to return to their different.

Ex-Congressman Alex. C. Davidson, of Pery county, died at his home near Uniontown Sunday morning.

The Advertiser continues to roast the governor for leaving the capital and making Birmingham the temporary seat of government in order to get away from the yellow fever at Montgomery. The governor didn't want yellow fever.

Cotton is lower than it has been in many years, and while there is no prospect of the price getting very much better, yet we believe if the farmers could hold it until next spring they could realize a much better price for it. But it is not always good policy to hold cotton.—Ex.

The continued increase in price of flour should be a warning to our farmers to raise wheat. The greatest difficulty we labor under is lack of good mills to grind it. Then, too, our people think any poor land will do for wheat and that it's as well to plow shallow as deep for raising wheat. All this is a sad mistake. The better the land, the deeper it's broke, the more pains you take soaking the seed in blue stone, getting seed from north of us and other advantages, the better it will pay. Let our farmers have their mercnant send to Tennessee and get two best varieties of seed wheat and begin anew to raise home supplies. It will pay you.

While in Tuscaloosa last week the editor called at the county jail where Stoneking is in a cell charged with murder. After talking with the prisoner a short while we found him inclined to be a peaceable, quiet citizen, although there seems to be strong prejudice against him. He has a family in Tuscaloosa, and some of the best people in that city say he was justifiable in doing what he did. Where prejudice exist people only look on one side of the question. We have had experience along that line and know whereof we speak. Justice should be done at all times and under all circumstances. People are sometimes deprived of their liberty unjustly.

We call especial attention to the advertisement of the Atlanta Constitution's sixth missing word contest, to be found elsewhere. We have made arrangements to club our paper with the Weekly Constitution, and if you want to enter the contest and stand a chance of winning a good prize, call at the NEWS office and subscribe for both papers, and your guess will be forwarded at once. In company with Rev. P. L. Abernathy, we visited Concord last week, one of Bro. Abernathy's churches. While there, we visited the school. We were afraid to talk much, as we did't know any too much about telegraphy—it all sounded alike to us. We didn't forget the cooking department. Mr. Gibson promised us a lot of good things. We found that the girls liked good things as well it not better than ourself. They left the dishes, but that was about all. Miss Evans, who has charge of this department, promised to save something for us next time. She has 12 classes and 210 pupils.

The hall was prettily decorated for hallow'een. One feature of the occasion was a mammoth pumpkin man that winked and blinked from his elevated position in the corner in solemn approbation of the evening recitation and songs, interspersed with the usual hallow'een observances of telling fortunes, etc. The club wore the colors of orange and blue, and decided upon a monogram pin of gold.

The next meeting of the club will be held on Saturday, Nov. 13th.

Among other things we are happy to announce that we have at length had steam turned on in the building and our rooms made exceedingly comfortable, as the friends most interested in the proceedings of the dormitory might possibly discover by the use of a good field glass, as well as some other most entertaining facts—chicken for dinner on Sundays, for instance.

GATE TO THE GOLD FIELDS.

Wonderful Growth of the Town of Skaguay.

Skaguay is a modern wonder. Not many weeks ago the place practically did not exist. To-day, with its carefully laid out streets and its scores of well stocked and cosy private dwellings, it presents all the appearance of a thriving Northwestern town. Houses are being rushed up with astonishing rapidity, while merchants are so numerous and enterprising that competition has already reduced their wares to almost bottom prices. The starting up of a steam laundry has caused the "biled shirt" to be accepted as good form in this out of the way settlement, while the establishment of thirteen saloons plainly indicates the prevalence of a generous atmosphere of conviviality.

The New York Herald's special correspondent, in an entertaining article published herewith, gives a graphic description of Skaguay as he found it entering the fourth week of its municipal existence. He says:

Nothing in the history of Western boom towns will compare with the mushroom growth of Skaguay. Ben Moore, the man who located the town site, left for the Sound on August 10, at which date there was his own log cabin, the store and the bunkhouse of the Alaska and Northwest Trading Company and a number of tents. When he returned there were whole streets of wooden dwellings, which the owners had themselves located and had paid a registry fee to United States Commissioner Smith of five dollars. Not only were these newcomers permitted to locate on Captain Moore's land on payment of the fee, but it is said that Mr. Smith accepted the fee and gave a registration receipt to half a dozen different people for the same plot of land. The newly appointed Land Commissioner and Register, Mr. Dudley, will therefore have some difficulty in unravelling the conflicting real estate ownership on the town site.

Skaguay is on a tide flat, with a tide running over twenty feet, and therefore has a stretch of half a mile below tidewater mark. All the passengers by big steamers are taken off in row boats, with a pull of from one to two miles, according to the state of the tide, when they are carried on the backs of the boatmen to comparatively dry land. It is amusing to hear the shrieks of the women when on the back of the boatmen splashing through the water.

Only a month ago, when the Willamette landed her couple of thousands of gold seekers, all the freight and passengers' luggage were landed in these small boats, or small scows, and dumped on the shore pell mell, higgledy-piggledy, from which each owner had to hurry to secure his particular goods before the rapidly incoming tide ruined them or swept them away. Immense scows are now in use, big enough to take the whole of a ship's cargo. These, when loaded, float to shore on a high tide, and each owner gets out his own goods as soon as he can, and woe to him whose belongings chance to be near the bottom of the huge pile.

I watched the steamer Queen unload in this way. There was a good deal of hustling, necessarily, but I heard no complaint of any goods being stolen or lost—except temporarily. In fact, the whole community seems wonderfully honest considering that the black sheep of the continent are herding in this direction.

Merchants in tents leave their goods hanging outside all right; pilgrims leave their camps on the trail, with all their belongings scattered about; yet but few cases of pilfering have been heard of, and only one theft of money. This was in the case of a man named W. H. Davison, of Seattle, who for twelve days had $1400 in his kit under a pile of feed in his tent. He left his tent often in perfect confidence, but one day he found his belongings had been disturbed and that the money was gone.

Another Seattle man at once gave him $100 with which to take out his feed, for he had already gotten his goods some distance along the trail. But this was only the beginning of Davison's bad luck. He was one of the first on the trail, and worked beyond his strength. Just past the summit he had an attack of pneumonia, and, getting worse instead of better, had to give up. He is now here waiting for the next steamer, having left his outfit with his partner, who hopes to sell it to some one who will pay for the difficult journey they made with it up the pass.

There does not appear to have been any pilfering of goods left on the beach from the steamers. In a short time there will be no chance for this. The two long piers are hotly competing for the honor of being first completed and early next month both will be in operation. That of the Skaguay Wharf Company is already piled to its ocean end, a length of over fifteen hundred feet, in a curving line from the northern to the southern side of the bay, thus blocking off all further competition in this line. This will be known commonly as the Juneau Pier, its promoters being J. P. Jorgensen, hardware merchant; E. Valentine, jeweller, and E. D. Sylvester, editor of the Searchlight, all of Juneau. The other pier will be known as the Seattle Dock, as it is largely backed by capital from that Sound city. This starts from the street south of Broadway and runs straight to the completed dock under the cliff. Both will have warehouses, to which goods will be taken direct from the ship, and there await the proper claimants.

These two great piers are impressive to the incoming stranger, who knows that the town is only a month old, but as to the rest he can see but little from the steamer's decks. Tents dot the shore the whole of its width, with here and there a small wooden building. The latter are rapidly taking the place of the canvas homes and stores, for the reason that cold weather and heavy rains have set in, and more especially very high winds. Captain McKinney, the Chairman of the Vigilance Committee, estimates that there are now one hundred and fifty buildings of wood, and that there would have been many more but for the scarcity of lumber. There is a sawmill hard at work now, lumber is coming in by every steamer, and nearly every one having the purpose to winter here is putting up a habitation of wood. Many are erecting larger and more substantial buildings than their needs require, as a speculation, hoping to sell at a large profit when the rush is renewed next spring and when they once more pack up for the Klondike.

Probably as many as fifty of such substantial dwellings are going up.

A curious phase of the situation among those who have decided to winter here is that nearly every one of them believes that he has just the natural gifts necessary to make a successful merchant. They are all putting their great stakes into goods, which they hope to turn into money again, with a large profit, by the spring, and then sell out an established business when the weather permits them to leave for the gold fields. Thus is the new city building up. There are thirteen saloons, a majority of their proprietors having plans for getting to the Klondike as soon as possible, and there are between three and four hundred merchants of whom the same thing may be said.

Not only on Broadway, but along the intersecting streets and among the big timbers on each side of the trail, are these merchants' tents and stores, little and big, and all sorts and conditions of men are interested in them, from the spectacled, muscleless store clerk, clumsily handling the saw and the axe on his new building, to the stolid backwoodsman, to whom the making of change is a difficult mental operation.

One would think that the town would be overdone with so many merchants, and perhaps it will be soon, when the steamers are fewer and passengers on them not numerous enough to be worth mentioning. But there is a population of over five hundred still in tents, and it is believed that there will be continual coming and going until the beginning of December, to be then renewed the month following. So many merchants, however, has had the effect of bringing down prices, which, considering the freight charges, are now rapidly getting to the bottom, making it nearly as cheap to winter here as at Juneau or any other northern point.

But the visitor must not expect luxuries. He must be content with a bunk and provide his own bedding. The bunk will cost him from seventy-five cents a night up. Meals at cheap restaurants are fifty cents each. He will, however, in all probability, hire a tiny shack and learn to cook for himself if he is to be a gold hunter. Then, as before stated, he will find the price of the bare necessaries of life no higher in proportion than Seattle. Flour is $1.50 per sack, potatoes $1.25, bacon twelve to fifteen cents per pound.

The infant city is well laid out, and not only on Broadway but on most of the side streets on either side up to where the trail turns off to the left into the timber there are new stores and residences. Among the timber also there are many merchants, in tents or rough shacks. In the early history of the city—that is, three weeks ago—boiled shirts were publicly derided, as were also shaven chins. Now there are four barber shops and two or three signs reading "Troy Laundry." There is also a bath house in course of construction, and this is a luxury that tired men coming off the trail will appreciate. Lumber is still scarce, rough lumber at nine dollars per thousand feet at Seattle selling for about twenty-five dollars here. There is little doubt that a hundred or more buildings will be erected during the next thirty days.

Now, what are the prospects of Skaguay's permanency? The men who are building the wharves and the three-story hotel and other buildings evidently believe in its future growth and prosperity. Yet there is nothing to give it the slightest hope of permanency except as an entrance to the gold regions. That they do not at the present time possess any such entrance that is at all what a highway for the expected crowds in the spring should be is conceded. But the intention now is to build a wagon road along the Skaguay River to the foot of the mountain. This will cost a great deal of money, but it will in all probability be carried out, for every one who has made an investment here understands the situation. It is estimated that from 100,000 to 150,000 gold seekers will flock to Alaska next spring, and that they will begin to come in in February. Skaguay must be able to announce long before then a better trail than the present one or the trade will pass her by and the town boom will be "hushed." She will also have others besides the Dyea trail to compete with, and, in short, her future depends entirely upon her making the best inland route to the Yukon territory that can be made. Her citizens are remarkably public spirited and liberal. A town meeting two nights ago subscribed $1500 for fire protection in a few moments. A surveyor is now mapping out a route for a wagon road along the river. Money will have to be raised to meet the cost of this road and work on it be started immediately to insure the permanency of Skaguay as a port and as a town of even its present proportions.

WILL USE NO LANGUAGE.

How Coming Generations Will Look and Act, According to a Scientist.

This is the way Dr. R. M. Burke, President of the psychology section of the British Medical Association, says the head of the man of the future will look.

The new race, he says, will use no language because it will need none. The interchange of thought between individuals because it will be simply a mental effort on the part of each unaccompanied by any physical manifestation whatever. As one person evolves his idea the other will instantly grasp it by means of a subtle telepathy, which even now is the gift in a more or less modified form of many people who are only vaguely conscious of their strange power, and, in many instances, too timid and fearful of ridicule to publicly confess it or attempt to develop it. With future generations this gift will become more and more frequent in individuals and of greater and greater power, until this silent interchange of thought is at last as common as is now speech and writing. Nor will his powers stop even there. He not only will be able to exchange thoughts with people thousands of leagues away, but will be able to see them as distinctly as though they were physically present and even see if he chooses what is passing anywhere in the world. There will be an end of eyes and ears, the gross physical channels through sensations now must pass to the mind. They will all go, for they will all be useless—as useless as the mechanism of the voice, by which sensations and ideas are now conveyed from the mind outward. There may be some scar or meaningless excresence where these organs once were, just as now there are physiological suggestions of man's ape origin—humiliating reminders of the brute ancestry from which the godlike being was evolved. But that will be all, and even that will melt away and disappear at last.

HEAD OF THE MAN OF THE FUTURE.

Thousands of Miles Arrow-Pierced.

Some years ago H. N. Clement, an Indiana farmer, shot at a flock of wild geese in the Kan Ka Mee marsh and bagged several of them. One of them wore as a breastpin an arrow nine inches long. The arrow was so unique in formation that it could be ascribed to no tribe of Indians in the United States or in any other country. Finally Professor O. T. Mason, of the National Museum, said the bird and arrow could have come from no other place of the globe than the Yukon Valley. Thousands of miles the goose had flown with an arrow in its breast before turning up its legs at the shot of a Hoosier farmer.

A New Industry.

Ground has been broken for the plant of the Southern Iron and Steel company at Birmingham. The company will manufacture iron columns, structural iron and wire fencing and will start with a capital of $25,000. About fifty skilled workmen will be employed and from present prospects the plant will be kept running the entire year.

Misfortune, Then Reward.

Near Huntsville two weeks ago Mr. Williams had the misfortune to lose by fire his house with its contents, baled cotton and farming implements, in fact everything he possessed. A few days ago he received a letter from a friend in Texas summoning him to come at once and take possession of 1,500 acres of rich farming land, to which he had fallen heir through death of an uncle.

Quarantine Raised.

The Governor issued a proclamation Thursday raising the quarantine as to all that portion of the State lying north of a line running east and west through Calera. Persons from all infected districts can now enter the northern part of the State, except where local quarantines are still maintained. Mayor Evans, of Birmingham, also issued a proclamation declaring the quarantine annulled against all cities and towns.

There was a large fire in Selma Wednesday. The blaze started in the business house of Cawthon & Coleman and burned furiously. It caught from the cellar where a negro turned over a lamp and set off a lot of turpentine. The loss on their stock will be $60,000, insurance $30,000. The building is damaged about $5,000. Ullman & Son, from smoke and water, will be damaged $5,000, fully insured.

Extract From the Treasurer's Report.

The State Treasurer has made his annual statement for the year ended September 30. The receipts for the year were shown to be $2,174,644.37, and the disbursements $2,188,955.20. This excess of disbursements arose from the fact that several extraordinary expenses incurred by the State were paid by the treasurer during the year. Among others the expense incident to holding the last legislature; that incident to the preparation and printing of the new code, and increased appropriations to the Girls' Industrial school at Montevallo, and other State institutions. The new tax laws and the improved business methods that are being enforced new in the several counties of the State will, it is believed, cause the treasury to show a handsome profit next year.

Influence of the Imagination.

Fear has killed many a man before to-day. There is an old story of a king whose favorite was condemned to die for a crime. Before his execution, however, it was discovered that he was innocent, and the king, in order to give his favorite and agreeable surprise, took the place of the executioner, using a towel instead of an axe. But the man was killed as instantly as if his head had been cut off.

In modern times some French men of science obtained permission to perform similar experiment on a man condemned to be guillotined. They bound him to a table, and told him that arteries would be opened in various parts of his body, and that he would be bled to death. He could not expect to live more than half an hour. He was then blindfolded. He was pricked in various parts of the body, and at the end of half an hour was dead, although he had lost very little blood.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

At last Mr. Henry M. Stanley has emerged from the matrimonial obscurity into which he plunged some five years ago.

A farmer in Madison County, Indiana, announces that he has discovered a new corn. Well, he'd better look after it a little before it becomes too troublesome.

There are now twenty-seven societies in the United States membership in which depends on descent from ancestors who distinguished themselves by coming over to America at an early date, or by being participants in American wars prior to 1861.

Lake City, Florida, has set out to make the dancer pay the fiddler in a novel way. The town has appointed a single night watchman and decreed that he shall be paid at the rate of $2.50 for each arrest made, the prisoner to furnish the money.

"Until recently," remarks the Boston Transcript, "we believed that oxygen rendered the protoplasm of the organ phosphorescent with disengagement of the phosphoretted hydrogen." It is indeed a sweetly solemn thought, brother, that at last you have been set right upon that all-important matter.

The gold production of 1897 is likely to exceed that of 1896, which was the largest in the history of the world. Advices from Eucador show that mines being developed there are reported richer and more extensive than those of South America, where such enormous quantities of gold have recently been produced.

In the French navy it has been found that the electric search-light employed on men-of-war injuriously affects the eyes of seamen who have to work about the light, and dark blue spectacles are supplied to them for protection. Brown eyes are less affected than gray or blue ones, the reason suggested being that the former are more heavily charged with pigment.

A Philadelphia policeman the other day arrested a little boy in knee breeches, to the great indignation of some bystanders, who went to the station house to make a complaint against the policeman. At the station they learned that the little boy was "Dublin Joe," a notorious pickpocket, forty years old, and that his pockets were filled with other people's money. No complaint was entered.

A young student in a certain theological seminary recently persuaded a fellow-student to listen to him while he rehearsed a sermon. His subject was "Light." With a violent gesture with the right arm he said, "Blot out the sun." With a similarly frantic movement of the left arm he roared, "Blot out the moon!" Then, with a combined gesture made up of both arms, he bellowed, "Blot out the stars!" But it was enough. The auditor arose to leave with a hoarse, cruel whisper, "Turn off the gas."

In the single State of Massachusetts there are more than 1,200 miles of electric railway, while in England, Scotland and Ireland combined there are only 200 miles. Moreover, nearly all the electric roads in the British Islands have been built and equipped by American contractors. This country has led all others in the use of electric power for traction purposes, and the construction of similar roadways in other nations is conducted almost exclusively in accordance with American models and methods.

A Cincinnati firm of contractors is making considerable trouble among business men of its class in that city by its unusual methods. One of the firm is an old circus man, and being well acquainted with the capacity of elephants for work, he secured one of the animals, which is now used on the firm's contracts for grading. The monster is hitched to an immense plow, saving the work of ten horses and five or six men, and the firm for which he works is thus enabled to underbid all competitors because of the saving made.

In commenting on the automatic hot-water supply now furnished in certain parts of London by dropping a penny in a slot machine attached to a lamppost, "The London Telegraph" suggested that food may soon be furnished in the same way. Whereupon a correspondent writes: "It may interest some of your readers to know that the problem is already solved, and that in the exhibition grounds at Brussels there is a cafe which provides hot and cold luncheons entirely by the automatic method, and I can say from experience that they are very good. By placing a franc in the slot a chop or steak, with potatoes, can be procured, hot and well cooked; another franc will produce a half-bottle of wine; half a franc will supply a plate of cold meat, with salad and roll, and a nickel of ten centimes will extract a piece of bread and butter and cheese, or a 'brioche.' Besides all this a nickel will draw an excellent glass of hock from one of the two large vessels in the centre of the cafe."

Again the important question, "How Long are Women Beautiful?" is dis- of beauty does not reach itshrdludlu cussed in an English journal, one writer maintaining that "the fullness under the age of thirty-five or forty." This claim is disputed by another writer, who cites the opinion of women themselves, as shown by the undoubted fact that "any woman who craved admiration on the score of her personal appearance would be vastly more pleased were her age to be guessed as being thirty rather than forty." Well, it all depends, as Pitti Sing would observe. The race and the woman must be considered. In some tropic lands women are either wrinkled and shriveled or fat and shapeless grandmothers before they reach the age mentioned. In England and in this country it often happens that the "fullness of beauty" in women "does not reach its zenith under the limit of thirty-five or forty." The age limit is very elastic, depending on many things that help to make or mar the beauty which is woman's most coveted possession.

In the Atlantic Monthly the celebrated African explorer announces his return to the literary workshop by discussing at some length the progress of civilization on the dark continent. "Twenty-five years ago," says Mr. Stanley, "the whole of central Africa was nothing more than a continental slave park. To-day it is largely the abode of intelligence and civilization. In 1884 began the partition of Africa among the various European powers, with the result that the French Congo now has a population of 9,000,000; German East Africa, 7,000,000, and British Africa, 10,000,000. In addition to the evidences of progress which these figures represent the tide of civilization has poured into Africa from all parts of the globe. According to Mr. Stanley the area of central Africa is equal to that of the United States, including Alaska, with half of Mexico added. Its population at the present time numbers 48,000,000, of which 3,000,000,000 are whites. On account of the vast fertility of central Africa the future of this favored region is bright with promise.

How it All Happened.

He was in doubt.

There was no particular reason why he should be in doubt, but, of course, that has nothing to do with the case. Up to a certain point in the courtship it is the privilege of every lover to be in doubt, and if he were not he would be tempted to believe something was wrong.

On this particular evening he made up his mind that he would reach the point where doubt ends or know the reason why.

Thus it happened that he got a little closer to her than usual, when he found that they were sitting side by side on the sofa.

"Did you ever think about marriage?" he asked.

"No," she replied.

Of course, that was a lie. Of course, he knew that it was a lie, and she knew that he knew it. Consequently she wished that she hadn't answered so hastily; but that is so customary to a woman that it should attract no attention.

"If I were a woman like you," he said reproachfully, "I would think of it."

"Would you?" she inquired carelessly.

"Yes, I would," he answered agressively.

"Perhaps, she suggested tantalizingly, "you wouldn't mind telling me just what course your thoughts would take—if you were a woman like me."

"I don't know that I can give the exact course of reasoning," he answered, fearful that he might be getting beyond his depth, "but if I were a woman like you I feel pretty reasonably sure that I would marry a man like—er—like me."

"You do?" she said, coloring a little, but still speaking in the same tantalizing tone.

"Yes, I do," he returned doggedly.

"Well, if I were a man like you," she asserted, "I wouldn't expect a woman like me to do anything of the sort until a man like you had asked her to."

It is no trick at all to hold the course or true love after the mariner once gets his bearings so long as the signal lights continue to burn, and thus it happened that their bark sped merrily on its way.—Chicago Post.

The Use of a Cat's Whiskers.

A cat's whiskers may seem to you to be merely ornamental. They are organs of touch, attached to a bed of fine glands under the skin, and each of these long hairs is connected with the nerves of the lip. The slightest contact with these whiskers with any surrounding objects is thus felt most distinctly by the animal, although the hairs themselves are insensible. They stand out on each side of the lion as will as the common cat. From point to point they are equal to the width of the animal's body. If we imagine, therefore, a lion stealing through a covert of wood in an imperfect light, we shall at once see the use of these hairs. They indicate to him, through the nicest feeling, any obstacle which may present itself to the passage of his body; they prevent the rustling of boughs and leaves, which would give warning to his prey if he were to attempt to pass too close to a bush; and thus, in connection with the soft cushions of his feet and the fur upon which he treads—the claws never coming into contact with the ground—they enable him to move toward his victim with a stillness equal to that of a snake.

OPINIONS OF A WOMAN.

More men would marry if women made themselves more attractive to them.

Loud talking women seldom hear much good o' themselves.

All men are not as black as they are painted.

Few men find it difficult to fall in love though they have little trouble in loving rich girls in preference to poor ones.

The average married man looks upon marriage as a lottery, and that he has drawn a blank.

There are many women who drive their husbands to drink.

The world is full of women who have sacrificed happy lives for duty.

A man or woman who seek divorce without cause invariably get the worst of it before the final end comes.

Men will talk about women though few women are talked about who do not deserve it.

If some men could see themselves as women see them there would be a great shortage in the vanity market.—Ex.

Henry George was traveling once on a sleeping car. The porter came to brush the dust off and "work" him for the customary quarter. There were but few passengers. George reflected on the fact that Pullman paid his poor black hireling little or naught, and relied on their ability to brush and gouge the public instead and determined to give him all the change he found in his pocket. He thought there might be about 60 cts but there actually was $3 in quarters, halves and dimes. He gave it all to the darkey, who dropped his broom and stared at the tip and then at George. "This all fo' me, boss?" he gasped. "It's all for you," replied George The darky looked at the little rusty, modest man, and again at his handful of silver. "Wow!' he ejaculated, "it's true as de good book puts it, you nevah cain tell how fah a toad kin jump twell you sees him hop."

Birmingham, Oct. 23.—Capt. W. H. Hughes, representative of the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company, who went to Vera Cruz six weeks ago, with a cargo of 1,200 tons of Alabama coal to introduce that product in Mexico, has returned and reports having laid the ground work for an extensive coal trade in that country. The Inter-Oceanic Railroad, to whom the sample load was sold, was so well pleased that it made a contract for a year's supply, 100,000 tons, to be used instead of English coal and native wood. Contracts will probably be made with other large consumers in Mexico as soon as their contracts with the English expire.

The recent action of Congress in removing the discriminating duty imposed upon Mexican ships loading coal shipments at American ports places the Alabama article in Mexico on an equal footing with the English, free of duties, while the freight rate is greatly in Alabama's favor.

The farmers in some sections of Alabama will grow wheat on a large scale next year. Those in this section who would doubtless have experimeted with it could not get seed to plant on account of the quarantine. While our farmers in this section cannot try it another year, they can inform themselves on wheat growing and culture and be prepared to do so in the future. Farmers can make more raising wheat at one dollar per bushel than they can making cotton at 5 cents a pound. It is not too late now to plant wheat if our farmers could procure seed. Any time between now and the last of November will do to sow wheat and if the quarantine

The SIXTH MISSING WORD CONTEST

The Atlanta Constitution Offers

One Tenth Of the Subscriptions

Received from those entering the Contest to name properly the missing word in the following sentence:

"Once given the passion for ....., that one of the precious metals will be most in demand which is cheapest." ∴ ∴ ∴

And, in Addition

TO THE 10 PER CENT, WE WILL GIVE

$100 Cash Extra

For the first Six Correct Guesses, as follows: $50 for the First Correct Guess and $10 Each for the Next Five, in their order, provided the same are received in our office on or before December 1st.

THE PERIOD COVERED

By This Contest shows about 16,000 expirations for The Weekly Constitution, and, of course, we want them all to renew and to enter the Contest.

THIS MEANS $1,600

For the Missing Word Fund, and every additional subscriber entering the contest will swell the amount the more.

This period also compares with our First Missing Word Contest last year, in which Mr. M. L. Brittain secured the prize—$1,033.50. As that was our First Contest, there were more than 5,000 subscribers received during the time, who did not enter for prize. It will not be so this time, for the plan is widely advertised and we have paid out within the past twelve months NEARLY $5,000 CASH upon the Five Missing Word Contests. The series has been of extraordinary interest, and the idea seems to grow in the public's favor.

The book containing the sentence is a standard publication and has been sealed up and placed with Mr. W. A. Hemphill, President and Business Manager of The Constitution, who will hold it safely until January 1, 1898.

The sentence speaks for itself and submits a very plain proposition for you to solve.

The Contest Began November 1, 1897.
The Contest Ends January 1, 1898.

This contest lasts two months and the amount to be divided will probably be in the neighborhood of $2,000. There may be one correct answer, there may be a dozen, there may be more, but remember it costs nothing to supply a word, and you may get it correctly. Whether you do or not, you get

The Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers for One Year.

Keep That in View and Send Your Guess With Your Dollar for a Year's Subscription

Ten per cent of the Guessers' Subscriptions goes to the Fund to be divided. In other words, if this Subscription Fund amounts to $20,000 for the two months, the Fund to go to the successful guesser would be $2,000. Following are the conditions of contest:

WE PROPOSE TO PUT 10 PER CENT of the amount we receive for subscriptions, wherein the party subscribing enters the Missing Word Contest, into a fund for distribution among those who name correctly the missing word. For instance: If only one contestant gets the word right, he or she, as the case may be, will have all the money. If more than one strike it, the sum will be equally divided, each correct answer receiving its proportionate share of the fund.

THE CONDITION PRECEDENT FOR SENDING A GUESS at the Missing Word is that each and every guess must be accompanied by a year's subscription to THE WEEKLY CONSTITUTION; the guess must be sent in the identical envelope that brings the money that pays for the subscription; forgetting it, or leaving it out by accident or otherwise, or not knowing of the guess at the time you subscribed, or any other reason will not entitle one to send a guess afterwards. The guess must come with the subscription or not at all. Should a party send more than one guess, he or she will be entitled to a share of the fund for each correct guess sent; there will be no capital prize—every one will get a first prize. Persons may guess as many times as they send subscriptions.

THE CONTEST BEGAN NOV. 1ST—We began then to keep accurate account of the subscriptions received with guesses and on December 1st we will publish how much is to the credit of the subscribers guessing, and during December we will publish each week how the fund has grown.

THE CONTEST CLOSES JAN. 1ST—At which time we will pay out to the successful party or parties the full prize amount that has accrued in the contest.

In Making Your Answer You need not write the sentence out in full, just state simply the Missing Word for January 1st is "....."

The above is the plan of The Constitution Contest, which all subscribers to that paper and ours, subscribing under the clubbing offer announced elsewhere, may enter. Address orders to Teachers' Fund Sent Out.

State Treasurer Ellis Friday sent out the money due the public school teachers for the fourth quarter ending September 30. The amount due the teachers was $109,957.62. This amount is considerably smaller than previous quarters.

Cotton Warehouse Burned.

Wednesday fire broke out in the cotton warehouse of A. G. Henry & Co. at Guntersville. The warehouse and 100 bales of cotton were consumed. Loss $25,000; no insurance. Origin of the fire supposed to be incendiary.

Will Apply for a Charter.

The coal miners are organizing local assemblies at the various collieries in the state, and will in a short time have enough assemblies to apply to President Ratchford, of the United Mine Workers of North America, for a charter as a district.

Inviting Them South.

The chamber of commerce of Huntsville is in correspondence with the mercantile clearing house of Boston with the view of having representatives of New England cotton mills come to Huntsville and see the advantages offered by the city os a cotton manufacturing center. Very favorable replies have been received.

Opening New Colonies.

A new colony that has sprung up practically of its own accord at McDonalds, Morgan county, but bids fair to excite some interest before long. Here a number of sturdy Germans have settled and will plant vineyards. Bismarck, another proposed German colony near Decatur, has been lagging on account of quarantines, but bids fair to reawaken. The town has been laid out and it is ready for settlers.

Union Labor League Organized.

A Union Labor League was organized in Birmingham last Friday, the intent of which is to strengthen and aid union labor. The following officers were elected: R. L. Russell, president; W. S. Lopez, vice-president; W. G. Turner, secretary; J. H. F. Moseley, treasurer. Only union men are elegible to be elected to fill the offices, but the membership is open to all persons in sympathy with the movement.

Birmingham as a Cotton Market.

The vast strides that Birmingham has made in the past few years as a cotton market has placed her fifth in receipts among the interior cities of the south—Memphis, Atlanta, Augusta and Montgomery alone receiving more. From 8,000 bales a few years ago, the receipts will this year reach 110,000. This change has been wrought by the cotton buyers who have located in Birmingham and created a market for the fleecy staple.

Reward Offered for Murderer.

About two weeks ago Mr. Wade Childree, one of the best citizens of Covington, a gentleman of high character and respected of all the good people, was assassinated about 8 p. m. while sitting in his own room and reading the Bible. He is not supposed to have had an enemy and no cause can be assigned for his murder. The solicitor has made diligent efforts to ascertain the assassin and failed. The family have offered a reward of $250 and the governor ordered a like reward to be paid by the state for the arrest and conviction of the assassin.

Live Times in Danville.

The people of Danville and vicinity are in earnest over their new railroad project. There will be an immense gathering ten miles from Danville Saturday. They will have an old-fashioned picnic and barbecue. Speakers will be imported from abroad to address the assembled multitude.

There will also be done some practical railroad building. They will have miners and prospectors and iron workers there. The miners will dig the coal and iron out of the ground, and the iron workers will smelt the ore in the presence of the assembled people.

M. & O. Surveying a Line to Birmingham.

The Mobile and Ohio railroad is now seeking an entrance into Birmingham. For several weeks a large corps of engineers have been at work surveying the route. They are now at work between Blocton and Bessemer. The country in that vicinity is the very wildest imaginable and considerable time will be necessarily consumed in selecting the route and surveying small parts of it. The road is expected to use the line of the Birmingham, Bessemer and Powderly road as an entrance into Birmingham.

Has Fired His Last Engine.

E. P. Bishop, engineer on the first section of freight train No. 25, on the Louisville and Nashville railroad, shot and killed Wiley Clay, his negro fireman, Thursday night, near Oxmoor, while the train was in motion. The negro was told to fire the engine, but insolently refused to leave his seat. Clay was again told to stir up the fire, and it is said that he sulkingly got off his seat and drawing his pistol, fired one shot at Engineer Bishop, and then attacked him with a knife, severely lacerating his left breast. Engineer Bishop struggled with the negro and reaching for his gun he fired one shot, striking the negro in the breast, killing him instantly.

Some Sample Crops of Cotton.

The cotton crop in the section around Uniontown continues to be wonderful. Mr. Sid Knight claims that he will make 350 bales, an average on one plantation of eighteen bales to the mule. On last Friday from four and a half acres that had been picked over once he gathered 8,500 pounds of seed cotton. Mr. W. B. McKnight reports that he will make thirty-three bales with two mules. Mr. W. H. Munford, the most successful farmer in this section, besides making a fine crop of everything, including a big crop of hogs, will make 450 bales of cotton. He says he has one man who will make twenty bales with one mule. He says he has numbers of them who will make from fifteen to eighteen bales to the mule.

Canada's Representative in Birmingham.

Canada has sent a representative to the Birmingham district to investigate the report that iron was being extensively made in this district by convict labor. Her majesty's government has a very rigid law against anything entering its domains which has been manufactured by the aid of convict labor.

Alabama pig iron has in the past year been gaining quite a foothold among the manufacturers of her majesty's dominion. The fact that convict labor is employed in some of the coal mines of the state has become known across the border, and Mr. Atkinson was sent here to investigate and make a report.

This is entirely a new phase of the convict question in Alabama.

BILL ARP'S WEEKLY LETTER.

PHILOSOPHER ON A LECTURING TOUR IN NORTH CAROLINA.

LIVELY RIDE ON A CIRCUS TRAIN.

After Undergoing Many Hardships He Is Landed Among His Friends and Is Royally Welcomed.

"Hard, hard, indeed, is the contest for freedom and the struggle for liberty." "There is no rest for the wicked." This world is all a fleeting show and Jordan is a hard road to travel, I believe! There are other ejaculations I might utter, for of late there has been trouble on the old man's mind. You see, I was invited over here to talk to these people in a humorous and philosophic way, and my wife said as the larder was getting low and the girls needed some more winter clothes, and the tax man was bobbing around and the grandchildren would be expecting something for Christmas, she thought I had better go. So she packed my valise with my best clothes, and fortified me with a little drug store of camphorated oil and flannel and liver medicine and paregoric and cough drops and quinine and headache powders, and so forth and so on. We kissed goodby all round and I departed feeling like I was being driven off from home by sad necessity. I took the Seaboard Air Line at Atlanta bound for Charlotte, via Monroe, but our engine broke down at Greensboro about dark and this delayed us three long, dreary hours, and when we reached Monroe it was way after midnight and the Charlotte train had gone. There were three nice ladies aboard and several gentlemen, who were greatly disappointed, but the conductor was kind and sympathetic and said there was a circus train near by that was going to Charlotte right away and if we didn't mind riding thirty miles in a cab he would get us the privilege. The ladies, said yes, and we did, too, and climed in. It was as dark as Erebus. We felt our way to find seats, but there was nothing but some long tool boxes whose lids were hard and cold. There was no fire and the wind blew through a broken glass on the back of my head. The ladies chatted away merrily, for they were going home, but I wasn't and I couldn't chat to save my life, for I was very tired and thought of that good soft bed at home. By and by the conductor came in with a lantern and took up our tickets and left us in the dark again. About that time the animals got restless and the lion gave an unearthly howl. You see this was a menagerie train.

"The animals went in two by two,
The elephant and the kangaroo," and every time the cars careened about or swung round a curve we could hear some devilish noise ahead of us. "Oh, mercy," said the youngest girl, "suppose they break out!" "They will eat the tenderest and sweetest first," said I. "Lions always do." I pulled my cloak up over the back of my head and ruminated. For two long hours we jogged along, for the train was running slow to suit the wild beasts and we were of no consequence. It was near 3 o'clock when we got to the suburbs of Charlotte and stopped. Nobody was looking for us—nobody rushed forward to meet us, no porter nor hackman—no omnibus or street cars, not even a wagon or an ox cart or a darky. The moon had hid herself to keep from seeing our misery, but we seized our grips and wraps and satchels and made a march for the electric lights. My companions soon separated from me and I marched in single file with my big valise full of clothes and the drug store, and struggled for three quarters of a mile up the long and hard sidewalk. I am not used to arc lights, and the flickering shadow of every tree and telegraph pole looked like a man in ambush who was fixing to hold me up. I had forgotten where the hotels were, and unconsciously passed them, for the doors were all shut, and there was no sign. By and by I met a policeman and he conducted me back to the hotel, and I was as thankful as I was tired and humble. My pitiful tone of voice secured me kind attention and a bed. When a man is far away from home, his warmest welcome is an inn. But I did not rest well.

A 10 o'clock supper, on fried sausage and scrambled eggs and stale oysters, disturbed my corporosity and I dreamed that the tiger got loose and came prowling and howling around the car and somehow I got a hatchet out of the tool box and lifted the young lady through the port hole upon the roof, and volunteered to defend her with my life and my sacred honor. The tiger made desperate leaps to get up there, but every time he got a paw on the eave, I cut it off and let him fall back again. I don't know what became of the other ladies, but think that other wild beasts got in and eat them up. The men had all fled prematurely, but I saved the pretty girl, the sweetest and tenderest, before I woke up. Who wouldn't, in a dream? What curious things are dreams, anyhow! The next trouble on the old man's mind came over him at Salisbury, where I was billed to lecture that night. On my arrival I found that august body, the Presbyterian synod in session. Preachers and elders innumerable were scattered among the good people all over town. They were holding night sessions, and wouldn't have adjourned for McKinley or Grover Cleveland or the yellow fever or a fire. But this was not all, the Episcopal bishop was to lecture on the Holy Land, where he had been recently, and I knew that I would fall between and get smothered. Mr. Marsh seemed to feel very bad, and apologized by saying that when he booked me he did not know of these meetings. "Well," said I, "the saints will all go to these meetings, but you have sinners in this town." He admitted that there were some. And so I went ahead and lectured, and was surprised to see before me a select and cultured audience, select, and I hope elect according to Presbyterian theology.

So all is well that ends well. The next evening found me at the nice little town of Marion, in western North Carolina, away up in the land of the sky. They are good people there, I know, for they filled the court house that night and gave me an ovation. The old soldiers are thick in that region, and they came out to hear me, and some of us got together and talked of old Bob Lee and Joe Johnston and Generals Early and Render and Whiting and Hoke and Ransom and Pettigrew and Clingman and others. Their eyes watered and their hearts burned within them, and they got closer and closer together. What a people these tar-heels are—these descendants of the Scotch! About every other name is Scotch, a McLane or McFall or McLaurin or McArthur or McSomethingelse, and then there are Alexanders everywhere and Caldwells and Carlyles. After the lecture we had a musicale at the hotel by the gifted Gruber family, who keep the hotel, Mr. Gruber and Mrs. Gruber and their seven children. I have heard much music during my long life, but I never heard any better anywhere. How the old man's fingers did dance upon the strings; how sweetly did the still handsome matron sing the "Last Rose of Summer" and other old time songs of Scotland! What delightful chords came from the piano under the touch of the young ladies and the sweet little black-eyed girl of only ten summers! And when they played "Home, Sweet Home," with variations, I could hardly restrain my tears. I felt like we all ought to hold a seance if we could with John Howard Payne and tell him how the world loved him for his song. I had sweet dreams that night. I am still on the grand rounds talking to the unpretending people of this grand old state. It seems to have got out, however, that I had joined John Robinson's circus and gone off with it. Some of these mischievous drummers told that. Yours on the wing.—BILL ARP in Atlanta Constitution.

State Normal College.

In spite of the scare from pestilence and quarantine, the State Normal College at Troy went on the even tenor of its way with a good attendance, and as good work as the state ever had done for it by any institution.

Troy enjoys the distinction of being 596 feet above sea level, and yellow fever has never come within fifty miles of it, and it is not believed by those well informed that the disease can spread at such altitude, if health measures are carefully observed.

Out of the several thousands of students in the State Normal College there in the ten years past, only two deaths have occurred at the college, and these from pneumonia and measles.

The college never had brighter prospects, and many new students are expected at the new term to open December 7. President Eldredge has calls for trained teachers from every direction, and the demand is above the supply. As school officers learn the value of teacher training they will insist more and more upon it. The State Normal College at Troy delights to serve school officers, schools and teachers.

The convention of the striking coal miners of the Northern Illinois field, at a late hour Friday night, reached a secret agreement, which will be made known in a few days to the various local organizations interested. It is believed it has taken steps looking to the securing of a compromise.

The Answer of Prayer.

The answer of prayer stands knocking at the door of the prayer meeting in Acts 12: 13. That was too unexpected an occurrence for the assembly of believers. They avowed that the maid bearing the information was either crazy or had seen a ghost. How surprised faithful Christians often are if a prayer is really heard. Answers to prayer are recounted with unending exclamation marks, whereas answer of true prayer ought to be considered the most natural experience in God's universe. Much praying is a mere performance. A farmer coming to town read at a physician's door, "Please pull the bell." He pulled until a head was poked out of the window inquiring, "Well?" "Oh, I've read the sign and thought it no more than polite to pull," was his response. The only response that could perhaps be given by many who feel themselves called upon in the Bible to pray. They do not read that the young Pharisee transacted many a prayer before heaven said of him, "Behold, he prayeth." Their arrows shot heavenward have plenty of feather but no point. They do not spread the fleece, like Gideon, for the dew to descend upon.—F. W. C. Meyer.

The Likeness of Christ.

It is not merely by watching the life of Christ as illustrated by His actions, or His principles set forth by His words, that we gain likeness to Him. There is a strange power in personality to affect other natures. The child grows to be like one whom he constantly watches. He may or may not make a conscious effort for that likeness, but the likeness comes. People of larger growth, maturer, more independent development, are often strangely drawn by constant contact into likeness to one another, without so much as a thought of the process. John says: "We shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is." What we need here is to see Christ—see Him, not merely as He was, but as He is, and we shall find the likeness taking hold upon us and fashioning us into itself.

Oldest German Newspaper.

The Magdeburg Gazette, probably the oldest newspaper in Germany, last month celebrated its 250th anniversary. It is still conducted by representatives of the Faber family, which founded it in 1647, just at the close of the Thirty Years' War. The present heads of the venerable journalistic dynasty are the two brothers, Robert and Alexander Faber, perpetuating a line almost a century and a half older than that which rules over the London Times, the greatest if not the oldest of newspapers. Magdeburg took on the decorations of holiday in honor of its venerable Gazette, which well deserved them.

THE FARM AND GARDEN.

TEMS OF INTEREST ON AGRICULTURAL TOPICS.

Chopped Clover For Hens---Late Sown Winter Grain---Crop Reporting---Moulting---Horse Dictionary, Etc., Etc.

CHOPPED CLOVER FOR HENS.

In the winter season, grass and clover in the fields are frosted and innutritious. Fowls eat a great deal of vegetable food during the summer, and when it becomes of little value they suffer. This is their moulting season. Lime and nitrogen are needed to replace their feathers. Second-growth clover cut in small pieces and fed with grain will supply this need, and put the fowls again in condition to resume laying.

LATE-SOWN WINTER GRAIN.

It is not the size of fall growth made, but its character, that decides whether it can stand winter freezing and thawing. A late-sown small growth, if vigorous, will come out all right. In fact, for some reasons the small top is best, as it does not evaporate so much. Nothing can prevent the soil freezing on the surface lower than the grain roots reach in their fall growth. If there is a great amount of leaf on winter grain it is more easily killed to the root than where the growth is small.

CROP REPORTING.

Among farmer crop reporters the tendency to overestimate conditions and yields seems to be quite general. Usually the more enterprising and progressive farmers engage in this work, men who prefer to look upon the bright side of things, and an optimistic view of the situation results. Local pride sometimes sways the judgment of the reporter. Extraordinary yields are heralded far and wide, while in case of poor yields mum's the word, and this has its influence upon the mind that guides the pen of the harvest reporter. Then there is the self-interested fellow who is laboring to boom some particular section of country. His motives are selfish, if anything, and the farm press should unite in squelching him. We believe in intelligent reporting, but in studying the situation we are brought face to face with this tendency to overestimate. Many farm reporters are careful and accurate; some, however, should study situations a little more thoroughly before jumping at conclusions.—The Epitomist.

MOULTING.

Young poultry usually moult twice during the first twelve months, therefore young thoroughbred stock should not be condemned until after the second moult for feathering or off-colored feathers. The first feathers are rarely perfect. The newly hatched Barred Plymouth Rock does not show the barring on the down, but is dark all over except a small light spot on the top of the head. Even the first large feathers, while they may convey an idea of what the matured bird will look like, they will show many imperfections. Even the apparently matured cockerel that has taken a prize at the show may in the next season's moult be unfit for further showing, and vice versa. Some speciments seem to lose their feathers in a few days, while others drag along all through the moult. This is largely due to a greater or less temperature of the fowl's body.

The hearty-eating, warm-blooded bird is the first one to moult.

Birds intended for exhibition can be helped, after they are well along in the moult, by pulling out all feathers that come easy—without drawing blood—especially the wing and tail feathers. —Agricultural Epitomist.

HORSE DICTIONARY.

A white spot in the forehead is a star.

A white face from eye to eye is a bald face.

A white stripe in the face is a blaze.

A stripe between the nostrils is a snip.

A white eye is a glass eye.

A horse has pasterns, not ankles, and there is no such joint as a hind knee or fore shoulder.

White below the pastern joint is a white pastern. Above the pastern, a white leg.

White around the top of the hoof is a white coronet.

A star, blaze or bald face can't be anywhere except on the face.

A snip can't be anywhere except on the nose.

Amble, a gait like pacing, but slower, in which the two legs on the same side are moved together.

Appel, the gentle tug on the rein given by the horse at each step.

Croup, that part of the horse back of the saddle.

Bore, to bear on the bit.

Bucking, leaping vertically into the air with all four feet, and coming together on the ground.

Elbow, joint of foreleg next above knee lying next to horse's side.

Forearm, that part of the leg between the elbow and knee.

Forge, to strike the toe of the forefoot with the toe of the hind one; very often the result of bad shoeing.

Hand, one-third of a foot—four inches.—Western Rural.

ORCHARD CULTIVATION.

Good tillage increases the available food supply of the soil; it also conserves its moisture.

Trees should be made to send their roots deep into the soil, in order to fortify against drought. This is done by draining the soil, and by plowing the orchard rather deep.

This deep plowing should begin the very year the trees are set, and it should be continued every spring until the habit of the tree is established.

Moisture is retained in the upper soil by very frequent but shallow tillage, by means of which the surface of the land becomes a mulch for the soil beneath.

Tillage should be begun just as soon as the ground is dry enough in spring.

This tillage should be repeated as often as once in ten days through growing season—from spring until July or August.

Tillage should not exist for the purpose of killing weeds.

Late cultivation may be injurious by inducing a late growth. At all events it can be of small utility when the tree begins to mature and rains become frequent. This season of respite gives the grower the opportunity of raising a green manure, and of adding fertility to his land at trifling expense and with no harm to his trees.

Fall plowing may be advisable for farm crops, but not for orchards.

Only cultivated crops should be allowed in orchards early in the season. Grain and hay should never be grown.

In general, level culture is best. The modern cultivators and harrows make such cultivation easy.

Trees, especially apples, are often trained too high, because of difficulty of working close; but modern tools permit the heads to be made low.

Harness with no projecting hames nor metal turrets should be used in bearing orchards. Those requiring no whiffletrees are also useful.

Potash is the chief fertilizer for fruit trees, particularly after bearing.

Potash may be had in wood ashes and muriate of potash. An annual application of potash should be made upon bearing orchards of the muriate from 500 to 700 pounds to the acre.

Barn manures can be used with good results, particularly on old orchards.

Cultivation may be stopped late in season, and a crop then be sown upon the land. This crop may serve as a green manure.—L. H. Bailey, in Orchard Bulletin.

THE PROFITABLE HOG.

There has always been a profit in feeding hogs for the fall market. And until cholera begins to show itself in some large herds, there was little risk in breeding and fattening hogs on almost any farm where corn was plenty. But since only high-bred stock is considered worth keeping for profit, the breeding and fattening of hogs requires as much care and has a greater risk than any other stock on the farm. This is no doubt due to the constant in-breeding among the breeds that put on fat early and are ready to market at 250 to 300 pounds in nine months.

The rapid development due to high feeding on rich food diminishes the vital power of the animal, and the early fattening before the bones are fully formed weakens the frame so that the nine months pig has become a helpless mass of fat with little power to take any exercise, which is always necessary to vigorous animal life.

This difficulty is exaggerated by breeding from sows that are not themselves fully developed and cannot therefore give much vitality to their offspring. The mother should be perfected in age, in size and constitution before she can give a vigorous life to her offspring.

Swine breeders sometimes overlook this important fact, because the pigs are to be sold for market often before they are a year old, and hence their short life is not sufficiently taken into consideration.

The Poland China, the Chester Whites and the Berkshires seem to be the favorites among feeders; the first two breeds named, perhaps, have been pushed too far in the tendency to take on fat and often become helpless before they are grown.

The Berkshires do not mature so early, and are larger and stronger framed; and they have the advantage of more lean meat, which is becoming more in demand. A cross between mature sows of Berkshire and a compact male of Poland China or Chester, would be perhaps a good cross for vigoroug hogs and the production of pork with a desirable quantity of lean meat. The Jersey Red is another breed which makes good mothers with large litters and good milkers. These should not be bred until they are more than a year old and then crops between them and the Chester White or Polands have been found to produce good-sized, vigorous pigs which mature early. In-breeding should be carefully avoided in the pure breeds and yet the male in any herd should be pure bred, but not related closely to any cross bred sows in the herd, when he is used. These cross-bred Jersey Reds sometimes prove very profitable breeders, and often raise fine litters of pigs until they are six or seven years old. An old sow should be kept as long as she will raise fine pigs.

A New "Ad" Scheme.

Advertising threatens to break out in a new place. Many barber shops in this city have recently received from a corporation, officered with men of distinguished surnames, a circular proposing an ingenious enterprise. The company writes to obtain the privilege of posting advertisements on the walls and ceilings of barber shops at such points as shall come within the range of vision of persons that submit themselves to the hands of the barber and his assistants. It is the hope of the company that the barbers will yield up their wall space in return for so many shares of stock per chair in the company, and the glittering hope is held out that when the business is once well established the stock at a par value of $10 will pay dividends of 50 per cent. annually. It is announced that the business is already established in 3,000 barber shops in Philadelphia.—New York Sun.

GEORGIA LADIES HATE SHAMS.

Mrs. R. A. Gore

Whiteville, Ga., writes: Have used Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine 15 years for Sick Headache, Costiveness, and no woman passing through the Change of Life should be without it. It acts on me more mildly and thoroughly than the "Liver Regulator" made by Zeilin or the "Black Draught" made by Chattanooga Medicine Company.

Nervous Depression of Women.

A woman will often without knowing it commit slow suicide for her family. She will think, toil and worry for her children. Too often they do not appreciate it. Her tired nerves and weary body at last reach a stage when she is almost powerless for any kind of mental or physical work, and she is depressed and worried over the consciousness that she is unable to perform her accustomed duties. Her organs of digestion are disordered and although there is a constant disposition to rest, wakefulness and loss of power to sleep are serious indications of nervous depression. What she needs is a course of Dr. Simmons Squaw Vine Wine to restore a healthy functional activity and give tone and vitality to her nervous system. At the same time the stomach, liver and kidneys should be stimulated with Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine.

Jas. A. Cantrell

Ball Ground, Ga., writes: I have known Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine 20 years, and that it cures La Grippe, Headache and other complaints. I think it is stronger than "Zeilin's Regulator" and "Black Draught," and that it gives better satisfaction.

Pains in Lower Back.

After reaching maturity, and especially after passing through the experience of maternity, most women find their health seriously damaged, if not entirely impaired. The painful and weary dragging and bearing down sensation in the back almost every woman has at times experienced. Sometimes these are from uterine displacement, but often they are simply from weakness. Women who have to bear heavy burdens, to undergo severe fatigue or to endure crushing disappointment, are subject to this and many other diseases. We cannot too strongly recommend the use of Dr. Simmons Squaw Vine Wine, the great female tonic and regulator.

Don't think that every sad eyed woman you meet has loved and lost. Perhaps she loved and got him.

Week before last we clipped three items from the Evergreen Courant, intending to give them the proper credit, but the paper got misplaced. Bro. Salter, we will try and be more careful in the future.

We received last week a copy of the Tacoma (Wash.) Daily Ledger, a 7 column, 16 page paper editor by C. M. Shultz. It is filled with interesting reading and gives all the information one can desire about Klondike.

Some time ago the name of Representalive Howard, of Fort Payne, was prominently mentioned by the leading populists as a suitable man for the next governor of Alabama. Mr. Howard has declined, so it is said by Republicans, and Cougressman W. F. Aldrich is said to be the man.

Saturday afternoon a permit was granted Jaeger & Stockmar for the Phil Schillinger Brewing Company to expend seven thousand dollars in improving their plant on Avenue E and Twenty-second street.

The same parties were granted a permit to erect a two-story brick bottling works for the Alabama Brewing Company at a cost of ten thousand dollars. In addition to this a sum of two thousand dollars is to be expended in other buildings about the main plant. Something over one hundred thousand dollars has already been expended on this plant.—Age-Herald.

It would be a good idea for the farmers to hold meetings in every locality at an early date and discuss fully the use of commercial fertilizers next year. And at these meetings it would be a still better idea to resolve to try farming another year without the use of commercial fertilizers at all. We believe they would find it would pay them. Guano does not pay, and we believe the truth of the assertion can be demonstrated to every farmer if he will try farming just one year without it.—Evergreen Courant.

Knoxville, Tenn., Nov. 22.—Mining circles are stirred up over the arrival of J. F. Allen from Kansas City, who is shipping a carload of specimens of ore from Tennessee, Georgia and North Carolina to Kansas City. Mr. Allen sad: "I am sent here by a syndicate to secure specimens of gold ore from this district. I will secure a carload, which will be shipped to Kansas City to the smelter, where it will be tested and an estimate be made."

When asked who formed the syndicate Mr. Allen said. "That I am not at liberty to say. I don't see why there should not be gold here. You have everything else in this district, and I would not be surprised at any time of hearing of diamonds and pearls being found. There is good prospect of gold being found in this section in abundance. Not another Klondike, you understand, but enough to pay the parties to take it out."

J. H. Eckels, the brains of the treasury department, has an article in the October Munsey on the financial condition of the country. His argument is first-class old-party doctrine, as he states the only real relief the people can get is by allowing the national bankers full swing in issuing their wildcat currency, thus entirely relieving the poor old government from the onerous duty of running its own monetary affairs. The noble patriots, both foreign and domestic, represented by Eckels, stand ready to sacrifice themselve to the utmost in carrying out the comptroller's ideas of finance. The article in question is wonderfully well written—so much so, in fact, that it must cause tears of joy to gurgle from the eyes of the faithful hidebound partisans of both old parties for both are owned by the same money ring. Mr. Eckels ingenuously states that the "greatest need in our country today is a sound currency issued by the national bankers of the United States." From their own standpoint Mr. Eckels' admirers are eminently satisfied that this is the truth, the whole truth, s'help 'em. Any old fairy tale, so long as it is against the interest of the working classes, is accepted as gospel truth by your fanatical old party idolator, and so long as the party prospers the people can go to blazes. —Reno (Nev) Plaindealer.

SECRETARY BLISS' REPORT.

Big Reduction in the Amount of the Pension Roll Expected.

NEW LAWS FOR ALASKA RECOMMENDED.

Indian Population of the United States Given—Opening of the Wichita Reservation Would Promote That Country's Development.

Secretary of the Interior Bliss, in his annual report, made public last week, submits estimates aggregating $156,532,419 for appropriations by congress for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899.

Discussing pensions, he says 200,000 pension claims are awaiting adjudication, and it is estimated that 40 or 50 per cent of these will be finally admitted. If they are rapidly adjudicated they will swell the pension roll from $5,000,000 to $7,000,000. When, however, these claims are adjudicated, and the first payment made thereon, the amount of the pension roll will decrease very rapidly, possibly to $125,000,000 or $130,000,000 the first year.

About the Indians.

To total Indian population of the United States, exclusive of the New York Indians and the five civilized tribes, approximates 177,178, located on 177 reservations, which contain approximately 33,404,837 acres. Of these, 4,545 have accepted allotments of land, which aggregate about 644,147 acres.

Secretary Bliss says while the opening of the Wichita reservation in Oklahoma to white settlement would greatly promote the development of that country, yet, in view of the unsettled condition of the questions affecting their rights, until there is further legislation he does not see how it can be done without causing great injury and distress.

MORGAN TALKS ABOUT HAWAII

NEED HAVE NO FEARS OF FOREIGN OPPOSITION.

Since His Return He Favors Annexing the Island Stronger Than Ever.

Senator Morgan, of Alabama, member of the committee on foreign relations, has reached Washington on his return from Honolulu, where he went to post himself on the annexation question. For the first time, he submitted himself to an interview on the result of his trip, and in part said:

"My conclusions, based on my observations, are only a full confirmation of what I had previously believed, that it is our national duty, and will be in every way advantageous to all concerned, to annex Hawaii to this country. I have studied the questions from the most authentic and reliable sources. The establishment of an outpost of the United States within the tropics, and 2,200 miles from our coast, challenges the inquiry whether such action is necessary to our national welfare. Our northwestern possessions on the Pacific along the Aleutian Archipelago, are over 1,000 miles west of Honolulu. This gives us control of practically the entire American coast of the north Pacific. The intervention of the British possessions from the straits of Fuca to the northern boundary of Alaska creates a powerful reason for our occupation of Hawaii. Without imputing to Great Britain any other motive than to extend her national policy of commercial conquest, it seems very obvious that if she should acquire dominion of Hawaii and open and fortify Pearl harbor, her military fortress at Esquimalt, on the island of Vancouver, co-operating without, would cut our coast line in two and would leave us incumbered with a mass of territory in Alaska, whose defenses would be almost impossible, and the enormous advantages of which would be lost to us. The Vancouver coal fields would give the British navy almost irresistible advantages in case of war and virtual dominion of commerce in time of peace.

"There would not be the slightest difficulty in the character, condition or wish of the 31,000 native people of Hawaii. They are far better adapted to American citizenship than many millions of those whom we have welcomed here from southern Europe and better adapted than the Indians, Mexicans and native Alaskans.

"Except among the few who expect personal favors and advancement from re-establishment of the royal government, the general body of the Hawaiian population will rejoice in the honor, safety, peace, and prosperity which annexation will bring. Morally and practically, the silent invasion of Hawaii from the orient (the Japanese) violates all the declared policy and often expressed purposes of the United States, to protect those people against foreign interference. The island as a national possession would richly reward us for expenditure of a hundred millions. The annexation would cost us nothing and will not at present excite the open opposition of any nation."

A SINGULAR MISTAKE.

In Attempting to Capture a Murderer One Officer Shoots Another.

News of a singular mistake, which came near having a tragic ending, comes from Uhland, Ala., near Columbus, Ga., while the sheriff with a posse of men were endeavoring to capture a negro murderer, who was located by the officers in a house near Uhland. The building was immediately surrounded. The sheriff and Frank Peppers, one of the posse, went to the back of the house to prevent the desperado escaping in that direction. For some reason the sheriff sent Peppers around to the front of the house again. As Peppers turned the corner of the house he was perceived by Gus Farrows, another member of the posse, who, thinking it was the negro who was trying to escape, blazed away at his brother officer with a double-barreled shotgun. Peppers fell to the ground, and Farrows was about to pour a load of buckshot into him if he attempted resistance, when he happened to perceive his mistake.

Most of the shot lodged in Peppers' arms, and although he is seriously wounded he will probably recover. The sheriff, hearing the shot, rushed around the house, thinking that the negro was escaping. In the midst of the confusion the negro slipped out the back door and escaped.

Steamer Bluff City Burned.

The magnificent Anchor Line steamer Bluff City, one of the finest and newest boats on the Mississippi river, which left St. Louis Wednesday bound for New Orleans with forty passengers and 1,000 tons of miscellaneous freight on board, burned to the water's edge at Chester, Ill., Thursday.

All passengers and the crew escaped to land without injury, but nothing on board was saved. The total loss will aggregate $100,000. A number of valuable race horses, being taken to New Orleans for the races there, lost their lives.

A MODERATE IMPROVEMENT

Colder Weather Has Done Much to Accelerate Retail Trade.

AN ACTIVE DEMAND FOR IRON PRODUCTS.

Some Planters Have Been Compelled to Sell Cotton at a Loss—Cotton Goods Weak—Wheat Exports Unusually Heavy for the Week.

Bradstreet's review of trade says: There is a moderate improvement in staple prices and in distribution of woolen goods, shoes, hats and hardware in the region tributary to Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City and Omaha. Tennessee and Louisiana jobbers report a revival of demand from the interior merchants, with some of the business delayed by yellow fever quarantine. Trade reports from Georgia and Texas are quite irregular. Some cotton planters are compelled to sell cotton at a loss to meet advances made earlier in the season, and have little or no surplus with which to buy merchandise. Others, notably in Texas, continue to hold cotton, which delays mercantile collections, and in some sections has an unfavorable influence. Colder weather northwest and in the central Mississippi and Missouri river valleys has helped retail business.

Manufacturers of iron, steel, agricultural implements, stoves, railway cars and woolen goods report an active demand and large output, although the appearance of speculative steel has resulted in weakening the prices of billets and a like tendency on the part of Bessemer pig iron.

Higher prices are recorded for wheat, corn, oats, syrup, hides, shoes, leather, and for turpentine. The reaction in iron and steel is likely to be followed by an advance if the present rate of consumption continues. Lower prices for wheat flour and pork are expected to recognize the advances in wheat and Indian corn, so that a lower price for copper is practically the only important decline for the week.

Wheat exports show a heavy increase alike over last week and last year, and with one exception, that of the second week in September, is the largest single week's total on record.

The total exports of wheat (flour included as wheat) from both coasts of the United States this week aggregate 6,635,792 bushels, against 5,445,542 bushels last week, 3,937,000 bushels in the week a year ago, 2,916,000 bushels in 1895, 3,312,675 bushels in 1894, and 2,764,080 bushels in 1893. The total exports of the second week of September, 1891, were 6,974,000 bushels.

Corn exports also show a gain aggregating 3,209,790 bushels for this week, against 2,975,721 last year, 1,743,000 in 1895, and 189,000 in 1894.

There are 235 business failures reported throughout the United States this week, compared with 273 last week, 308 in the week a year ago, 323 two years ago, 295 three years ago, and as compared with 358 in the like week of 1893.

THREE THOUSAND SHEEP BURN.

Prairie Fire Ten Miles Wide Sweeps Through Texas Counties.

A terrific prairie fire passed through Lubbock, Hale and Crosby counties, Tex., last week, doing great damage to the ranges.

It originated east of Crosby county, burned eastward through Crosby before a severe west wind, until it reached a point north of Emma, when a norther arose, bringing the fire south in its awful fury. The flames came leaping, making a fire ten miles wide and traveling at lightning speed. At least 400 square miles of territory were burned. Cattle suffered and many were burned to death. North of Emma, three thousand sheep were burned in one flock and many farmers lost their winter feed, fire burning it in the stacks.

Tammany Grows Generous.

The members of the executive committee of Tammany hall have subscribed $20,000 for the starving people of Cuba and a like sum for the poor of New York city. The Cuban check was handed to Senor Tomas Estrada Palma and other members of the junta who had called to seek the aid of Tammany in behalf of their starving countrymen.

Train Wrecked in Arkansas.

Train No. 2 on the Kansas City, Fort Scott & Memphis, which left Birmingham, Ala., for Kansas City, was derailed just west of Williford, Ark., Thursday morning. The combination coach, chair car and sleeper went over the bank, the combination car going into Spring river. The chair car and sleeper were both consumed. It is supposed that the truck gave way.

One passenger, J. T. Hoover, of Pleasant Hill, Mo., was fatally injured and about thirty others more or less seriously hurt. It is believed none of the latter will die.

IT was growing dark when Miss Martie, with her basket on her arm, came into the corner market to buy her Thanksgiving dinner. The basket was absurdly small, but Miss Mattie was little herself, and when she set it on the high counter and stood blinking in the bright light, the calf's head at her elbow seemed to be grinning at them both.

"Well, Miss Mattie," called out the market man, in his hearty fashion, "I see your mind is not set on a turkey this time, but just wait till I start this basket off for Cap'n Lawson's and I'll show you the right thing—a plump little duck I clapped into the safe this morning, thinking to myself that's the very moral of a treat for Miss Mattie."

Miss Mattie looked embarrassed and rubbed her forefinger uneasily over a small coin that lay in the palm of her hand under her glove. It was a silver five-cent piece, and she had taken it with much hesitation from a little store of pieces, most of them given her when she was a child. For herself she could have got along very well with bread and tea, but somehow it seemed a dishonor to all her happy past not to have something special on Thanksgiving; and so she had a feeling of real pity for it, lying there warm and snug in her palm, and so soon to go tumbling into the heap of clashing, jingling coins tossed about by the butcher's greasy fingers, or perhaps into the pocket of that horrible apron with blood-stains on it. Miss Mattie shuddered, but quickly recovered herself to say, cheerfully:

"Oh, thank you, Mr. Simmons; but don't you think ducks are a sight of trouble, what with the stuffing and the roasting and needing to be looked after and basted regular? I made up my mind to something simple, and I don't know anything that's easier got or more relishing than lamb chops. Two lamb chops is about what I thought of, Mr. Simmons. You know there's only me."

Mr. Simmons had not seen the five-cent piece, but he understood just as well as if he had, and he began to cut the chops at once, talking all the time to relieve his own embarrassment and assuring Miss Mattie that "if folks only knew it, there was nothing like lamb chops to encourage your appetite and strengthen you up all over."

"But you'll have to take three chops," looking curiously at the money Miss Mattie laid in his big hand, "or I'll have to make change, and change is scarcer than hen's teeth to-night. You might have company unexpected, you know, and an extry chop would come in handy."

Miss Mattie laughed so genially that the market man ventured to slip a sweetbread and a bunch of yellow celery into the basket on the sly. He would have loved to put in the duck, but that would have looked as if he suspected her reason for not buying it, and, bless you, he knew better than that. Some people have feelings, though their faces are red and their hands coarse and greasy.

Miss Mattie went very happily down the street. She had lighted her lamp before she went out, and a cheerful little ray smiled encouragingly at her as she came to the gate. All the other windows in the weather-beaten old house were black and empty and looked to the lonesome little woman as if all sorts of hobgoblins might be peeping out at her from the gloom behind them, for Miss Mattie's neighbors had gone away on a Thanksgiving visit and taken the whole family. At least they said "the whole family," but at the very moment Miss Mattie came to the gate a member of the family was huddled up in a corner of the doorway, cold, hungry and much perplexed to understand what had become of all his friends and why, in spite of his pitiful plea, no one came to open the door for him. He heard Miss Mattie and ran hopefully to meet her, limping as he came, for he had a stiff leg.

"Why, Tommy Barnes," said Miss Mattie, stooping to pat his rough yellow head, "you don't mean to say your folks have gone off to Thanksgiving and left you beeind. Well, if I ever! How dreadful—thoughtless—and you a cripple besides!"

Tommy kept on crying, but he had his eye on the door while Miss Mattie was fitting her key, and the minute it opened he darted in.

"That's right, Tommy," said Miss Mattie; "just make yourself at home. You and I'll have our Thanksgiving together. That extra chop will be wanted after all, and I'm going to make riz biscuits."

She put away her bonnet and shawl and hung the basket on a nail in the back-room without even looking at the contents, though Tommy Barnes watched her keenly with a shrewd suspicion of something good, and a faint hope which nothing in his past experience justified that he might come in for a share of it. Miss Mattie was accustomed to being alone, and she scarcely thought of Tommy, as she trotted about, setting the sponge for her biscuits in a pint bowl, putting a little cup of broth on the stove to warm for her supper, making her tea, toasting her bread, and at last sitting down by the table in the little green chair with a patchwork cushion. Up to this point Tommy had sat quietly by the fire, having learned by many severe lessons that little folks should be seen and not heard, but when Miss Mattie poured out the savory broth the delicious odor was too much for his fortitude, and with one bound he sprung into her lap.

"Bless me," said Miss Mattie, "if I hadn't clean forgot you, and you half-starved, I dare say. There, get down. I never could abide cats around my victuals."

She put Tommy gently on the floor, crumbled some bread into the bowl of broth, cooled it carefully and set it down for him to eat.

"It's pretty rich for me anyway," she said, as she made out her supper with toast and tea.

It was perhaps well for Tommy that he took an early promenade next morning around the back yards of the neighborhood, and secured several valuable tid-bits, for Miss Mattie had very little to offer him. She baked her delightful little puffs of biscuits, and enjoyed them immensely, finding them lighter and more digestible without butter. She read a Thanksgiving psalm and went about trying to sing in a little chirrupy voice like a brown sparrow. She brought in the small basket and flushed over the unexpected treasuretrove, but took it kindly as a bit of neighborly goodwill. The sweetbread, white and plump and all ready for cooking, reminded her of old Mrs. Morrison, just beginning to sit up and watch the people go by the window. What a toothsome dainty this would be for her, and what a delight that she should be able to take it to her as she went to church, yes, and some of the celery, too, for a relish. The chops were transferred to a plate on the shelf, the sweetbread wrapped in a fine old napkin and laid back in the basket with the best half of the celery, and the biscuits Miss Mattie had saved for dinner.

"The cold bread will go just as well with chops," she reflected, and prepared for church with a glow of happiness such as she had not known in a long time.

It helped to a real feeling of thankfulness, especially when she thought of old Mrs. Morrison, and how pleased she had been with the unexpected gift. She laughed a little to herself as she returned to her own door after service, remembering how when Sally Morrison had commiserated her on being alone Thanksgiving Day, she had assured her she had company invited—Tommy Barnes, from the next door, who was spending a couple of days with her, the rest of the family being away.

"I hope 't wa'n't a sinful untruth," she said, smiling at Tommy, who lay peacefully sleeping on the braided rug, "but if old Miss Morrison had set in to have me stay to dinner, I shouldn't a' known how to get away, and she is such a talker."

With a long, clean apron over her best frock, Miss Mattie began cheerfully to make her small preparations for the Thanksgiving feast. She had meditated leaving one chop for breakfast, but her walk and happiness had made her hungry and she decided to cook them all.

But where did she put these chops—she was getting so forgetful—she could have sworn she put them on the shelf—could she have left them in the basket after all? Her perplexed eyes fell from the shelf to the floor, and there, just peeping from the wood-box was the plate, and two small, very small, bits of bone, gnawed quite clean and white.

Ungrateful Tommy Barnes, lying there in peaceful slumber, with those precious chops rounding out your yellow sides, if justice had befallen you then and there you might not have lived to steal again. But into the midst of Miss Mattie righteous wrath came the reflection that Tommy must have been hungry, and the fault after all was partly her own for putting temptation in his way, "though how anything could have been further out of his way than that shelf, I don't really see," she added, dolefully.

At that minute Tommy Barnes waked from his nap, transformed himself into a camel, yawned in a frightfully tigerish fashion, and proceeded to sharpen his claws on the rug, the sacred rug into which had been braided some precious old garments dear to Miss Mattie's heart. It was a straw too much to have insult added to injury, and springing from her chair, she cuffed Tommy in such vigorous fashion that three or four hearty blows found their mark before the astonished sinner could withdraw his claws and bound out at the back door, left ajar in the search for the chops. At that instant a resounding knock on the front door sent Miss Mattie's heart to her throat with a sudden leap, as if justice were already coming to take her in hand for unreasonable cruelty.

When Miss Mattie was peacefully pattering about, unconscious of the cruel trick fate and Tommy Barnes had played her, Mrs. Deacon Giles was surveying her husband with a disturbed and tearful face.

"You don't mean to tell me," she repeated, "that the minister's folks ain't comin' at all, and you and me has got to eat this big dinner alone? Here, I stayed home from church to tend to it. Oh, you needn't to look as if you thought it was a judgment. Josiah I wouldn't be such a hippercrit as to pretend to be thinkin' of spiritooal things when I was wonderin' if Sarah Ellen would remember to baste the turkey. Seems to me they might let us know sooner."

"But I told ye, mother, it was a telegram come just before church. You can't regerlate telegrams like the weekly newspaper, or stop folks from dyin' unexpicted."

"Then, why didn't you rush round and get somebody else? Mercy sakes! 'Twon't seem like Thanksgiving at all——"

"SHE WAS TUCKED IN THE YELLOW SLEIGH."

"Didn't seem to be anybody to ask but old Mis' Morrison and Marthy Ellison. I drove round by the Morrisons, but the old lady was just having something relishing Miss Mattie had fetched in. They said they invited her to dinner, but she had comp'ny; one of them Barneses next door."

"Fiddlesticks!" said the deacon's wife, in a very disrespectful tone, "You just drive straight back and bring Marthy Ellison up here to dinner. Tell her I don't take any excuse, and, if she can't come otherways, she can bring her comp'ny along, though the way them shif'less Barnesses impose on her is a mortal shame."

Good Deacon Giles had learned docility in many years of experience, and the double knock at Miss Mattie's door followed as quickly as could be reasonably expected. Miss Mattie attempted neither excuse nor hesitation, but accepted her good providence with radiant delight.

"Mother said to fetch your comp'ny along," said the deacon, glancing doubtfully about the small room. "We heard you had one of the Barneses. I kinder hope 'tain't the cross-eyed one that stole my pears."

"Oh," said Miss Mattie, laughing into the little mirror, as she tied her bonnet, "he's had his dinner and he's gone out."

She didn't say that he had eaten hers also, but at Mrs. Giles's hospitable table, under the genial influence of generous fare and pleasant old-time reminiscences, she told the story of Tommy Barnes and the lamb chops in a way that made the deacon lose his breath with laughter. And when she was tucked into the yellow sleigh for the ride home, Mrs. Giles stopped at the door to say:

"I put some bits of bones and things in a basket under the seat for Tommy. Takes a sight of stuff to reely fill up a cat fur 'nough to give his moral principles a fair showin'."

Tommy was on the step waiting to welcome Miss Mattie, which shows his forgiving disposition, and, though he got as much as was good for him out of the basket under the seat, Miss Mattie very wisely concluded that the mince pie, roast chicken and cranberry sauce could hardly have been meant for his delight, so she locked them in the cupboard, saying decidedly:

"This time, Tommy Barnes, I'll give your moral principles a fair showing." EMILY HUNTINGTON MILLER.

O HEART, GIVE THANKS.

O heart, give thanks for strength, to-day,
To walk, to run, to work, to play!
For feasts of eye; melodious sound;
Thy pulses' easy, rhythmic bound;
Ten servants that thy will obey;

A mind clear as the sun's own ray;
A life which has not passed its May;
That all thy being thus is crowned,
O heart, give thanks!

Feet helpless lie that once were gay;
Eyes know but night's eternal sway;
Souls dwell in silence, dread, profound;
Minds live with clouds encircling round;
In face of these, thy blessings weigh!
O heart, give thanks!

ANOTHER MASTERPIECE.

"Have you seen Pegreen's new painting?"

"No; what's the subject?"

"'Death on a High-Grade Wheel,' a companion piece of 'Death on a Pale Horse.'"

'TIS THE GUN.

"Why is it that Chumpley always buys another new gun at the opening of the game season?"

"Because the one he had the year before never killed anything."

PLENTY OF THEM.

"You say you love my daughter?"

"I love her, sir, with every fiber that I possess."

"Every fiber?"

"Yes, sir. I'm in the rope and cable business, sir."

THE CHEERFUL IDIOT.

"I see," said the shoe clerk boarder, "that there is a king in Africa who has been drunk for fifteen years."

"That," said the Cheerful Idiot, "is what might be called a soaking reign."

THE OLD, OLD DELUSION.

"Darling," he whispered, "it costs no more to keep two bicycles in repair than one."

Love is eternal; its delusions, even, are mutable only in respect of their terms.

IT WOULDN'T WORK.

"One touch of nature, you know, old man——"

"Of course, of course; but you're not nature, and consequently I refuse to be touched."

Thus the promptness with which he saw the point saved him.

SIZED HIM UP.

An Irishman, who had jumped into the water to save a man from drowning, on receiving a sixpence from the rescued man, looked first at the sixpence and then at the donor, saying:

"Be jabers, I am overpaid for that job."

EVERY SEAT WAS TAKEN.

Barnes Tormer—Every seat was taken at our last performance.

Roscius de Hamm—I heard about it. I was told that the audience carried off the benches as the only way of getting any return for their money.

AS BETWEEN MEN.

"Yes, dear, I met your father, and told him that I wanted to talk with him as one man with another."

"And"——

"Well, that was the kind of talk I got. With all the temper he has, I am sure he would never have used such language in talking to a woman."

KEEPING HER WORD.

"Madam," said the attorney for the defense, "do you recognize the prisoner as your husband?"

"No, sir," she indignantly replied, "I told him when he got into trouble before that if he repeated the offense I would never recognize him again!"

TRYING TO DEFRAUD HER.

Horton—How is it that you always put on such a long face and talk so discouragingly when your wife happens to be present? At other times you are one of the most enthusiastic prosperity boomers I know of.

Henley—I promised her away along last spring that I'd get her a new sealskin sacque this fall, if business picked up.

IN HARD LUCK.

Billiken—What's the matter, Williken?

Williken—Matter enough. You know, some time ago I assigned all my property to my wife, to—to keep it out of the hands of—of people I owe, you know.

"Yes."

"Well, she's taken the money and gone off—says she won't live with me because I swindled my creditors."

AREA.

"Let me," urged the merchant, "sell you a cyclometer. It will tell you just how much ground you have covered."

The man with the slender legs took the cyclometer in his hands, gazed upon it earnestly for a moment, and then smiled bravely through his bicycle face.

"Have you none that registers in acres?" he asked, with a palpable effort to be bright.

HE COULDN'T HELP IT.

"Why is it," asked the young lady who was being shown through the establishment, as she stopped beside the man who gets up the "funny column," "why is it that you humorists always look so solemn?"

"Because if a fellow has to make a living at it this joking becomes a mighty serious business."

Then, of course, she said:

"Why, how funny!"

THE MOBILE AND OHIO.

Birmingham News.

Elsewhere in this issue will be found a reference to the constantly reviving rumor that the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, which is building an extension from Columbus, Miss., to Montgomery, Ala., via Tuskaloosa, with branches to Brookwood and Blocton, is going to come into Birmingham by a line to be built from Blocton or Brookwood to Bessemer, where it is stated that the Mobile and Ohio will come into control of the Birmingham, Powderly and Bessemer steam dummy line recently sold to the Birmingham Railway and Electric Company, and thus enter the city.

A News reporter received authentic information on this subject from Chief Engineer Merriwether, of the Mobile and Ohio, at the Morris Hotel this morning. The reporter put the question to Mr. Merriwether point blank as follows:

"Mr. Merriwether, is the Mobile and Ohio Railroad coming into Birmingham?"

"That the Mobile and Ohio Railroad would like to come into Birmingham," replied Mr. Merriwether, "there is no doubt, but it is equally true that the road has no such intention at present. The road has no more idea of building a line to Birmingham at this time than I propose to do it individually. There is absolutely no truth in the report that we are heading this way.

"It is true," continued Mr. Merriwether, "that a party of surveyors have been in the field on a line coming this way from Blocton, but what they are there for I do not know. I have been asked if they represent us, and I have said they do not. What they are doing I do not know, but I do know that they are not surveying a route to Birmingham for the Mobile and Ohio Railroad.

"For one thing, the Hanover Construction Company cannot build to Birmingham under the present contract. There were four million of 5 per cent. bonds issued, and the contract plainly states that they are to be used to build the extension from Montgomery to Columbus with extensions to Blocton and the Warrior coal fields. There is no provision for doing anything else, and we could not consider a line to Birmingham under the funds thus raised.

"We have been somewhat set back on the Warrior extension by not finding the coal mines in operation we expected to find. For this reason we may have to push on to Brookwood, but that is all the further extension we can make now.

"No; we do not meditate coming into Birmingham; we have not bought or dickered for the Birmingham, Powderly and Bessemer dummy line; we have no project laid out for entrance into this city."

Mr. Merriwether, speaking of the construction of the extension from Columbus to Montgomery, said; "Rails are now laid from the Columbus end to within fifteen miles of Tuskaloosa. We expect to be in Tuscaloosa by December 1, and trains will be able to operate between Columbus and Tuscaloosa for work of construction if not for regular service, by January 1."

The SIXTH MISSING WORD CONTEST

The Atlanta Constitution Offers

One Tenth Of the Subscriptions

Received from those entering the Contest to name properly the missing word in the following sentence:

"Once given the passion for ____, that one of the precious metals will be most in demand which is cheapest." ∴ ∴ ∴

And, in Addition

TO THE 10 PER CENT, WE WILL GIVE

$100 Cash Extra

For the first Six Correct Guesses, as follows: $50 for the First Correct Guess and $10 Each for the Next Five, in their order, provided the same are received in our office on or before December 1st.

THE PERIOD COVERED

By This Contest shows about 16,000 expirations for The Weekly Constitution, and, of course, we want them all to renew and to enter the Contest.

THIS MEANS $1,600

For the Missing Word Fund, and every additional subscriber entering the contest will swell the amount the more.

This period also compares with our First Missing Word Contest last year, in which Mr. M. L. Brittain secured the prize—$1,033.50. As that was our First Contest, there were more than 5,000 subscribers received during the time, who did not enter for prize. It will not be so this time, for the plan is widely advertised and we have paid out within the past twelve months NEARLY $5,000 CASH upon the Five Missing Word Contests. The series has been of extraordinary interest, and the idea seems to grow in the public's favor.

The book containing the sentence is a standard publication, and has been sealed up and placed with Mr. W. A. Hemphill, President and Business Manager of The Constitution, who will hold it safely until January 1, 1898.

The sentence speaks for itself and submits a very plain proposition for you to solve.

The Contest Began November 1, 1897.
The Contest Ends January 1, 1898.

This contest lasts two months and the amount to be divided will probably be in the neighborhood of $2,000. There may be one correct answer, there may be a dozen, there may be more, but remember it costs nothing to supply a word, and you may get it correctly. Whether you do or not, you get

The Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers for One Year.

Keep That in View and Send Your Guess With Your Dollar for a Year's Subscription

Ten per cent of the Guessers' Subscriptions goes to the Fund to be divided. In other words, if this Subscription Fund amounts to $20,000 for the two months, the Fund to go to the successful guesser would be $2,000. Following are the conditions of contest:

WE PROPOSE TO PUT 10 PER CENT of the amount we receive for subscriptions, wherein the party subscribing enters the Missing Word Contest, into a fund for distribution among those who name correctly the missing word. For instance: If only one contestant gets the word right, he or she, as the case may be, will have all the money. If more than one strike it, the sum will be equally divided, each correct answer receiving its proportionate share of the fund.

THE CONDITION PRECEDENT FOR SENDING A GUESS at the Missing Word is that each and every guess must be accompanied by a year's subscription to THE WEEKLY CONSTITUTION; the guess must be sent in the identical envelope that brings the money that pays for the subscription; forgetting it, or leaving it out by accident or otherwise, or not knowing of the guess at the time you subscribed, or any other reason will not entitle one to send a guess afterwards. The guess must come with the subscription or not at all. Should a party send more than one guess, he or she will be entitled to a share of the fund for each correct guess sent; there will be no capital prize—every one will get a first prize. Persons may guess as many times as they send subscriptions.

THE CONTEST BEGAN NOV. 1ST—We began then to keep accurate account of the subscriptions received with guesses and on December 1st we will publish how much is to the credit of the subscribers guessing, and during December we will publish each week how the fund has grown.

THE CONTEST CLOSES JAN. 1ST—At which time we will pay out to the successful party or parties the full prize amount that has accrued in the contest.

In Making Your Answer You need not write the sentence out in full, just state simply the Missing Word for January 1st is "....."

The above is the plan of The Constitution Contest, which all subscribers to that paper and ours, subscribing under the clubbing offer announced elsewhere, may enter. Address orders to

BILL ARP'S WEEKIY LETTER.

HAS MORE TRIBULATIONS DURING HIS LECTURE TOUR.

ANOTHER RIDE ON FREIGHT TRAIN.

However, All's Well That Ends Well. Philosopher Visits Spot Where Great Men Are Buried.

Charlotte, N. C., is a growing city of 20,000 people. Charlotte has the best advertising sketchbook I ever saw. It is beautifully printed and illustrated and seems to be founded on facts. They are distributed from all of the hotels and are pleasant reading on the train. It tells all about the health and climate and altitude and business and resources and public morals, but what amazed and impressed me most was the circle map that shows the number of cotton mills within a radius of 100 miles from Charlotte. On this map are black dots numbering the mills at every town and the aggregate is 210, or about 62 percent of all the mills in the south. These mills operate 1,621,000 spindles and 14,000 looms and are capitalized at $50,000,000. This little book contains a tabular statement of all these mills by name and capacity. Charlotte has eleven of her own.

Now, I was ruminating about this in connection with five cent cotton. And there is some comfort in it, for we keep at home all the profit there is in manufacturing and we give employment to thousands of our poor and dependent people. Suppose that every township in Georgia had a cotton mill and that all its earnings were spent and scattered in the community, then we wouldn't feel so bad over the low price of the great staple. We would indirectly share in the profits of manufacturing.

Once again I visited the old time-honored cemetery—the first graveyard of old Mecklenburg county. I was sorry to see that it has of late been neglected and has grown up in briars and weeds. I took note of some of the old inscriptions, and this one especially attracted my attention:

"Oh, Crux—ave spes unica.
"Sacred to the memory of Patrick Harty, who was born in Tipperrary, Ireland.

"It is a holy and a wholesome thought to pray for the dead that they may be loosed from their sins.—II Maccabees 12, 46."

There lies a good Roman Catholic, thought I. He went to purgatory and the priest prayed for him. Then I ruminated about Maccabees not being in the sacred canon, but was in the Apocrypha, and the Apocrypha was ruled out of the King James version in 1826. Then I turned to an old Bible that had the Apocrypha and found that the 12th chapter of II Maccabees had only forty-five verses, but the last three had the same injunction to pray for them who are dead, and furthermore that Judas Maccabees raised among his soldiers 2,000 drachma as a sin offering for those who were slain. I make no comment on this. Martin Luther translated the Bible and left in it these two books, as he said, for human consideration.

There is another tombstone at Cheraw that interested me, for it marks the grave of no man or woman now known. It reads as follows:

"My name—my country—what are they to thee
What—whether high or low my pedigree;
Perhaps I far surpassed all other men,
Perhaps I fell below them all—what then?
Suffice it, stranger, that thou seest a tomb,
Thou knowest its use—it hides no matter whom."

The other morning about daybreak I left Charlotte for Lumberton, on the Wilmington road. The breakfast house was 70 miles away at Hamlet, and when I got there I heard the conductor say: "Twenty minutes for breakfast." But I dident hear him say change cars for Wilmington and points this side. You see I am getting quite deaf in one ear and can't hear at all out of the other, but my wife says it is astonishing how quickly I hear the breakfast bell. We had a splendid meal, and I regained my seat in the same car. When about a mile from town the conductor called for my ticket, and recognized me as bound for Lumbertown. He frantically pulled the bell cord and told me to get off and hurry back, for maybe I could catch the Wilmington train. Right then I was distressed, for I knew there was no other train that day, and I was billed to lecture that night. The sand was shoemouth deep, but I gripped my baggage and foxtrotted about 200 yards and suddenly discovered that I would have to put on brakes for my wind was giving out. Another hundred yards and I had to stop and blow, for my heart was thumping like a bass drum, and there is so much heart failure nowadays that I got alarmed and put down my valise and sat on it. Just then I saw my train steaming away like a snake in the grass, and I involuntarily exclaimed, "Farewell, vain world, I'm going home." So I took my time and made haste slowly, and when I reached the station was the picture of disappointment and dispair. "What can an old man do but die?" I murmured. Wish now I had my photograph as I was foxtrotting through that sand, and then another as I saw that train steaming away without me. But all's well that ends well. I found a freight train that was going to leave for Lumberton at 11 o'clock, but the conductor couldent say when it would get there. I wired my friend that I was left, but to hold the fort, for I was coming—and he did. It was only forty-four miles, but it took us over eight long hours to get there. I had only time to wash up and brush up and eat supper, but I found a good house full awaiting me. My subject was "The Cracker and the Cavalier," and my friend introduced me by saying: "Ladies and gentlemen, I have the pleasure of introducing to you the distinguished Georgia cavalier, who will now proceed to address the North Carolina crackers." Well, this brought down the house to start on, and put everybody in a good humor, especially when I apologized for my delay and portrayed my trials and tribulations. Lumberton is a good old town, and has the best waterworks that I have seen anywhere. They have four blowing artesian wells for public use, and many more private ones. These public ones, including pipes and everything, cost less than $1,000, and I know of many a town that would give $10,000 for similar privileges. Lumberton does not realize what a treasure that water is, for it is cold and pure.

The next stop was at Weldon, in Halifax county. I don't know what those people have done to McKinley, but he has already appointed eight negro postmasters in the county and six of them have accepted and are in office. The people are hot, I tell you, for the negroes outnumber the whites and brag that "their time has come at last, thank the Lord."

It used to be that when a man wasent irreverent enough to tell a man to "go to hell" he would tell him to go to "Halifax." I understand now what he meant. It has been nearly fifty years since I stopped at Weldon and the town hasent changed much. The people are high-toned and have good manners, for they live close to the Virginia line and come from aristocratic stock. From Weldon I journeyed to Washington, on Pamlico sound, a lively city of 6,000 people. I was escorted to the Ricks House, where all the drummers congregate, for Mrs. Rick is a mother to them all, and they love her. I found her house full of them. They come and they go on every train. I like the drummers and sympathize with them, for they are far from home and many of them have families and have to leave them, as I do, to make a living. I am a drummer myself, but I don't like the name. It is slang and does not fit such a respectable class of gentlemen. It origated from the old militia musters when drum and fife were used to call up the boys and get them in line. The sergeant would cry out: "Oh, yes; oh, yes; all who belong to Captain Jones' company parade here." Then the drum would rattle and the fife would whistle and the boys would gather and fall into line. Drumming now means come right here and buy my goods, and the drummer rattles his tongue with earnest alacrity. I feel sorry for them now, for 5-cent cotton has nearly ruined their business. But they keep going. They are everywhere. They get on and off at every station by night and by day. They keep up the hotels and largely help out the railroads. They are smart and good-looking and well behaved and know more about everything than any other class. They are constantly rubbing against the world and absorbing knowledge.

Well, this is the historic region where Sir Walter Raleigh's lost colony was planted and where Virginia Dare was born. I saw Virginia. Her name was on a beautiful steamer that was loading at the wharf. A sweet little girl laughed at me for not knowing all about Virginia Dare a long time ago. Her father says that Mr. McMillan, of Red Springs, has written a book about the lost colony and that the Croatans now have free schools that are separate from both white and black races. The lost colony amalgamated and miscegenerated with these Croatans and no doubt but that Virginia Dare's blood flows in some of their veins.

From here I am homeward bound and am happy on the way.—BILL ARP in Atlanta Constitution.

To Become Coal Barons.

The Vanderbilt interests have a scheme on foot aiming at the control, through the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad, of the soft coal markets of both East and West. Every part of the enterprise, from the ownership of the coal lands to the final delivery of the product, will be managed by one head, representing one interest.

Cotton Gin and Lumber Yard Burned.

Fire at Hartselle recently destroyed the cotton gin and lumber yard belonging to Robert Sobatka. The loss was total. Forty bales of cotton and 30,000 feet of lumber comprised the principal loss outside of buildings.

Hon. Woodley C. Campbell Dead.

Hon. Woodley C. Campbell, city alderman from the first ward in Montgomery, coroner of Montgomery county, captain of a Montgomery cavalry company and a prominent business man, died at 7 o'clock Thursday morning in Atlanta. Men at Work on New Extension.

The Nashville. Chattanooga and St. Louis railroad now has a force of 150 men at work near Cluttsville on the extension of the Middle Tennessee and Alabama. They are putting three miles of track to make a "Y" between Cluttsville and Madison "X" Roads. The line as surveyed, leaves Huntsville to the left. The contractors say that as soon as spring opens the line will be completed from the "Y" on through to Decatur.

Working for Armor Plate Plant.

Congressman Underwood, of the ninth Alabama district, the leader of the movement for the location of a government armor plate plant in the southern states will endeavor to have a provision attached to either the naval appropriation or to the sundry civil bill for the erection of an armor plate plant to be located at Birmingham.

He has been in correspondence with numerous western and southern members of congress and says he finds that a vast majority will support a measure of this kind. Mr. Underwood is very sanguine of success in his undertaking.

Acknowledges That Fever Existed.

Greensboro, Hale county, has acknowledged at last that yellow fever has prevailed in that city. Dr. Geddings, the government marine hospital surgeon, who has been in Selma disinfecting and fumigating the nine houses in Selma wherein existed yellow fever, received a telegram from Surgeon-General Wyman stating that the mayor and the board of health at Greensboro requested that someone be sent there to investigate and fumigate the houses. In the telegram Dr. Geddings was ordered to go at once to Greensboro and report to Mayor Randolph.

Seeking an Independent Organization.

A conference to organize an independent colored Presbyterian church in the United States is in session at Birmingham. The colored Presbyterians in the South have ever since the war affiliated with ths Southern Presbyterian assembly, but gradually they have been showing a disposition to flock to themselves, until the idea of organizing an independent church has finally taken shape in the conference which is now in session. The proposed church is to have national jurisdiction. The Southern Assembly is represented at the meeting by its committee on colored evangelization, of which Dr. A. L. Phillips, of Tuskaloosa, is secretary, and the Northern Assembly also has prominent members present to counsel the ministers and elders.

Iowa Farmers Locating in This State.

J. E. McMichael has just arrived in Morgan county as an advance guard for a large party of emigrant Iowa farmers, consisting of eleven families, who, he says, are traveling overland with all their stock, wagons and personal property, headed for Decatur. The distance they will cover is more than 800 miles. McMichael came on first in order to make certain essential arrangements. The large party will arrive here in a few days. McMichael says they are only a small number compared to the exodus that will come here a little later on, as soon as they can complete their arrangements to get away. This first party have obtained three large fertile farms about six miles west of Decatur, where they will locate.

Alleged Systematic Robbery at Huntsville.

The committee of aldermen, who have in charge the construction of city sewers at Huntsville, has made the startling allegation that the city has been systematically robbed for several weeks past, and right under their noses at that. The discovery was that a number of negroes, who have at some time been employed in the trenches, and since discharged, have been drawing money regularly every Saturday night for a week's work without having worked at all.

All of these negroes belonged to a gang superintended by C. M. Tardy. Investigation of the matter begun Monday morning with a called meeting of the city council. The sewer committee was instructed to make a thorough investigation. A closed meeting of this committee was held, and several of the laborers, who have drawn money to which they are not entitled, were placed on the witness stand, and testified that they have been paid a small amount each week to answer their names at roll call and to make application for their wages on pay day.

The city council held a special meeting, and Alderman J. D. Humphrey, paymaster in the sewer construction corps, resigned his position and demanded that his books be thoroughly investigated.

LETTER FROM WILSON.

Commissioner Culver Receives a Communication from Agricultural Department.

The following interesting communication has been received by Commissioner of Agriculture Culver, from Hon. James Wilson, secretary of the national bureau of agriculture:

"I will not have time to make speeches in Alabama, except at the technical institutions at Tuskegee and Auburn, and these will be only informal. I would be pleased to meet your farmers and spend a good deal of time with them, but my duties here are exacting, and my purpose in visiting the south is to study the conditions and consult with gentlemen like yourself, who are familiar with these conditions. I want to learn more about the south, so as to make this department as useful as possible to our people. This will be my business down there. and I must do it as rapidly as possible. I cannot be longer than four or five days in your state.

"I wish to meet the fellows in the field with their coats off and see what their greatest difficulties are. I would like to see what you have done to the soils of Alabama, to what extent they are used, what recuperative methods are used on the depleted soils, etc. I will make inquiry into the dairy industry of the state. During my stay here I intend making repeated visits to the south. This will be my first visit to Alabama, but I hope it will not be my last."

APPROACHING COMPETITION.

Trains on the M. & O. Extension Will Soon be Running.

The Mobile and Ohio railroad will be operating trains within ten days. The trains will be running from Tuskaloosa to Columbus, Miss. The road is complete in every detail to within ten miles of Tuskaloosa. The contractors, by using their new track-laying machine, complete two miles daily. The false work on all of the bridges between Tuskaloosa and Columbus has been finished. On the bridge across the Warrior river the crossties and rails are being laid. The iron work for the permanent bridges is on hand in Columbus, snd will be shipped by the first train over the line. The building of this extension has broken all records for quickness.

The grading from Tuskaloosa to Montgomery is almost complete. All that remains to be done in this line is the completion of the trestling. The rails for this end are in Tuskaloosa, having been taken there by the Alabama Great Southern road.

The corps of engineers at work between Birmingham and Blocton continue their surveying to Bessemer. On account of the extreme ruggedness of this part of the country the progress is very slow.

BRIEFLY MENTIONED.

Fire destroyed six houses at Elyton last Thursday, entailing a loss of $4,000.

The Alabama Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, meets in Union Springs on the 15th of December.

The annual convention of the Alabama Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association will convene in Birmingham, Dec. 2, and will continue two weeks.

R. A. Smith, of Fayette, has been justice of the peace for a longer period, perhaps, than any man in the state. He has held that office for nearly forty years with but few breaks.

Mrs. C. M. Wright has been commissioned to take charge of the post-office at Leighton. Her husband, who was first appointed under McKinley, has been appointed deputy United States marshal by Hon. D. F. Cooper.

At the State Health Department at Montgomery Clerk Brassell has gone sufficiently into the matter to ascertain that the total cost to the state of quarantine will be about $9,000. Only a few more of those employed in the service are to be settled with.

Thursday night the Methodist church at Oak Bowery, near Opelika, was completely destroyed by fire, together with all the furniture, carpet and organ. The building has been standing there in a magnificent grove of massive oaks for nearly hall a century.

VICTORY OR DEATH.

Manifesto is Sent Out to All Cuban Sympathizers.

The Cubau constituent assembly, which met recently at Camaguey to remodel the constitution and elect a new president, issued a manifesto which reached the office of the Cuban junta in New York Friday.

The document is dated at Layaha, October 18, 1897, and is signed by Domingo Mendez Capote, as president of the assembly. The manifesto is addressed "by the representatives of the Cuban people to all those who have the independence and future welfare of Cuba at heart."

The document says that the assembly before adjourning deemed it its duty to proclaim, among other things:

"No special laws, no political reform or autonomy, nothing, in short, that the Spanish government may be willing to grant that means Spanish sovereignty over Cuba shall be accepted by the Cubans as a settlement of the war.

"Independence or death is and shall be the unalterable and sacred motto of the Cubans.

"The Cubans have not resorted to arms in order to obtain any political measures which does not once and for all solve the Cuban question. That is the reason we will accept nothing short of absolute independence.

"It is our purpose to constitute an independent state, orderly, prosperous and happy, over the ruin of a worn out colony.

"We are firmly determined to carry on war until victory or death crowns our efforts."

EXPLOSION OF NITRO-GLYCERINE.

Almost Wipes Chesterfield, Ind., Off the Map.

Chesterfield, Ind., was almost wiped off the map at an early hour Friday morning by an explosion of eighty quarts of nitro-glycerine which had been brought overland from Montpelier and placed in an open field half a mile from town. Marion Mansey and Sam Maguire were working in a gas well near by when the explosion occurred. Mansey was thrown fifty feet, but not fatally injured. Maguire was also thrown a hundred feet in the air and badly lacerated, but will recover.

James Gold's house, 300 rods distant, was blown to pieces. The explosion tore a hole in the ground down to the water line, and, so far as can be learned, was spontaneous. A three-ton engine was torn to fragments, and and every living animal near by was killed instantly. The little town of Chesterfield is a mass of ruins, every house being moved from its foundation.

WEDDED TO PELAGIC SEALING.

Canada Declines a Proposition Looking to a Suspension for a Year.

A reply has been prepared by the dominion government of Canada, and forwarded to Washington, in respect to the negotiations which are now going on between the countries. The government will not say what the reply is until it reaches Mr. Foster, at Washington, but it is understood that it is a refusal to stop pelagic sealing for a year, as the United States requested. The whole question depended upon this, and therefore it would appear that the negotiations are to fail in their object. However, there is a report that the Canadian government has proposed an alternative proposition for the consideration of the United States, which could be laid before congress at its next sitting and passed in time to deal with pelagic sealing and the questions of dispute next season.

M'KINLEY IS CAREFUL.

Has No Recommendations for Action Relative to Cuba.

It is understood that the President in his message, will suggest to congress that it would be inadvisable at present to take any action which would complicate the situation in Cuba. It is said that he will suggest that the passage of resolutions recognizing belligerency or independence would be inexpedient while the measures of reform proposed by Spain and to be carried out by Gen. Blanco, are being introduced. The release of the Competitor and other American prisoners, will be referred to as gratifying, and as relieving the United States from the necessity of intervention upon the ground of the protection of American life and property.

New Peruvian Cabinet.

Minister of war and navy, Col. Jose Rosa Gil.

Minister of the treasury, Signor Ignacio Rey, of the former cabinet.

Minister of public works, Dr. Ricardo L. Flores.

Rainmakers in this country have been apparently inactive this season, but a drought would have revived interest in their plans and theories. In Europe their experiments have attracted more attention. Germany offers a reward of $2,500 to any one who can produce a downpour of rain at moderate expense. It is suggested that inventors in this line should also discover how to stop excessive rains, with resulting floods. The favorite devices for rainmaking thus far are cannon explosives, balloons that burst at an elevation, compressed gasses and electric connections between the clouds and the earth.

To Remove Tan and Freckles.

The juice of cucumbers pressed out with a lemon-squeezer is one of the most effective and simple remedies known for removing sunburn.

For removing freckles take one cup of milk and two spoonfuls of grated horseradish, and let it stand for one hour; then strain and bathe the face and hands in it.

A half a pint of rosewater and one spoonful of lemon juice is considered excellent for bathing the face in to remove tan.

A complexion wash, which is very highly recommended and removes freckles, is made of a quarter pound of oatmeal soap, shaved fine into one quart of soft, boiling water; stir until it is smooth and cool; then add a half pint spirits of wine and a quarter ounce of oil of rosemary.

The danger that lies in the use of inflammable hair washes, and which has already manifested itself in the death of two women in the city of London, has induced so eminent a scientist as Lord Kelvin to write a letter upon the subject, which was regarded of enough importance to be published in the London Times. The washes that have been responsible for these disasters are composed chiefly of gasoline or benzine, and are used by hairdressers to remove the natural oil that will collect in the hair of a healthful person. During such cleaning process explosions have followed and death has in two notable instances resulted. Lord Kelvin says that the explosion was due to an electric spark generated by rubbing or handling the hair. All persons are familiar with the experiment of producing electric sparks by stroking a cat's back, and Lord Kelvin holds that the evaporation of the benzine forms, with the air, an explosive gas that may be easily ignited by an electric spark. He says: "Ignition of vapor of benzine by electric spark is well known to dyers in their process for cleaning silks and other fabrics by boiling in large cauldrons of liquid benzine. When the goods are taken out of the cauldron and spread out to dry on a table explosions have often taken place, and I believe it is quite certain that an electric spark, caused by some slight friction between dried and partially dried portions of the fabrics, is the incendiary." Since the absence of a flame or a fire in a room does not insure immunity from these terrible accidents the ladies had better resort to the use of some other agent for cleaning the hair than those, the basis of which is an inflammable liquid that generates a gas easily exploded by an electric spark.

THE SABBATH SCHOOL.

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR DECEMBER 5.

Lesson Text: "Christ's Humility and Exaltation," Phil. ii., 1-11—Golden Text: Phil. ii., 5—Commentary on the Lesson by the Rev. Dr. D. M. Stearns.

1. "If there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels and mercies." Consolation here is literally "one called to your side," and comfort is "one speaking beside you." So we might read, "If there is anything in Christ being ever with you and ever talking to you, and in having the constant companionship and guidance and teaching of the Holy Spirit, if there is anything in the tenderness and compassion of the Father manifested in the Son by the Spirit, then let it be seen in you to the glory of God that Christ may be magnified."

2. "Fulfill ye my joy, that ye be like minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind." Oneness of the members of the body in the service of the head is something greatly desired by our blessed Lord, as is very manifest in His prayer in John xvii., and it will also be the great desire of all who are fully one with Him. Not only does He comfort us with the assurance, "As the Father have loved Me, so have I loved you," but He also adds, "This is My commandment, that ye love one another as I have loved you" (John xv., 9, 12).

3. "Let nothing be done through strife or vain glory, but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves." Another reading is, "In nothing follow self seeking." Jeremiah said to his scribe, Baruch: "Seekest though great things for thyself? Seek them not" (Jer. xvi., 5). Although the whole land was Abram's and not Lot's, yet rather than have strife Abram told Lot to take his choice and go whither he would. When the Philistines strove for the wells which Isaac had reopened, Isaac did not resist, but kept on yielding until there was room for all and the strife ceased (Gen. xiii., 8, 9; xxvi., 22).

4. "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others." Not enviously, as some would pervert it, but desiring the welfare of others as much as or more than your own. Love seeketh not her own (I Cor. xiii., 5). Let Episcopalians seek and rejoice in the welfare of Methodists, and so Methodists of Baptists, Baptists of Presbyterians, and so one, all uniting heartily to seek the honor of the Head in the completion of His body, the church, which has no name but Christ (I Cor. xii., 12, 13).

5. "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His (Rom. viii., 9). Now, every penitent sinner who truly receives Christ receives also the Spirit of Christ, but some are more controlled by and manifest more of that Spirit than others. It is the privilege of every believer to be filled with the Spirit (Eph. v., 18), and led by the Spirit and to walk in the Spirit, and when one is only willing to have no will but the will of God, no choice but God's choice, no way but God's way, no service but what He appoints, God will quickly fill that one with His Spirit and continue to fill him day by day and moment by moment.

6. "Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God." Another reading is, "Deemed not his equality with God a thing to grasp at." He was not always saying: "I am God; I created all things; I own the universe; I do as I please in heaven and on earth, and therefore you must bow to Me, and if you don't I will make you, for I have all power." Those who are always grasping at their position as if they might lose it, or at least some of the honor belonging to it, are very small people, or people of very small minds, whatever their position may be.

7. "But made Himself of no reputation, and took upon Him the form of a servant and was made in the likeless of man." He took not on Him the nature of angels, which would have been a very great humiliation, but as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, He also Himself likewise took part of the same (Heb. ii., 14, 16). He emptied Himself of the glory which He had with the Father before the world was, and consented to endure the limitations of a mortal body for over thirty-three years—not only so, but he consented to endure such limitation under the most limited of earthly conditions, such as the manger at Bethlehem, the humble home and the carpenter's shop at Nazareth.

8. "And being found in fashion as a man He humbled Himself and be came obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and give His life a ransom for many (Math. xx., 28). He consented to be despised and slandered and misunderstood, persecuted, blindfolded, buffeted, spit upon, scourged, led as a lamb to the slaughter, crucified.

9. "Wherefore also God hath highly exalted Him and given Him a name which is above every name." He is now at God's right hand, with the Father on His throne (Rev. iii., 21), and in due time all kings shall fall down before Him and all nations serve Him (Pa. lxxii., 11). By His work and by that alone, which He has finished without help from man, eternal life is freely given to every one who receives Him, and a share in His glory and a place on His throne (John xvii., 22; Rev. iii., 21).

10. "That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth." And so it shall come to pass, for God has purposed it. "The Lord of Hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass, and as I have purposed, so shall it stand" (Isa. xiv., 24). John saw the consummation of it in his vision when he heard every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, saying, "Blessing and honor and glory and power be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever" (Rev. v., 13). There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we may be saved.

11. "And that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." It shall surely be, to the everlasting comfort and bliss of some and to the everlasting woe of others. Saved and unsaved shall all confess that Jesus Christ is Lord. The saved shall rejoice in Him as their Lord, while the unsaved shall have to confess Him as Lord to their everlasting confusion, but in each God will be glorified. See II Cor. ii., 15, 16. A good test as to whether we are now honoring Him as Lord is seen in verse 14 of our lesson chapter. If by the Spirit we have confessed Him as our Lord and daily do so, there can be in our lives no murmuring or disputing, no strife or envy. He is not Lord of these things.—Lesson Helper.

Permanent Paste.

Soak an ounce of refined gelatine in cold water for an hour, then drain off and squeeze out the water as much as possible. Put the gelatine in a jelly-pot and place the pot in a pan of hot water over the fire. When the gelatine has melted stir in slowly two and one half ounces of pure alcohol. Put in a wide-mouthed bottle and cork tightly. This glue or paste will keep indefinitely, and can be melted for use in a few minutes by setting the bottle in a basin of hot water. As it contains a very small percentage of water, it affects the gloss of the prints but little and dries almost immediately.—Harper's Round Table.

Fortunes in Laces.

Large sums of money are represented by fine old laces. It is said that the Astors own lace worth $3,000,000, and that the Vanderbilts value theirs at $4,000,000. The pope is content with only $75,000 represented in lace, and the Princess of Wales boasts a collection worth $250,000.

GEORGIA TO THE FRONT FOR TRUTH.
Mrs. L. A. Horton

Ranger, Ga., writes: Twelve years ago I had Heartburn, Kidney Disease, Constipated Bowels, Glimmering Before my Eyes, Belched up Gas, and other troubles. Was completely run down and in bed most of the time. Had a Doctor attending me, but nothing did me any good until I quit everything else and used Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine, which completely cured me. I have tried "Black Draught," but think Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine is ahead of that or any other medicine.

Palpitation of the Heart.

Whenever one becomes sensible of the beating of their own heart, they are liable to be frightened and imagine they have some form of heart disease. If they really have palpitation, Dr. Simmons Squaw Vine Wine is a certain cure for it, but in the majority of such cases the trouble arises from some form of gastric difficulty. The stomach, distended with food and gases, will derange the heart in some persons, while indigestion with its many variations is responsible for very many so-called heart troubles. The digestive organs need to be stimulated by the use of Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine, when the general health will improve and the heart renew its normal action.

J. E. Evans

Athens, Ga., writes: In 1872 I had suffered for years from Bilious Headache, Dizzy Spells, with Black Spots before my eyes, Bad Taste in mouth, very little appetite. Two Packages Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine cured me, and for 10 years I never had an annoying symptom. From living on river I contracted Malaria, which it is now curing. I have used Zeilin's "Red Z" and Thedford's "Black Draught" and found such a difference between them and M. A. S. L. M. that I did not like them at all.

Spread the News. Tell it far and wide that a medicine composed of cheap material and improperly compounded is a dangerous thing to fool with; the old proprietors of the article now called "Black Draught," and J. H. Zeilin & Co., proprietors of an imitation called "Simmons Liver Medicine," both have injunctions against them, enjoining them from using the words composing our trade name, but we learn those articles have been sold as "just the same" as ours, while neither of the proprietors in their advertisements claim theirs to be the same as ours.

Thursday. Dec. 2, 1897.

Mr. A. S. Carruthers, formerly with the Birmingham Age Herald has acquired a half interest in the Montevallo News, and will next week take full charge of the editorial and business departments of the paper. Mr. Carruthers is a well-known and experience newspaper man, and under his management the paper will, I am sure, be a welcome visitor in every home.

Hon. John L. Cobb, ex-state treasurer of Alabama, died at his home in Montgomery on the night of Nov. 24th, aged 56 years. He had been prominent in business circles for years.

Topers may take warning from the fate of the score of men who died this week near Maplesville as a result of drinking wood alcohol. It would ultimately have been as bad if they had drank whiskey, for all alcoholic drinks eventually shorten life.

Charles L. McCormack, foreman of the T. C. I. & R. R Co.'s Robertstown furnaces at Bessemer, shot himself through the heart in his sleeping room at Bessemer about 10:30 o'clock Monday morning, 29th ult. It is thought the shot was accidental. The deceased was a brother of G. B. McCormack, general manager of the T. C. I. & R. R. Co. at Birmingham.

TRUE OF BOTH RACES.

At the recent meeting of colored Presbyterian ministers in this city, the Rev. L. J. Washington, while making a strong plea for the education of his race, said:

"The negro has the power of the ballot in his hand. With this power and uneducated, the negro race is a curse to the country. An ignorant man has no more business with the ballot than has a monkey with the Word of God."

This is a golden utterance and it should be kept before the people. It is not applicable to the blacks alone; it applies with equal force to the whites. It is a disgraceful farce to allow hundreds of thousands of men in this country to vote when they cannot read their ballots. It is dangerous folly to allow the vote of an illiterate negro or white man to kill the ballot of an educated and patriotic citizen.

Corrupt men and demagogues will always control the votes of the ignorant, whether they are white or black. Washington is right. The ballot in the hands of an ignorant man is a curse to the country. When intelligent negroes admit this it should cause the whites to make an effort to reform the evil.—Age-Herald.

Gov. John on returned to Montgomery Monday from Baltimore, where he has been for a week with Mrs. Johnson, whom he reports as already greatly relieved by the Johns Hopkins treatment, and that she will be entirely restored to her usual good health before a great while.

A HEAVY CORPSE.

San Francisco, Nov 29—Mrs Theresa Cardoza, a well known resident of this city, who died on Saturday, was buried yesterday in the Italian cemetery. She weighed over 600 pounds, and the undertakers had to break down the stairs of her late residence in order to lower the body into the hall. A special casket bound with iron was constructed for the remains, and as it was too large for any hearse in the city it was taken to the cemetery in a heavy express wagon. Mrs Cardoza had been married twice and leaves five children, the youngest being eighteen months old.

SOME GOOD USES OF "IF."

Chicago News.

If there is nothing in a man opportunity never troubles him.

If beauty was taxable there would be no delinquents among the fair sex.

If women are ever elected to congress there will be more than one speaker of the house.

If some men had to work in order to obtain a living they wouldn't live very long.

If your wife had it to do over again the chances are she would never marry you.

If there were any thing in a name we might plant bird seed and expect to harvest a crop of birds.

If the shoe fits wear it—unless you are a woman, then, of course, you will want a size or two smaller.

If the wife could make biscuits like her husband's mother used to make and the husband would buy his wife clothes like her father use to buy, few marriages would be failures.

Mrs. M. B. Ford, Ruddell's, Ill., suffered for eight years from dyspepsia and chronic constipation and was finally cured by using DeWitt's Little Early Risers, the famous little pills for all stomach and liver troubles. E. F. Crowe & Co.

THE NAUTILUS CLUB

By far the prettiest and most enjoyable entertainment of the season was the "Thanksgiving Service" of the Nautilus Club in the college chapel last Thursday evening.

The musical numbers were beautifully rendered by the most talented young ladies in the school: the literary features unexcelled. The exercises were opened with prayer by Rev. M. P. Reynolds, followed by a responsive reading of the 136th Psalm. "America" was patriotically sung by the club and audience, and the roll call was answered with a Thanksgiving quotation by each member.

The president, Miss Margaret McArdle, in a prettily worded address, welcomed their friends and explained the object of the club, and the following programme was quite entertaining:

Reading of governor's proclamation, Miss Morrow.

Vocal solo, Miss Lum.

Reading, Miss Bozeman.

Recitation, Miss Robinson.

An original story, Miss Coates.

Vocal selection, Miss Brown.

Our causes for gratitude, Miss Ramsey.

History of Thanksgiving, Miss Lenoir.

Thanksgiving hymn, Club.

President Reynolds was called upon for a few remarks and was enthusiastically applauded.

The club's motto is "Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul," and their name was chosen in accordance. The nautilus, you know, is a shell fish, whose home is a spiral shell of the greatest beauty and delicacy. Day after day it labors to perfect its home, year after year it rears for itself mansions more stately, leaving ever the old abode for the new. The name is appropriate, for workers they are, and the best wishes of their friends are with them.

The four Birmingham sports who drove a drag into Montevallo on Thanksgiving day got the cold shoulder for reasons which they doubtless understood and appreciated afterwards. They were not in such "high spirits" when they "dragged" themselves back.

The NEWS doesn't propose to give advice to the farmers of Shelby county. We know they know more about farming than we do. But we ask them where are they? We would like for them to get together and see if they can't do something to better their condition. We would suggest a club.

Dr. John Goodwin called at our office Tuesday and showed us some curious specimens of teeth which he extracted from some of his patients. One of the teeth was a peculiar looking object. The lower molar showed the salivary calculus deposited on it in a lump one inch long and one half inch thick. He has another tooth ate out with sanguinary tartar. These teeth are peculiar specimens, and if you meet with the doctor you would do yourself justice to see them, for he is always willing to show these curiosities, and any time you have any trouble with your teeth you will do well to have Dr. Goodwin examine them, as he charges nothing for examination.

Married, at Concord church, on Thanksgiving day, Mr. William Fancher, of Centreville, and Miss Lula Eddings, of Dry Valley. The church was handsomely decorated, and the doors and windows were closed, and the house beautifully illuminated. Immediately after the ceremony the happy young couple left for Centreville, their future home, followed by the good wishes of all present.

Felix Dotson, the barber, was arrested week before last for carrying concealed weapons and using profane language in the hearing of females. He gave bond for his appearance at court, and his case was set for last Thursday. Dotson and his witnesses went to Columbiana Thursday morning, and he was tried in the county court and came clear of the concealed weapon case, but was convicted of using profane language in the hearing of females, although the female witness against him testified that she did not hear any profane language used.

When asked for information in regard to the case, the above facts were given us by Dotson and one of his witnesses.

DORMITORY NOTES.

Did you see Mamie's new ring?

Gone crazy yourself, you loony.

Look out, girls, the infirmary is ready.

Isn't it strange how fond some people are of ambrosia?

Turkey! Gobbler! Turkey! Goose! Geese! Goose!

Mn mn mn—i i—sign, "Kitty." Ha, ha—O. K. Good-bye.

Burgess don't think it's fair for Captain to cash all the checks.

Only three weeks until Christmas, and the girls are beginning to wonder how long will be the holiday vacation. I wonder?

Didn't the girls look pretty last Thursday in their uniforms? Those Oxford caps certainly become the happy, smiling faces.

Mrs. W. E. Flemming, of Montgomery, was here Monday to see her daughter, Miss Mannie Bell, one of the pretty Dormitory girls.

The steps or stiles over the college ground fence have been replaced by pretty gates. Girls, don't prop the gates open and let the pigs in, please.

The latest beverage invented by the young ladies of the Girls' Industrial school is known as "cafe a la selle." It is coffee salted instead of sugared.

Some of the fair students at the Girls' Industrial school would like to know the name of the "mean, horrid thing" who substituted quinine for tooth powder.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Calloway, of Snowdon, enroute to Birmingham, stopped over a few hours Tuesday with their daughter, Miss Inda, who is a pupil in the institute.

The recital Saturday night by Miss Adele Barnett for the school girls at the chapel was quite a success. Miss Barnett is an artist, and Miss Bessie Hoskins, of Aldrich, sings very sweetly.

The Board of Trustees of the Girls' Industrial school will meet in our city to morrow to review the workings of the school. They are sure to be royally entertained and greatly interested

If those young men or boys who go around making night hideous with their tin horns and pans would "cheese their racket," the citizens of Montevallo would appreciate it. Boys, it's not Christmas yet.

The three literary societies of the Girls' Industrial school held a called meeting Tuesday evening to arrange for united action on a Christmas programme. Great things may be expected from them during the coming holidays.

Miss Veda King, who has lately been travelling in Guatemala, arrived here last Saturday night and enrolled herself as a pupil at the Girls' Industrial school. Her new school mates keep her busy telling tales of her travels, of which they never seem to weary.

The Thanksgiving service at the chapel last Thursday was very pretty. The sermon by Rev P L Abernathy was a masterpiece. The solos of Miss Lum and Mr Will Abernathy were very sweet, as was also the quartette, "Pilot Me," by Mrs Cothran, Miss Crumpton, and Messrs Gibson and Abernathy.

Mrs. DeYampert, after spending several days with her daughter, Miss Linda, at the Dormitory, left Monday for her home in Montgomery, much to the regret of the many friends she has made. The visits of such charming and intelligent ladies as she always make us proud and happy, and we are loth to bid them adieu.

J. A. Perkins, of Antiquity, O., was for thirty years needlessly tortured by physicians for the cure of eczema. He was quickly cured by using DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve, the famous healing salve for piles and skin diseases. F. F. Crowe & Co.

BRIERFIELD DOTS.

Hello! how is this for good times? The long looked-for wane of prosperity has come and gone, and the long faces are to be seen in the country villages.

Cotton down, down, is the cry.

Prof Gibbons took in the marriage at Concord church Thanksgiving day between Mr W E Fancher, Jr., and Miss Lula Eddings, and reports a grand time. Rev F M Wood, of Jemison, officiated.

The school took holiday in the afternoon on Thanksgiving.

B M Large went to Six Mile Friday night, and came back all smiles.

Rev P L Abernathy preached his last sermon Sunday. Subject—"I know my Redeemer liveth." Hope conference will send him back.

The literary society gave our people a nice time in the shape of an entertainment last Friday evening.

Messrs. Joe Walker and E. E. Woodard are back in school after a long absence on account of sickness. Mr. Woodard spoke of going back to Tennessee when he began to recover, but he said he came to go to school, and is doing all O. K.

Rev. Jos. R. Wells has gone to Riverside.

The school is moving along nicely.

ENDURANCE.

How much the heart may bear, and yet not break!
How much the flesh may suffer, and not die!
I question much if any pain or ache
Of soul or body brings our end more nigh.
Death chooses his own time; till that is sworn
All evils may be borne.

We shrink and shudder at the surgeon's knife.
Each nerve recoiling from the cruel steel,
Whose edge seems searching for the quivering life;
Yet to our sense the bitter pangs reveal
That still, although the trembling flesh be torn,
This also can be borne.

We see a sorrow rising in our way,
And try to flee from the approaching ill;
We seek some small escape; we weep and pray;
But when the blow falls, then our hearts are still;
Not that the pain is of its sharpness shorn,
But that it can be borne.

We wind our life about another life;
We hold it closer, dearer, than our own.
Anon it faints and fails in deathly strife.
Leaving us stunned and stricken and alone;
But, ah! we do not die with those we mourn;
This also can be borne.

Behold! we live through all things—famine, thirst,
Bereavement, pain; all grief and misery,
All woe and sorrow; life inflicts its worst
On soul and body—but we cannot die.
Though we be sick, and tired and faint, and worn—
Lo, all things can be borne!

Brought to Time.

BY MARION E. PICKERING.

Jerry Sanborn wheeled his shining new tandem out of the woodshed and carefully propped it against the piazza railing. Then he strode across the yard, shading his eyes with both sunburned hands, and peered intently at a snug farmhouse nestling against the neighboring hill.

"Tilly's got home from Sandport. That's her pink gown a-flittin' in and out of the garden. Now if I can only wheedle her into takin' a mornin' ride we'll see who's master of the situation. Two years now she's been puttin' me off in that bewitchin' way of her'n, and I'm tired of it. I hain't been spendin' my winter evenin's readin' up about Napoleon Bonaparte and General Taylor and all of them other determined fellers for nuthin'. I've been altogether too meachin'. It's high time I put my foot down and made Tilly come to reason, and I'm a-goin' to do it!"

Jerry set his jaws grimly, sprang astride the saddle, whirled rapidly down the winding road and soon presented himself, cap in hand, at the door of the Morgan homestead. Tilly herself appeared promptly, her comely face alive with dimples and her bright blue eyes dancing with mirth.

"Took a run over to show you this new machine o' mine," announced Jerry, with a sidewise wave of the hand.

"I saw you coming up the hill," responded Tilly demurely. "You looked for all the world like a big, long-legged grasshopper,"—with an irrepressible giggle.

"I only wish you darst try it a bit and see what an easy runnin' concern it is," pursued Jerry, a sudden flush mantling his broad forehead and losing itself in his curly locks. "But, of course, 'twould be risky, considerin' you ain't used to it," he added apologetically.

"Humph! There's never been a colt on the place that I couldn't bridle and ride, and 'tisn't likely I'm afraid of a newfangled contrivance like that," replied Tilly loftily.

"Well, I s'pose you might try it, but I warn you it's dangerous business," hesitated Jerry. "You have to take in sail a bit," with a critical glance at her newly starched gingham. Tilly darted upstairs and soon appeared in a trim walking skirt, with a jaunty Tam O'Shanter pinned securely to her shining brown braids.

After a few preliminary failures, she was securely seated and the tandem glided smoothly along the shady country road. Tilly sat erect, firmly grasping the handle bars with her plump fingers and thoroughly enjoyed the novel experience.

"Pshaw! This is as easy as riding old Roan to plow. Now I'm going home to finish my ironing."

"No, you're not, Tilly Morgan. You won't go home until you have given a plain answer to the question I have been askin', off and on, for two years or more," announced Jerry peremptorily, while his heart thumped heavily against his ribs and the roar of the Atlantic seemed surging in his ears. "Steady there!" as Tilly gave an indignant bounce that threatened to capsize the wheel.

"Jeremiah Sanborn, I'll never speak to you again! There's Uncle Moses and Aunt Debby and Dan out in their dooryard. I'll call for help as true as I live if you don't stop this minute," scolded Tilly.

"They can't catch up," replied Jerry coolly, gradually increasing speed.

Despite her valiant threat, Tilly sailed by the open mouthed trio with flaming cheeks and downcast eyes.

There was a long silence, while the tandem bowled merrily along. The perspiration streamed from Jerry's crimson forehead. The sun was mounting higher, the road was up grade, and Tilly was no lightweight.

"Jerry," she faltered at length coaxingly, "please take me home.

"You know the condition. Reckon we'll reach Centreville by noon at the rate we're spinning," vouchsafed Jerry uncompromisingly.

Another prolonged silence.

"Jerry!"

"Well?"

"What do you want me to say?"

"I want you to name the day when you will come and be mistress of the little home I've had ready and waitin' for you for a year and a half," said Jerry, sternly.

Tilly glanced about her uneasily. Far in the distance she could see the glittering church spires of Centreville.

"This is too ridiculous, Jerry."

"Well?"

"Will June 15 suit you?"

"Perfectly. Dismount and rest in the shade for a few minutes, and I will take you home at once."

Tilly meekly seated herself on a grassy rock beneath a hugh oak and covertly watched Jerry from beneath her long lashes. He was apparently engrossed in flecking every possible grain of dust from the shining spokes of the tandem, but his eyes shone with a triumphant light.

The long run home was performed in dignified silence.

Tilly sprung lightly to her feet. "I think you're just as m-mean as you can be, Jerry Sanborn," she sobbed as she flew into the house and slammed the door.

Safely inside, she hurried to the parlor and peeped through the blind. Jerry, with erect head and shoulders squared, was speeding down the hill, his long legs performing most extraordinary gyrations.

"My, wasn't he masterful, though! That's all I ever had against Jerry, he was too tame. If I said A, he had to say B, and so on through the whole alphabet. Now I'll get dinner out of the way and begin hemming my table linen."

And with a song on her lips Tilly whisked on a fresh apron, vigorously stirring the fire and darted down the cellar stairs after the potatoes.—Wheelman.

THE POLICE ROLL OF HONOR.

The Heroes of a Month Drowning and Runaway Horses the Principal Source.

Hon. Theodore Roosevelt writes for the October Century an article entitled "The Roll of Honor of the New York Police." Mr. Roosevelt says:

Perhaps the best way to convey an idea of why we awarded medals is to give a list of the men thus rewarded for two months. In October, 1895, we, on the 1st of the month, awarded a medal to a patrolman for peculiar gallantry in stopping a runaway horse under circumstances which made the act one of great danger to himself, and which doubtless resulted in saving the lives of those in the vehicle. The patrolman thus rewarded was also later made a roundsman, and put in charge of the bicycle squad, our attention having been first called to him by this act. On the same day we gave honorable mention, but without a certificate or medal, to three other officers; one had also stopped a runaway horse; another had rescued a man from drowning, and the third had arrested an insane man armed with a revolver, under circumstances which went to show that the officer's coolness and presence of mind saved both himself and the onlookers from death or injury at the hands of the armed maniac. On the 8th of the month we gave a medal to an officer who had rescued a boy from drowning by plunging into the water between the wharf and the steamer from which the boy fell, at the imminent risk of being crushed to death between the two, a fate from which he and the rescued boy were saved purely by his pluck and his skill as a swimmer. Honorable mention was made of two other officers—one for rescuing a boy from drowning and one for stopping a runaway horse. On the 15th yet another officer received honorable mention for saving a man from drowning; and on the 22nd a sergeant and two patrolmen were commended for the coolness and skill they displayed in stopping a prize fight and arresting both the participants and the spectators, though they were an uncommonly tough crowd, and showed immediate fight.

Unique Punishment for Prisoners.

A new and unique mode of punishing prisoners at the city jail who break the rules of the institution was announced recently at a meeting of the board of visitors of the jail. The prisoner is compelled to stand erect on a barrel in the jail yard, in sight of the other prisoners, for one hour for the violation of any rule. The time is lengthened for the second offence. The board considers it a more humane and at the same time more effective manner of punishing offenders than keeping them in their cells with ball and chain to their feet, with simply bread and water for nourishment. The plan so far has worked satisfactorily, and has been the means of improving the discipline at the place.—Baltimore American.

CIVILIZED CANNIBALS.

Some Interesting Facts About the Battaks of the Island of Sumatra.

Sumatra is one of the largest islands in the world, and has a population of 8,000,000. Respecting some of the tribes of the interior hardly anything is known, inasmuch as the island had been crossed by white men only two or three times. The immediate neighbors of the Acheenese are the Battaks, a most interesting race of cannibals, who are quite civilized in their way, having a written language of their own. They know how to make firearms, even boring their gun barrels. Also they carve gun stocks in correct style, and are acquainted with the art of making powder. They find their own sulphur and saltpetre, using pieces of bamboo for cartridge cases and bits of coral for bullets. They are excellent agriculturists, and raise cattle. In addition they are clever gold and silver smiths, making filigree work and weaving gold thread.

The Battaks only eat prisoners of war or bad criminals. Formerly the habit of cannibalism among them was universal, and human flesh used to be sold in the country in open market, some chiefs eating it daily as a matter of liking. It is considered the greatest possible insult to a foe or punishment to a person guilty of a grievous crime to eat him. Besides the question of economy is considered. At a feast it was cheaper to slaughter six slaves at 100 guilders than to kill six buffaloes at 150 guilders. When a distinguished person died two individuals customarily went through a lot of buffooneries at the graveside, after which they were killed and laid in the excavation, the coffin being placed on top of them. Cannibalism is more or less mixed up with the religion of these people, who have their wizards and witch doctors to practice incantations.

The Battaks build houses of planks and strong beams, placing them on piles for the advantage thus given in defending them. Many of their villages are on almost inaccessible pinnacles in the hills, favorite spots being little plateaus formed by the broadening of a mountain range. Commonly they are surrounded by palisades, with watch towers. Much art and industry is put into the carving and painting of the woodwork of the houses. An outbuilding serves as a sleeping place and council house, rice being stored in the upper part. No light is kept at night for fear of attracting ghosts, but in emergency candles of resin are used. Communal houses serve as sleeping places for the unmarried men, sometimes 100 of them together. Here are hung up the heads of slain enemies and other trophies.

Nearly all of the highest peaks in Sumatra are volcanoes, and most of these are active. In the immediate neighborhood of these mighty chimneys, which hurl out masses of ashes and stone, are the fertile lowlands, with a dense population. The destruction of 40,000 human lives by the eruption of Sumbawa in 1815, and the washing away of 16,000 people by "tidal waves," following the eruption of Krakato in 1883 are not solitary instances.—New York Sun.

The Largest Crane.

Absolutely the greatest mechanical giant in the world is now lifting stone on a new sea wall on the north coast of Scotland. Not even the monster cranes used for lifting the governmental great guns can compare with this Titan, as it is called. It is capable of lifting 100 tons, and it could pick up a modern locomotive with as much ease as the same locomotive draws a train of cars. It could lift the cubic contents of 100 carloads and strew them over a wide section of the landscape. Its daily work is the placing in position of fifty-ton blocks of granite, of which the new sea wall at Peterhead is being built.

The length of its arms, reaching out from the central point of support, is exactly 100 feet, and it can set a sixty-ton block in the sea 100 feet deep and 72 feet from the outer edge of the masonry wall. This long arm is balanced by a shorter weight arm that carries the engine house, with the machinery for moving the Titan forward or backward on a railroad set into the finished masonry, and to run out or in on the long arm a traveling car from which are suspended the four-sheaved blocks through which is received the cable that lifts the great pieces of stone. The Titan itself weighs 700 tons, and is built of steel. The long arm swings about on a turntable, just as a bridge swings over a river. The wall which it builds and then travels over as it slowly advances into the sea is nearly 50 feet wide.—Los Angeles (Cal.) Times.

Breaking Up and Breaking Down.

"A man may be all broken up," said Mr. Billtops, "and yet not be broken down at all. Grief breaks us up, but we get over that, while a break down may mean a collapse, with recovery doubtful or difficult. In cold climates where ice forms in winter the rivers break up in the spring, and they are all in a turmoil then, but when summer comes they flow along placidly. So it is with us. We may be all broken up and get over it, but a break down is quite another matter.—New York Sun.

DR. TALMAGE DISCOURSES UPON "GOD AMONG THE SHELLS."

Rev. William H. Lewis, of Bridgeport Conn., Discourses Upon "The Gift of Religious Consciousness" — All Men Are Possessed of Spiritual Capacity.

The New York Herald has offered a prize of $1000 for the best sermon, and three subsidiary prizes aggregating $1000 additional for the three next best sermons. Ministers of all denominations have been invited to compete for these prizes, and the sermons offered in competition will appear in the Herald's Sunday edition. Rev. William H. Lewis, D. D., whose name is appended to the initiatory sermon, is rector of St. John's, the largest and most fashionable Episcopal parish in Bridgeport, Conn., and is considered one of the ablest preachers. His subject is: "The Gift of Religious Consciousness," and the sermon in full is as follows:

TEXT: "And another came, saying, Lord, behold, here is thy pound, which I have kept laid up in a napkin, for I feared thee, because thou art an austere man. * * * And he saith up to him, Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked servant."—St. Luke xix., 20–22.

The lord of the parable, about to go away into a "far country," had given to each of his servants a certain amount to make use of while he was away. For these three the amount given is specified, but to all his servants he gave something. "To each man," the parable says, "according to his several ability." Only three are specially designated, because they serve as sufficient illustrations of the highest, the medium and the lowest gift. Each receiver seems to have known that the amount handed him was not a gift outright, but a trust, and that his lord would eventually come back and make an accounting. Each, therefore, treated his trust according to the opinion he held of his lord.

The substance of the parable is evidently this—that in every man living there is implanted a certain spiritual capacity or ability; that men have this capacity in degree, so that one has clear and distinct ideas of God and his duty, another has less, and another almost none at all. But the trust of a spiritual instinct or consciousness, and of a conscience which recognizes this consciousness, belongs to all. None is so low in the scale of humanity that the thought of God does not somehow enter into his life; and whoever has this gift has also the intelligence to know that he has it, and to ask himself, at least once in his life, if only once, what he shall do with it.

With this consciousness of God and this conscience there comes a sense of responsibility; and with that there comes a certainty of judgment. We indorse the reasoning of the parable when we excuse the man of small capacity by saying that he does not know any better; of another, that he ought to have known better, and of a third, that he did know better; and the popular judgment condemns each man with a severity according to his gift of capacity, his conscience, his educated or uneducated sense of the value of the gift which determines his use of it, and the very worst sin of all in the popular judgment is to have made no use of the gift. It was the servant who knew his gift and his lord, even though he knew him wrongly, and then made no use of his gift, who excited his lord's anger.

Make much of the thought, for it has much in it. If we grant the universal consciousness of God and the universal conscience, then every one is bound to conduct himself always under pressure of the thought that one day he will be called upon to answer to God for his use of these capacities. If a man only recognizes God by taking His name in vain, that is a recognition. And in actual fact there are many people who excuse themselves in their neglect of religion on the very grounds on which this man of the parable rested his defence—viz., harsh and distorted ideas of God and religion. They do not see that logically a man with harsh ideas of God ought to be the stricter in his life for that, if he shapes his conduct by his theory and if he expects God to judge him by his own confession. If my whole idea of religion is that it is such a straight and narrow way that I cannot walk in it without help from above, and, knowing that I must walk in it if I would be saved, I have yet never sought that help, shall I care to plead this neglect as an excuse when I come to stand before a righteous judge? Whether the napkin in which we tie up our religious consciousness be clean and white with the starch and bluing and ironing of a self-satisfied morality or filthy with the stains of every self-indulgence will make no difference with the fact that we tied it up and buried it. When capital combines for selfish purposes we know what to say of it; when an anarchist wants a division of capital for his own benefit we can deal with him. But when a man puts his thousands in an old stocking and hides it under his chimney hearth we simply call him a miser—a miserable one. He may plead that he had no faith in banks, but we condemn him nevertheless. Again the common judgment illustrates the parable.

In some shops you may find a device to keep check upon business transactions. A little disc springs up in full sight of buyer, seller and employer, records the price and drops out of sight again. But at the close of the day, when the accounting is made, the registry is there and the balance must agree with that. A man's conscience is like this—every thought of God and duty that comes into mind is on record there—a good thought, or a mistaken thought, or a bad thought, it held up its signal for a moment in the presence of all who cared to look and made its unalterable record of what was done. When the time comes the judges—God and conscience, and even the popular judgment—will be at the count, as they now are at the transaction. He is a daring thief who with these three looking on can try to take money out of the box and throw up a blank. Every thought of God and duty is a talent, a pound, bringing with it a demand for interest upon the original capital of God's first gift of spiritual consciousness and conscience. When the day of reckoning comes we shall be condemned by every opportunity we have had to know and to do better. No belief can possibly warrant neglect. Whatever we think of God we are bound to do something.

THE SHELLS IN THE BIBLE.

Dr. Talmage Draws an Interesting Lesson From Them.

Dr. T. De Witt Talmage delivered in Washington a sermon on "God Everywhere." The subject of the sermon was "Conchology of the Bible, or God Among the Shells," as found in the text, Exodus xxx., 34: "And the Lord said unto Moses, Take unto thee sweet spices, stacte and onycha."

You may not have noticed the shells of the Bible, he said, although in this early part of the second book God calls you to consider and employ them, as He called Moses to consider and employ them. The onycha of my text is a shell found on the banks of the Red Sea, and Moses and his army must have crushed many of them under foot as they crossed the bisected waters, onycha on the beach and onycha in the unfolded bed of the deep.

I shall speak of this shell as a beautiful and practical revelation of God, and as true as the first chapter of Genesis and the last chapter of Revelations or everything between. Not only is this shell, the onycha, found in the Red Sea, but in the waters of India. It not only delectates the eye with its convolution of beauty, white and lustrous, and seriated, but blesses the nostrils with a pungent aroma. I spoke to you last Sabbath of God in the great; now I speak of God in the small, God in the infinite, and God in the infinitesimal.

It is a secret that you may keep for me, that in all the realms of the natural world there is nothing for me so fascinating, so completely absorbing, so full of divine suggestiveness as a shell. What? More entertaining than a bird, which can sing, when a shell cannot sing? Well, there you have made a great mistake. Pick up the onycha from the banks of the Red Sea, or pick up a bivalve from the beach of the Atlantic Ocean, and listen, and you hear a whole choir of marine voices—bass, alto, soprano—in an unknown tongue, but seeming to chant, as I put them to my ear, "The sea is His and He made it."

As the shell is only the house and the wardrobe of insignificant animals of the deep, why all the wonder and beauty of construction? God's care for them is the only reason. And if God provide so munificently for them, will He not see that you have wardrobe and shelter? Wardrobe and shelter for a periwinkle; shall there not be wardrobe and shelter for a man? Would God give a coat of mail for the defense of a Nautilus and leave you no defense against the storm? Does He build a stone house for a creature that lasts a season and leave without home a soul that takes hold on centuries and æons?

But while you get this pointed lesson of providential care from the shelled creatures of the deep, notice in their construction that God helps them to help themselves. This house of stone in which they live is not dropped on them and is not built around them. The material for it exudes from their own bodies and is adorned with a colored fluid from the pores of their own neck. It is a most interesting thing to see these crustacean animals fashion their own homes out of carbonate of lime and membrane. And all of this is a mighty lesson to those who are waiting for others to build their fortunes, when they ought to go to work and, like the mollusks, build their own fortunes out of their own brain, out of their own sweat, out of their own industries. Not a mollusk on all the beaches of all the seas would have a house of shell if it had not itself built one. Do not wait for others to shelter you or prosper you. All the crustaceous creatures of the earth, from every flake of their covering and from every ridge of their tiny castles on Atlantic and Pacific and Mediterranean coasts, say: "Help yourself, while God helps you to help yourself." Have great expectations from only two persons—God and yourself. Let the onycha of my text become your preceptor.

But the more I examine the shells, the more I am impressed that God is a God of emotion. Many scoff at emotion, and seem to think that God is a God of cold geometry, and iron laws, and eternal apathy, and enthroned stoicism. No, no! The shells with overpowering emphasis deny it. While law and order reign in the universe, you have but to see the lavishness of color on the crustacea, all shades of crimson from the faintest blush to blood of battle-field, all shades of blue, all shades of green, all shades of all colors from deepest black to whitest light, just called out on the shells with no more order than a mother premeditates or calculates how many kisses and hugs she shall give her babe waking up in the morning sunlight. Yes. My God is an emotional God. And He says: "We must have colors and let the sun paint all of them on the scroll of that shell, and we must have music, and here is a carol for the robin, and a psalm for man, and a doxology for the seraphim, and a resurrection trumpet for the archangel. Aye, He showed Himself a God of sublime emotion when He flung Himself on this world in the personality of Christ to save it, without regard to the tears it would take, or the blood it would exhaust, or the agonies it would crush out. When I see the Louvres and the Luxembourgs and the Vaticans of divine painting strewn along the eight thousand miles of coast, and I hear, in a forest, on a summer morning, musical academies and Handel societies of full orchestras, I say God is a God of emotion, and if He observes mathematics, it is mathematics set to music, and His figures are written not in white chalk on blackboards, but written by a finger of sunlight on walls of jasmine and trumpet-creeper.

In my study of the conchology of the Bible, this onycha of the text also impresses me with the fact that religion is perfume. What else could God have meant when He said to Moses: "Take unto thee sweet spices, stacte and onycha. Moses took that shell of the onycha, put it over the fire, and as it crumbled into ashes, it exhaled an odor that hung in every curtain and filled the ancient tabernacle, and its sweet smoke escaped from the sacred precincts and saturated the outside air.

Perfume! That is what religion is. But, instead of that, some make it a mal-odor. They serve God in a rough and acerb way. They box their child's ears because he does not properly keep Sunday, instead of making Sunday so attractive the child could not help but keep it. They make him learn by heart a difficult chapter in the Book of Exodus, with all the hard names because he has been naughty. How many disagreeable good people there are. No one doubts their piety, and they will reach heaven, but they will have to get fixed up before they go there, or they will make trouble by calling out to us, "Keep off that grass!" "What do you mean by plucking that flower?" "Show your tickets!" Oh, how many Christian people need to obey my text, and take into their worship and their behavior and their consociations and presbyteries and general assemblies and conferences more onycha.

But what thrills me with suggestiveness is the material out of which all pearls are made. They are fashioned from the wound of the shellfish. The exudation from that wound is fixed and hardened and enlarged into a pearl. The ruptured vessels of the water animal fashioned the gem that now adorns finger or earring, or sword hilt or king's crown. So, out of the wounds of earth will come the pearls of heaven. Out of the wound of conviction the pearl of pardon. Out of the wound of bereavement the pearl of solace. Out of the wound of loss the pearl of gain. Out of the deep wound of the grave pearl of resurrection joy. Out of the wounds of a Saviour's death, the rich, the radiant, the everlasting pearl of heavenly gladness. "And the twelve gates were twelve pearls." Take the consolation all ye who have been hurt—whether hurt in body or hurt in mind or hurt in soul. Get your troubles sanctified. If you suffer with Christ on earth you will reign with Him in glory.

MANUAL LABOR AND PROFESSIONS.

The tendency of young men in this country to embark in the learned professions without the proper mental equipment and with no special aptitude for anything except avoiding manual labor is constantly on the increase. It is greatly to be deplored, for to such failure is almost the inevitable result. That means ruined lives, or an existence so soured, disgruntled and embittered as to be without pleasure or profit to their possessors and a tax upon the community where their lines are cast. And yet these same men, whose lives are eminent failures, might have achieved splendid success in some walk in life suited to their tastes and talents. Indeed it requires but a superficial degree of observation to demonstrate the fact that there are in almost any community fourth rate lawyers who would have been excellent auctioneers, dentists who would have succeeded as plumbers, physicians who would have adorned a meat stall, and even ministers of the Gospel who could have produced a far better horseshoe than a sermon.

Had they entered a calling congenial alike to taste and talent they might have been an honor to themselves and a blessing to the community, for a man is always that irrespective of his occupation, whenever he is a master of it. But the trouble with these young men is that they do not understand the dignity of manual labor. They do not realize that honors and fortune may be more readily realized outside of the so-called learned professions than in them, and that it is just as honorable to swing a hammer or to hold a plow as it is to make a speech in court or amputate a limb. Let them understand that it is not so much what a man does for a livelihood as it is how well he does it, and that manual labor is as honorable as any other, and then will the diploma factories cease to pour out on a long suffering world their annual horde of incapables only to be wrecked upon the shores of their own limitations. — Philadelphia Times.

The SIXTH MISSING WORD CONTEST

The Atlanta Constitution Offers

One Tenth Of the Subscriptions

Received from those entering the Contest to name properly the missing word in the following sentence:

"Once given the passion for _____, that one of the precious metals will be most in demand which is cheapest." ∴ ∴ ∴

And, in Addition

TO THE 10 PER CENT, WE WILL GIVE

$100 Cash Extra

For the first Six Correct Guesses, as follows: $50 for the First Correct Guess and $10 Each for the Next Five, in their order, provided the same are received in our office on or before December 1st.

THE PERIOD COVERED

By This Contest shows about 16,000 expirations for The Weekly Constitution, and, of course, we want them all to renew and to enter the Contest.

THIS MEANS $1,600

For the Missing Word Fund, and every additional subscriber entering the contest will swell the amount the more.

This period also compares with our First Missing Word Contest last year, in which Mr. M. L. Brittain secured the prize—$1,033.50. As that was our First Contest, there were more than 5,000 subscribers received during the time, who did not enter for prize. It will not be so this time, for the plan is widely advertised and we have paid out within the past twelve months NEARLY $5,000 CASH upon the Five Missing Word Contests. The series has been of extraordinary interest, and the idea seems to grow in the public's favor.

The book containing the sentence is a standard publication and has been sealed up and placed with Mr. W. A. Hemphill, President and Business Manager of The Constitution, who will hold it safely until January 1, 1898.

The sentence speaks for itself and submits a very plain proposition for you to solve.

The Contest Began November 1, 1897.
The Contest Ends January 1, 1898.

This contest lasts two months and the amount to be divided will probably be in the neighborhood of $2,000. There may be one correct answer, there may be a dozen, there may be more, but remember it costs nothing to supply a word, and you may get it correctly. Whether you do or not, you get

The Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers for One Year.

Keep That in View and Send Your Guess With Your Dollar for a Year's Subscription

Ten per cent of the Guessers' Subscriptions goes to the Fund to be divided. In other words, if this Subscription Fund amounts to $20,000 for the two months, the Fund to go to the successful guesser would be $2,000. Following are the conditions of contest:

WE PROPOSE TO PUT 10 PER CENT of the amount we receive for subscriptions, wherein the party subscribing enters the Missing Word Contest, into a fund for distribution among those who name correctly the missing word. For instance: If only one contestant gets the word right, he or she, as the case may be, will have all the money. If more than one strike it, the sum will be equally divided, each correct answer receiving its proportionate share of the fund.

THE CONDITION PRECEDENT FOR SENDING A GUESS at the Missing Word is that each and every guess must be accompanied by a year's subscription to THE WEEKLY CONSTITUTION; the guess must be sent in the identical envelope that brings the money that pays for the subscription; forgetting it, or leaving it out by accident or otherwise, or not knowing of the guess at the time you subscribed, or any other reason will not entitle one to send a guess afterwards. The guess must come with the subscription or not at all. Should a party send more than one guess, he or she will be entitled to a share of the fund for each correct guess sent; there will be no capital prize—every one will get a first prize. Persons may guess as many times as they send subscriptions.

THE CONTEST BEGAN NOV. 1ST—We began then to keep accurate account of the subscriptions received with guesses and on December 1st we will publish how much is to the credit of the subscribers guessing, and during December we will publish each week how the fund has grown.

THE CONTEST CLOSES JAN. 1ST—At which time we will pay out to the successful party or parties the full prize amount that has accrued in the contest.

In Making Your Answer You need not write the sentence out in full, just state simply the Missing Word for January 1st is "....."

The above is the plan of The Constitution Contest, which all subscribers to that paper and ours, subscribing under the clubbing offer announced elsewhere, may enter. Address orders to

BRYAN'S LATEST.

Hon. W. J. Bryan tells the following good story:

A political speaker said from the stump that he could tell a man's politics from his looks. He pointed out a man in the crowd and said, "You are a republican." That man said, "Yes, how could you tell?" "From your looks," said the speaker. To a third man he said, "You are a pepulist." The man acknowledged the fact and wanted to know how he could tell. The speaker said as before, "From your looks." "And that man down further is a gold standard democrat" "No, I'm not," promptly responded the fellow, "I've been sick. That's what makes me look this way,"

HE IS STILL FIGURING.

A farmer near town last week bought a steer, butchered it, cut it up and peddled the meat in Montevallo. He sold round steak for 4 cts a pound and thought he was becoming rich. On his return home with a lot of stripped bones, he found that he had less money than he paid for the live steer, and now spends his time scratching his head and wondering what became of his expected profits.

The School's Eventful Day.

Gov. Johnston and Other Distinguished Visitors Commend Capt. Reynolds' Work.

Judge Banks Lectures Ably.

Oysters and Ice Cream—Speeches and Singing—Examination and Satisfaction Mark the Trustees' Visit.

Friday, Dec 3rd, was an eventful day at the Girls' Industrial school, for it was visited by Gov. Johnston, Judge J. J. Banks, State Superintendent John O. Turner, and the following trustees: Rev. George B. Eager, Judge H. Austill, Judge A. H. Alston, Hon. W. W. Wadsworth, Hon F. S. Moody, Col. W R. Darteh, Hon. Virgil Bouldin and Hon. John McQueen.

There being so much routine business to dispatch, they had only sufficient time to make a cursory inspection of the buildings and classes, but saw enough to elicit from them expressions highly eulogistic of the great work so far accomplished by Capt H. C. Reynold and his corps of able assistants Nearly all their time was consumed in the office of President Reynolds, where they passed on accounts and formulated plans for the future.

All morning the young ladies of the cooking class had busied themselves in the preparation of a choice collation for their visitors, which was served at 1 p. m. in the dining hall of the dormitory building. Two tables, covered with snowy linen and tastefully laid, were in readiness when the governor, Judge J. J. Banks, the trustees, President Reynolds and the writer took their seats. Judge Banks had an hour before declared that the sight of the girls bearing covered dishes from the cooking class to the dining room had given him a wonderful appetite.

A blessing was asked by Rev. George B. Eager, of Montgomery, after which the deft handed, sweet-faced waitresses served raw oysters, fried oysters that were delicious, mashed potatoes, custard, ice cream, cake and coffee. All enjoyed the repast, but Gov. Johnston most of all, for he flavored his dinner by kissing every young lady to whom he was introduced, which made the mouths of the others water and engendered in them an ambition for the gubernatorial office.

The trustees passed the afternoon in executive session, and it was not until 3:30 p. m. that they found time to address the pupils, who were gathered in expectant readiness in the chapel.

State Superintendent of Public Instruction John O. Turner, by reason of a sore throat, made but a short speech, but it was to the point. After highly praising the work of President Reynolds, he commented upon the beautiful and intelligent countenances of the pupils, and assured them that his heart was in the work of educating the girls of Alabama. "Out of 600,000 children of school age in the State of Alabama, 240,000 can neither read nor write," he said, and added that it was his life-work to endeavor to secure educational advantages for all, and he

He engaged in mercantile pursuits at Columbus, Ga., until late in the '70's, when he removed to Pensacola, Fla., where he has since resided. He became prominently identified with the building of railroads in Florida and at the time of his death was president of the Pensacola and Atlanta railroad. He represented his county in the state senate for several years, and was one of the most prominent men in the state. He was mentioned as the most probable nominee of the democrats for the governorship of the state, and in the contest for the United States senatorship a year ago was the leading candidate. Colonel Chipley was a man of wealth, and was noted for his philanthropy.

The cost of a plant suitable for the making of naval armor at the rate of about 6,000 tons per annum, which is fully equal to the capacity of both of the existing private plants, is set down as about three and three-quarter million dollars. No recommendation is made as to the location of the plant, but the board has accumulated much information as to the merits of various eligible locations, which may be had by congress if called for by it.

THE CRAZE FOR GOLD.

Rush to California and South Africa to be Eclipsed Next Year.

Consul Smith, at Victoria, B. C., in a report to the state department, discusses the subject of the Klondike fields. The advices received at Victoria indicate that the rush in 1849 to California, and later to South Africa, will be eclipsed by the gold seekers headed for the Yukon in the early months of 1898.

Agents from England have been at Victoria, making arrangements for 3,000 or 4,000 gold seekers. Merchants there have secured great supplies of outfit goods, and the transportation companies have made arrangements sufficient to make daily lines between that port and St. Michaels, Dyea, Skaguay and Fort Wrangle.

PLEASED WITH THE SOUTH.

Eastern Capitalists Investigating Its Resources for Cotton Manufacture.

The distinguished party of New York bankers, merchants and manufacturers who have been making a tour of the Carolinas, Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee, have returned home.

One of the party, S. M. Milliken, of New York, said, speaking of the result of their investigations: "We have found the south a very inviting field for investment in the matter of cotton affairs. You have the cotton at your very doors, and your labor is not so well employed as in the east. Besides this, your labor is the home article, and therefore more contented, more tractable, and we have found, too, that your labor is willing to work for reasonable pay."

Mr. Milliken thought the result of their visit would be more money expended in cotton mills in the states visited.

CUBANS TAKE GUISA VILLAGE.

TRADE IS MUCH STRONGER.

Exports of Corn and Wheat Almost at Record-Breaking Point.

WOOLEN INDOSTRY PUTS ITSELF FORWARD

Wages Have Been Advanced For Nearly Thirty Thousand Workers in Woolen and Iron--Failures Heavy For the Week Just Ended.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: The monthly report of failures shows defaulted liabilities of $11,610,195 in November, against $12,700,856 last year. Because of three large failures for $3,250,000, not due to present conditions, the aggregate for November was only $1,100,000 less than last year and except for these would have been smaller than in August, September or October. The decrease in nearly all branches of business shows that payments have been remarkably good and defaults unusually small. Other evidences of the state of business are convincing except in speculative lines. Wages have been voluntarily advanced for nearly 30,000 workers in woolen and iron. Stocks also are stronger, having risen $1.87 for railways and $1.57 for trusts. The true value of the American railway stock is steadily rising with earnings which for November thus far are 20.9 per cent larger than last year and 3.7 per cent in the same weeks of 1892.

It is the season for waiting in most industries, but at least one other furnace has gone into blast and the lowest price of Bessemer at Pittsburg, after purchases of 30,000 tons, is $10.15 per ton, with $9.25 for Grey Forge.

The voluntary advance of 20 per cent in wages of worsted workers at Providence, restoring the rates of 1893, is evidence of the prosperity of that manufacture. After much hesitancy has been exhibited which may be justified, the woolen industry puts itself to the front, virtually declaring its ability to face any foreign competition. The purchases of Australian wool at Boston have again been large, 2,365,000 pounds out of 6,170,700 pounds of all-wool at the three chief markets, against 8,810,800 pounds for the same week last year. But other markets are extremely quiet, and Boston is doing the selling at prices not named.

The low price of cotton still hinders much activity in cotton goods. Still lower prices than ever have been known resulted in print cloths, and also in some grades of prints, and the market for cotton goods is markedly lower. The price of cotton is dropping in the face of an enormous foreign demand, just when an advance might be expected.

In the long run the outward flow of grain will affect prices, though the receipts show a much greater yield than had been expected. So the receipts of cotton from plantations exceed those from date of the great crop of 10,000,000 bales in 1894 tend to check speculation.

Failures for the week have been 356 for the United States, against 379 last year, and 28 in Canada, against 55 last year.

GOV. O'FERRALL ON LYNCHING.

He Suggests Remedies in His Message to the Virginia Assembly.

In his message to the general assembly which convened last week Governor O'Ferrall discusses the lynching question and proposes legislation to correct the evil. He urges that a heavy pecuniary penalty be imposed on each county and city in which a lynching occurs; that wherever the military may be called out to protect a prisoner in a county or city such county or city be charged with the expenses thereof and that officers who allow prisoners to be taken from their custody without first having exhausted all possible means to protect their prisoners, be summarily suspended until the question of their dismissal shall be determined by a jury.

How Atlanta Grows.

Permits have been granted in Atlanta this year for the investment of about $1,786,000 in buildings. The permits which will be issued this month will probably run the total up to about $1,800,000.

Twenty Congressional Contests.

The clerk of the house of representatives has received notices of twenty contests to be made in the next house. The report will be presented to the house on Monday next and affects Alabama as follows :

Second district—T. H. Clark, national democrat, versus J. S. Stallings, democrat.

Third district—G. L. Comer, national democrat, versus Henry D. Clayton, democrat.

Fourth district—W. F. Aldrich, populist, versus Thomas Plowman, democrat.

INTERNAL REVENUE FIGURES.

Over Two Thousand Illicit Distilleries Destroyed During the Year.

In his annual report to the secretary of the treasury Mr. Forman, commissioner of internal revenue, estimates the receipts from all sources for the current fiscal year will aggregate at least $155,000,000, an increase over 1897 of about $8,300,000.

A comparative statement of the receipts during the last fiscal year is given in part as follows:

Spirits, $82,008,542; license over 1896, $1,338,472.

Tobacco, $30,710,297, decrease, $1,231.

Fermented liquors, $32,472,162; decrease, $1,312,072.

The cost of the collection of the revenue during the last fiscal year was $3,848,469.

During the year 2,241 illicit stills were destroyed and thirty-two were removed, 1,892 persons were arrested, one killed and three wounded. Of the stills seized and destroyed 228 were located in Alabama, 841 in Georgia, 463 in North Carolina, 149 in South Carolina and 182 in the Sixth Virginia district. During the last year ten officers were killed and sixteen wounded by moonshiners.

WOMEN GOING KLONDYKE.

Mrs. Hannis Gould, of Macon, Ga., Will Lead Females to the Gold Fields.

Mrs. Hannis S. Gould, a prominent Georgia woman, will undertake next spring to lead a colony of one hundred women in the Klondyke regions of Alaska.

It seems that Mrs. Gould has not determined, however, to take the women to the Klondyke with a view to making a fortune by digging gold. She has set out for the sole purpose of planting a woman colony there, and it is her plan to find employment for the women as cooks, seamstresses, trained nurses and housekeepers. Of course if any of them want to take up the pick and shovel and go to digging gold, it is not at all likely that Mrs. Gould will prevent them from this work.

DESTITUTION IN PINAR DEL RIO.

Thirty-four Thousand Concentradoes Now on the Charity of Spain.

Senor Canalejes, the special commissioner of the Spanish government, has returned to Havana from his visit to the province of Pinar del Rio. He says there are 34,000 "concentrado" peasants gathered in that country and in the neighborhood of towns for protection from insurgents or to prevent them from joining the enemy, and that they are all in want. Of this number 15,000 are orphans and the majority are children of tender years. The municipal authorities, the commissioner says, are without resources, and therefore unable to do anything to relieve the destitution.

Germany's Demands Upon Hayti.

The exact nature of Germany's demands on Hayti became known for the first time Thursday. The demands are as follows:

1. An indemnity of $20,000 (American) for Emil Lueders.

2. The promise that Mr. Lueders may return to Hayti, and there sojourn without danger of any kind.

3. A letter to my government in which you will express apology for the proceedings towards the German government in the whole transaction.

4. That the president of Hayti shall graciously receive the German charge d'ffaires at Port au Prince.

It was also announced that if indemnity was not given a warship would be sent or diplomatic relations be broken.

Medical College Burned.

Friday the Tennessee Medical college, located near Knoxville, was discovered on fire, and on account of poor protection it burned slowly to the ground. The college was one of the best institutions in the South and was well attended. The building cost $25,000, and was comparatively new. The owners, who are physicians, claim that the contents were worth $125,000. The insurance carried was only $10,000.

Justice Field is Out.

Justice Field's retirement from the supreme court, of which he gave official notice to the president last April, took place Thursday. If Justice Field had continued in office until next Tuesday he would have seen forty-four years of continuous service.

Atlanta's New Paper.

An application has been filed in Atlanta for the incorporation of the Phoenix Publishing Company. Among the incorporators are G. S. Appleton, of the Appleton Publishing Company, of New York, and D. R. Morgan, a son of J. Pierpont Morgan, of the same city. The capital stock is placed at $200,000, with the privilege of increasing it to $1,000,000. They ask the privilege of publishing an afternoon, Sunday morning and weekly newspaper in Atlanta. They ask the right, if deemed advisable, to publish a daily morning paper, and to establish agencies and branches in other places in Georgia and in other States.

Ala., Liberty, Ky., Dillton, Tenn., Corsicana, Tex., and Big Stone Gap, Va.

CONTINUALLY "ON TAP."

Central America to the Front With Another Revolution.

The latest mail from Guatemala conveys the information that President Barrios is threatened with another uprising. Advices have been received at the capital of the Central American Republic to the effect that conspirators are at work in the northern part of the country, close to the Mexican border, and are being aided by political enemies of Barrios in the eastern departments of the government. Behind the movement is said to be Gen. Castillo, who participated in the recent uprising.

Novel and Fearful.

Miss Bertie Wilson, of South Manchester, Ky., 16 years of age, met with a novel and fearful accident the past week. She was sitting in front of a coal stove, making a drawing, her head bent low, when, quick as a lightning flash, her celluloid comb caught fire. The blaze at once enveloped her head. She ran screaming into the dining room. Her father happened to be in and, keeping his presence of mind, seized a bucket of water and poured it over the girl's head. The flames were stopped, but not before all her hair was burned off and a large section of the scalp injured. Her clothing also ignited and her arms, back and shouldsrs were badly burned.

Awful Conditions in Cuba.

A consular officer in Cuba writes the state department, that no less than 150,000 of the peasantry of the interior, who were concentrated in the coast towns, have died of hunger and exposure, mostly old men, women and children. He says the remnant left alive, are helpless and hopeless. Their homes were long ago reduced to heaps of cinders and ashes. Their fields are wastes. If they are returned to whence they were driven by Weyler, they must starve, for they have neither seed, nor animals, nor strength of their own, with which to begin anew.

Corner in Wheat.

It has been reported at the chamber of commerce at Minneapolis, Minn., that the Peavey Elevator Companies have made a combine with the Pillsbury Companies, and secured control of not only the wheat in Minneapolis but all the wheat stored in the elevators throughout the Northwest.

Pillsbury recently predicted that wheat would go to $1.50, and this is consistent with the rumor of the corner.

Three Points Settled.

The Georgia legislature has practically settled three of the most important phases of the convict problem. They are: The State shall lease out all able-bodied convicts. It shall have supervision over all misdemeanor convicts, and shall establish a farm for all women, juvenile and infirm convicts.

Germany's Threats.

The semi-official Post says: "Should Hayti refuse the German demands for an indemnity on account of the alleged illegal arrest and imprisonment of Herr Lueders, a German subject, sharp measures will follow. We shall first bombard the coast forts, and if they are persistent we shall bombard Port au Prince and the government buildings."

Endorsed the Chicago Platform.

The North Carolina Democratic State committee, which held a session at Raleigh the past week, reaffirmed the the Chicago and State platforms of last year.

BILL ARP'S WEEKLY LETTER.

PRESENCE OF BURGLARS IN TOWN DISTRESS THE PHILOSOPHER.

TRAMPS ARE ADEPTS AT THIEVING.

The Discussion of Co-Education Elicits Some Very Timely and Well-Intended Remarks.

"Hark, hark, the dogs do bark;
The burglars have come to town."

For 15 years this has been an orderly, peaceable and honest town. Ever since the saloons were abolished there has been no disturbance of the public tranquility. During all that time our doors have not been locked at night nor has our chicken roost been robbed by the fowl invader. The presence of our faithful dog may have been our protection, for there have been some few chickens stolen in these parts. Our neighbor, Charley Patterson, suffered some in that way until he bought the old gallows on which a man was hung a few years ago and built a chicken house of the timber. Since then he can hardly get a darky to put chickens in it by day, much less to take them out by night. But our negroes in and around Cartersville are a clever, industrious people and as honest as mankind are generally. The domestic servants will take some liberties with little things that they think we won't miss, but they have many good traits that are a set-off, and so we compromise on general principles.

But now the burglars have come to town and alarmed the whole community. I believe they come from up north where every bad thing comes from, even to bad weather. The other day a tramp came to our house and asked for something to eat. He was fairly good looking and well dressed. My wife got him a lunch and asked him where his home was, and where he was going. He smiled and said he had no home and was raised in an orphan asylum up north and was going to Atlanta in search of work.

"How do you travel," said she, "if you have no money?"

"Well, I ride on the freights until they put me off," he said, "and then I wait for another one and ride some I am just taking a little trip now more. to see the country."

There were two of these fellows in town and they took the rounds asking for something to eat and always got it. My opinion is that they are professional thieves and their purpose in calling at so many houses is to prospect the premises. The night after they were at our house burglars entered four houses and stole money. They took $90 from under a sleeping man's pillow and smaller sums from the pockets of other men. A few nights after they entered three houses and took a fine gold watch from under a banker's pillow and the next night a watch and some money at another place. They take no clothing nor anything to eat. They are white folks, I tell you, and are experts in their business.

Well, of course, the whole community is aroused and especially the women. My wife is not a timid woman. She is more afraid of snakes than of men, but she, too, got alarmed and made me get the hammer and the screwdriver and some bolts and nails and fix up every door and window. She held the lamp and watched me all round from room to room, and I mashed a great blood blister on my finger and it hurts yet. When all was done to her satisfaction and we got ready to retire, she suddenly told me not to lock the back hall door, for Uncle Sam had to come in there in the morning to make a fire. Considerate woman! She knew that I didn't like to get up out of a warm bed to unlock the door. Reckon she thinks the burglars wouldn't be so impolite as to come in at the back door. Bet they don't get any watch from under my pillow, for I haven't got any. Forty years ago they got mine just that way in old Dr. Thompson's hotel in Atlanta, and I have never carried one since. They got my pocketbook, too, and a little money and some valuable papers. They were from up north and were very clever men, considering, for in about a week they sent me all my papers back through the mail and the letter was postmarked Philadelphia. They will give a man back everything they can't use. Bill Fort told me that they were a kind-hearted set of thieves and he had known them to lean over and kiss a sleeping man after they had robbed him.

No, it is white folks who are stealing these valuable things. Negroes haven't got above chickens and turkeys yet. I heard the other day of an old darky who prayed every night during Christmas for the Lord to send a turkey to him, but the turkey didn't come, and so he changed his prayer and asked the Lord to send him to a turkey and his prayer was answered that very night. A negro don't hanker after gold watches. He wants something to eat.

But now I want to know what is all this racket about that they call co-education. I thought it was just another fad and would soon pass away, but it seems to get bigger and bigger the more they talk about it. One would think there were no female colleges in the land and that the boys were getting all the education when the truth is there are more educational facilities for girls in this state than for boys. I don't know what it all means. Do the girls want to mix with the boys and improve them and be inspired by them? Then why should not the boys claim a similar privilege and go to the female colleges and to the girls' industrial school at Milledgeville? If we are going to bunch, let us bunch the whole concern and include the agricultural attachments and let the girls do some plowing if they want to. But I reckon its just the new woman who is contending for the abstract right to go to the university. Of course they won't go, for their fathers won't let them as long as the female colleges are open at Macon and Athens and LaGrange and Decatur and Rome and other places. There is plenty of education for them there without the co-. The best mothers, I know, never got higher than a high school and the best co-education is for the girls to get married young and go to raising children and chickens. If they do that diligently, they will learn enough in a lifetime and be as happy as their college-bred daughters. I've never been entirely satisfied that such obstruse sciences as chemistry, astronomy, trigonometry, fluxions, calculus, Greek, rhetoric and logic were of any use to the average boy, much less to the girls. I went to college and my wife didn't, and I have to take a back seat now sometimes. I married her when she was only sixteen. but if she had spent four years in college she would have been so smart she wouldn't have had me, and I reckon I wouldn't have had her, for no prudent young man will marry a girl who is smarter than he is—it is dangerous. Pick out your girl and take her young and co-educate her yourself.—Bill Arp in Atlanta Constitution.

Cuban President and Cabinet Elected.

Consul-General Lee has informed the state department that the insurgents in Cuba elected and installed, at Yaza, Porto Principe, on October 20, the following officers: President, Bartolo Masso; Vice-President, Domingo Meudez Capote; Secretary of War, Jose B. Aleman; Secretary of the Treasury, Earnisto Font Sterling; Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Andres Moreno de la Torre; Secretary of Interior, Manuel R. Silva; General in Chief, Maximo Gomez; Lieutenant General, Calixto Garcia.

Debarred From the Mails.

The postoffice department is taking a firm stand against the so-called "missing letter" and "missing word" contests which are being inducted by a number of publishers to increase the subscriptions of their papers. All newspapers and periodicals containing advertisements of this character are forbidden transmission in the mails. This law, it is now announced at the postoffice department, will be applied to all schemes which are violations of the law, or in which advertisements of them are published.

Fire Adds to Distress.

News has been received of a terrible fire which occurred at Jaruco, a town of about 10,000 inhabitants, in Havana province. About 110 houses were destroyed, with nearly all their contents. No accurate estimate of the amount of damage can be made. Hundreds of families have been rendered homeless and the situation at Jaruco is very distressing. The fire originated in an accident.

Dauntless Lands a Big Cargo.

The filibustering steamer Dauntless arrived in port at Jacksonville, Fla., Friday, after having successfully landed another expedition in Cuba. The Dauntless is reported to have landed a large cargo, in which was a twelve-pound Hotchkiss gun. A large quantity of quinine was also landed for the insurgents.

Government Will Make a Bid.

The government has fully decided to qualify as a bidder at the sale of the Kansas Pacific railroad on December 16th next, in case of the failure of the reorganization committee to guarantee the government what is regarded as a fair and just figure for its interests. Whether the president and the attorney general, however, will exact the full amount of the government's claim of approximately $13,000,000 is not known. It is learned that some days ago the reorganization committee submitted a proposition which was positively declined.

Governor Griggs to be Attorney General.

It is stated that the position of attorney general, to succeed Mr. McKenna, who will be nominated to the supreme bench to succeed Justice Field, has been offered to Governor Griggs, of New Jersey, and that he has consented to accept.

Daniel Will Succeed Himself.

The Virginia democratic legislative caucus nominated Hon. John W. Daniel to succeed himself in the United States senate.

A WEEK'S NEWS IN ALABAMA

Commissioner Culver Calls on the Farmers to Organize.

ENTIRE FAMILY MURDERED IN HALE COUNTY

Successful Still Raids in Cleburne—The Coal Output for the Year—Federal Grand Jury Makes a Sensational Charge—Other News Notes.

Commissioner of Agriculture Culver has issued a letter to the farmers and land of Alabama calling upon them to meet with him to organize an agricultural society for the purpose of advancing the agricultural interests of the State.

He calls attention to the low price of cotton, which has existed several years, and says at the present rate the farmers will soon be in bankruptcy. He recommends planting a diversity of crops and reducing the acreage of cotton. An agricultural society, composed of practical farmers, could be of great advantage to the farming industry, as each member's experience would be helpful to the others.

Mr. Culver requests that five or six representative men from each county meet him at the State capitol Wednesday, January 12, for the purpose of organizing the society and perfecting plans for the organization of counties and precincts. The probate judges will be asked to assist in the selection of these delegates. He asks that all citizens, whether farmers or not, assist in the proposed plan.

ENTIRE FAMILY MURDERED.

Details of a Foul Crime Committed Near Greensboro.

John Singly, his wife and their 12-year-old son were murdered Wednesday night eight miles north of Greensboro by a negro named Bill Scott.

After the deed Scott entered their home, and breaking open a drawer, secured $700 in money and made his escape.

Mrs. Singly and her son died instantly, but Mr. Singly lived until 2 p. m. Thursday and told the story of the crime and the name of the negro who committed the deed.

Scott induced Singly, upon some pretense, to go a short distance up the road with him, and then knocked Singly down with a stick and cut his throat. He then went to the house, brained the mother and son, cut their throats, procured $700 from a drawer and made his escape.

Citizens have offered a reward of $500 for Scott's capture, and the governor will be asked to offer a like amount.

STILLS RAIDED IN CLEBURNE.

Three Stills Destroyed, But the Operators Escaped Officers.

Internal Revenue Collector J. F. Creen has just finished a tour of Cleburne county and succeeded in destroying three flourishing illicit stills. They were situated as follows:

Five miles southeast of Jenkins: One forty-gallon still, copper worm, flake stands and 400 gallons of beer were destroyed.

Three miles southeast of Grantly: One forty-gallon wood still, four fermenters, 500 gallons of beer and a lot of tools were destroyed.

Three miles northeast of Grantley: One forty-five gallon copper still, wood cap, flake stand, eight fermenters and 700 gallops of beer were destroyed.

The combined capacity of the three plants was about forty gallons of whisky per day. No arrests were made. The operators apparently got wind of the fact that the officers were in the vicinity and kept out of sight.

Alabama Coal Output.

The output of coal in Alabama during the year 1897 will exceed that of 1896 by a couple of hundred thousand tons. This is the surmise of State Mine Inspector James D. Hillhouse.

Speaking of the report, Mr. Hillhouse stated: "I believe the output this year will reach the 6,000,000 tons mark. It will exceed last year's output by at least 200,000 tons. The output last year was something over 5,700 000. The six million mark would have been increased by several hundred thousand tons if the lay-off on the part of the miners during the summer had not occurred. Since that time the output at the various mines in the state has been enormous. The first part of the year shows a large output also."

Official Scandal Refuted by the Court.

In the United States court at Birmingham Thursday nine cases against W. H. Hunter, three cases against Sandy White, six cases against C. C. Reid and one case against W. C. Reid for presenting false claims to the government were nol prossed and dismissed from the docket. These cases grew out of an investigation instituted some years ago resulting from a report of a United States grand jury.

KEEN TO KEEP HIS OFFICE.

The Postmaster at Mobile Refuses to Turn Office Over to His Successor.

The newly appointed postmaster, P. D. Barker, republican, has in vain endeavored to obtain possession of the postoffice at Mobile from Postmaster Rapier, democrat. The latter's attorneys have raised an entirely new point of law, which Inspector Tate says has never been raised in his experience. Postmaster Rapier's commission expires in December, 1898. Mr. Barker was appointed by President McKinley in October last.

Mr. Rapier has had no notice of his removal, although Inspector Tate served upon him telegraphic instructions from Postmaster General Gary saying Rapier should acknowledge Barker's commission as notice of removal, no other notice being customary with the department.

Mr. Rapier's attorneys hold that the language of the statute relating to postmasters of the first class is special; that it provides that the president shall appoint and may remove such officers by and with the advice of the senate. Consequently, as Mr. Rapier's commission had not expired, and Mr. Barker's appointment has not been confirmed by the senate, nor Mr. Rapier's removal confirmed by the same body, Rapier is still postmaster.

AS A COTTON MARKET

Birmingham Will Have a Place Among the Great Centers.

Secretary Hester, of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, has written the Commercial club of Birmingham that if statistics on cotton receipts are regularly furnished him that Birmingham will be listed on the exchange among the interior towns. These statistics will be furnished by the local cotton buyers, who have also been in correspondence with Secretary Hester, and henceforth Birmingham will be known as a great cotton market, as well as the leading iron, coal and industrial market of the south. The cotton receipts this year will probably reach 150,000 bales, which will give Birmingham about fifth place among the interior towns of the south. If the increase continues at the same ratio, in the next few years as it has in the past. Birmingham will rank even higher.

Announced His Candidacy.

Hon. L. W. Hunter, of Lowndes county, late receiver of public moneys under the Cleveland administration, has announced his candidacy for the democratic nomination for state commissioner of agriculture.

BRIEFLY MENTIONED.

An ice plant is being erected at Daphne.

A foundry and machine shop will be erected at LaFayette.

The Florence Buggy Company has asked for a receiver.

Lauderdale's cotton crop this year will exceed that of list by 25 per cent.

A branch station of the United States weather bureau has been located in Ashville, and they get daily reports on the weather.

An issue of $10,000 for 6 per cent twenty-year city of Huntsville bonds has been sold to Rudolph Kley, Bolt & Co., of Cincinnati, for $10,926. The city will devote this sum to street improvements.

The Bell Telephone Company has had estimates made on a line from Anniston to Birmingham and will go to work at once to make this extension of its line. It will also extend its line from Anniston to Atlanta.

The gin of James Wilder, of Blue Pond, was totally destroyed by fire, together with four bales of seed cotton, three bales already ginned, and 2,600 bushels of cotton seed. It is supposed to have been the work of incendiaries.

The result of the late election in the Second regiment, Alabama National Guard, has at last been announced. Adjutant-General Ligon issued an order announcing the unanimous election of Tom O. Smith, of Birmingham, as major of the regiment.

The state convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which was postponed on account of the epidemic, has served notice that the meeting will be held at New Decatur in the latter part of this month. The session will last one week.

Refugee and Military Camp Suggested.

Governor Johnston has made a suggestion which will likely be received in the State with a good deal of favor. It is briefly this: That the State establish, at some central point, a permanent combination State encampment ground and refugee camp. It is estimated that this can be easily done at a cost of $10,000.

The governor has not defined in his own mind all of the details of the scheme, but his idea appears to be to locate some entirely desirable place, build three commodious and permanent cooking houses, storage rooms, etc., and to provide and keep stored away on the premises tents sufficient to accommodate some 30,000 people.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR DECEMBER 12.

Lesson Text: "Paul's Last Words." II Tim. iv., 1-8, 16, 18—Golden Text: II Tim. vi., 7—Commentary on the Lesson by the Rev. Dr. D. M. Stearns.

1. "I charge thee therefore God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead, and by His appearing and His kingdom." These are some of the last words of Paul by the Spirit to Timothy, his dearly beloved son in the faith (chapter i., 2), of whom he said that he had no man so dear unto him (Phil. ii., 20, margin). He had been urging him to be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus; to endure hardness as a good soldier and please Him who had chosen him; to study to show himself approved unto God.

2. "Preach the word. Be instant in season, out of season. Reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering and doctrine." In chapter iii., 16, 17, he had said that all Scripture is given by inspiration of God and is profitable that the man of God may be thoroughly furnished unto all good works, and now he extorts him to use that word faithfully, the word which he had known from childhood (iii., 15). Paul teaches to hold fast the faithful word (Titus i., 9); to hold forth the word of life (Phil. ii., 16), and to rightly divide the word of truth (II Tim. ii., 15).

3. "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears." How long we have already been in those times I cannot say, but that we are in them no one can question. Lovers of self, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof (chapter iii., 1-4), are things too plainly seen. Some men who have the rule in church affairs do not hesitate to ask for pastors who will give them the thought of the age rather than the word of God, and there are pastors who are more ready to please the people than to preach the preaching which God bids them. False prophets as in the olden time.

4. "And they shall turn away their ears from the truth and shall be turned unto fables." Then because they receive not the love of the truth that they might be saved, God shall send them strong delusion that they should believe a lie that they all might be judged who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness (II Thess. ii., 10-12). It is surely a woeful sight to see large congregations gather to listen to those who discard portions of the word of God and call other portions myths.

5. "But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry." There is no pattern for a minister or evangelist but the Lord Jesus Himself. He was filled with the Spirit, led by the Spirit, spoke the words which the Father told Him and did always those things which pleased the Father (John xii., 49; viii., 29). When He suffered, He said, "Even so, Father," and He finished the work which the Father gave Him to do (Math. xi., 26; John xvii., 4).

6. "For I am now ready to be offered and the time of my departure is at hand." Long before this He had said, "I am ready—not to be bound only, but also to die for the name of the Lord Jesus" (Acts xxi., 13). It was His constant desire that Christ should be magnified in His body whether by life or death (Phil. i., 20). He knew that to die would be gain and to be with Christ would be very far better (Phil. i., 21, 23). But now He seemed sure that He was soon going home. He speaks of it as His departure. The body would die, the tabernacle be taken down, but he, Paul, the person in the body, would depart to be with Christ, and would be absent from the body and present with the Lord.

"I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith." It is the fight of faith, and the life of faith, and the walk of faith (I Tim. vi., 12; Gal. ii., 20; Col. ii., 6). It is believing God all the way through and all that He has said. As Paul put it elsewhere, "Believing all things that are written in the law and in the prophets" (Acts xxiv., 14). It is not a faith that can ever be made to suit the times. As Dr. Weston says, "If Christ taught as many teach He would never have been crucified for it." We must earnestly contend for the faith that was once for all delivered to the saints, and remember that Paul said, "If any one, even an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel, let him be accursed" (Jude iii.; Gal. i., 8, 9).

8. "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love His appearing." Crowns, as I understand it, are rewards for service to be given to those who earn them, that they may have somewhat to cast at His feet in that day (Rev. iv., 10). They are not given to us when we die, but only at the appearing of our Lord at the resurrection of the just (Luke xiv., 14; I Pet. v., 4; Rev. xxii., 12). I have often referred to the other four to be given to the faithful for four distinct kinds of service, but this one is for those who in all their service carry with them a certain attitude of soul—viz, loving His appearing. When He comes to the air for His people, I firmly believe that every saint will meet Him, but many may be ashamed and many receive no crowns (I John ii., 28; I Cor. iii., 14, 15).

16. "At my first answer no man stood with me, but all forsook me." To stand alone for the right is intimate fellowship with our Lord, who said to the eleven, "Ye shall be scattered and shall leave Me alone, and yet I am not alone, for the Father is with Me" (John xvi., 32). David was awfully alone when his faithful 600 turned against him and talked of stoning him, he being at the time in like painful circumstances with themselves, but it is written that David encouraged himself in the Lord his God (I Sam. xxx., 6).

17. "Notwithstanding the Lord stood with Me and strengthened me, that by me the preaching might be fully known, and that all the gentiles might hear, and I was delivered ont of the mouth of the lion." He hath said I will never leave thee nor forsake thee, so that we may boldly say the Lord is my helper (Heb. xiii., 5, 6). Happy are those who can say from the heart, "Behold, God is my salvation; I will trust, and not be afraid, for the Lord Jehovah is my strength and my song." (Isa. xii., 2).

18. "And the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work and will preserve me unto His heavenly kingdom, to whom, be glory for ever and ever. Amen." Yet in the face of this and Phil. i., 6, and II Tim. i., 12, and similar strong assurances, there are those who insist that Paul feared lest after all he might be lost. Perish the thought that any true child of God can ever perish!—Lesson Helper.

THE WEEKLY NEWS.

MONTEVALLO, ALA.

NEWTON & CARRUTHERS, Proprietors.
A. S. CARRUTHERS, Editor.

Thursday. Dec. 9, 1897.

SALUTATORY.

It is customary for the new occupant of an editorial chair, the chair in this case being an empty dry-goods box, to take the public into his confidence as to his views and purposes; so I conform to custom.

I have been in the past, am now and always shall be an ardent bimetallist. I believe that instead of retiring the $356,000,000. of greenbacks now in circulation, more should be issued as the population and volume of trade increase. I believe in a tariff on the necessaries of the people sufficiently high to maintain the wages of the American workingmen who manufacture them, but no more; while on the foreign made luxuries of the idle rich a prohibitory tariff should be levied. On minor questions, as they may arise, I shall express my honest opinion.

My immediate and chief purpose is the upbuilding of the town of Montevallo and the Girls' Polytechnic Institute, which adorns it. Governor Johnston said to me the other day that within five years from now that school would accommodate and have one thousand pupils. In that event, Montevallo will have a population of five thousand at the expiration of five years.

I wish every one resident in the country tributary to Montevallo to know that his visits and his news will always be alike welcome at this office.

I desire no subscription from anyone who "simply subscribes to keep up the paper," nor any advertisement from anyone who does not believe his expenditure will bring him adequate returns.

I ask appreciation of all in this paper that is worthy, and outspoken condemnation of whatever may be unworthy.

A. S. CARRUTHERS.

If you cannot speak well of another, say nothing evil.

Petty jealousies are out of place in a community striving to grow.

General Miles asks for more soldiers. He had better acquire some horse sense first.

Whiskey is not needed in Montevallo. The fresh mountain air is sufficiently stimulating.

The public did not name Cleveland's son correctly, but they know what to call his father.

Why not complete the incorporation of Montevallo? Incorporation is invariably a sign of progress.

The gold "Democrats" are wailing because the silver Democrats will not let the financial question sleep. No wonder!

Tennyson's dream of a female educational paradise will be realized when 1,000 fair maidens answer the call of the college bell.

Those who are selling their cotton for 5 cents take some comfort in the thought that every cotton producing State voted for Bryan and 10 cent cotton.

In several places in this issue, periods usurp the place of commas. The paper is short on commas, but long on periods. Next week they will be at a parity.

If some men spent as much time attending to their own affairs as they devote to those of others, they would find that their increased business would permit them no time for gossiping.

It is gratifying to know that farmers in the Birmingham district realize that better prices are paid in Montevallo than in the Magic City for cotton, and are marketing their product here.

The Montgomery Advertiser has gone into ecstacies over what it styles "The vindication of Grover Cleveland's wisdom."

Pray when did Grover Cleveland acquire any wisdom?

Well, it is time for the howling law and order people of the North to come down and attend to the negroes. Three of them lynched one of their own race the other day.—Columbiana Chronicle.

Mr. J. L. Peters is the candidate of Shelby's democracy for circuit judge, and they want him to win and will exert themselves to the accomplishment of so desirable a result.—Shelby Sentinel.

A young lady found a purse in church and notified the pastor that she had it, so if anyone reported the loss it could be returned. The next Sunday the clergyman made the following announcement from the pulpit: "Someone lost a purse last Sunday evening, and if the owner wants his property he can go to Helen Hunt for it."—Greensboro Watchman.

If the arrogant gold-bugs persist in their plan to place a life-size golden statute of Mark Hanna's puppet, McKinley, in the American court at the Paris exposition, the advocates of silver should raise a popular subscription and place beside it a silver statute of W. J. Bryan. The latter would have less intrinsic value, but would be the more handsome of the two.

President McKinley's message to Congress is just what might have been expected from a man who was elected to office by a combination of trusts and monopolies, and over whose head hangs like the sword of Damocles an uncancelled debt of $118,000. He evades the Cuban question, hedges on civil service reform, advises retirement of the greenbacks, praises the late useless monetary commission and only shows any American spirit in his recommendation that Hawaii be annexed. McKinley was an honest man, although mistaken on the tariff question, before his financial necessities made him the debtor and puppet of the soulless Mark Hanna. He must be tolerated until March, 1901, but is more to be pitied than execrated.

GIRLS' POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE.

(Concluded from Page 1.)

The School's Eventful Day.

would go before the next legislature and ask an appropriation of $50,000 for the Girls' Industrial school.

"Every night when I kneel to my Creator, I pray for the girls of the Industrial school," he concluded, and the girls clapped until their little hands must have been sore.

Gov. Johnston followed with a happy speech. He said that the school was his pet, and wished the people of Alabama to make it their pet and foster it.

Among other things he said, "I thought at dinner that all the pretty girls had been picked out to wait on the tables, but as I look into your faces I realize that there are no ugly girls here. Many of you are daughters of my personal friends, but now I regard each and every one of you as my friend. It is a pleasure for me to be here, and I hope and know that the institution will grow until it is indeed 'The Pride of Alabama.'

"The education of Alabama's girls is even more important to the State of Alabama than that of her boys, for men are like jay-birds—here today and gone to morrow, but women are here to stay and mould the minds of the next generation. Those here should not have as their sole purpose the obtaining of an education, but should leave the institution upon graduation with the idea of a great mission in life.

"Your president, Mr. Reynolds, has unselfishly and devotedly done a great and noble work with the limited means placed at his command, but more buildings and a gymnasium (applause) are needed, and if it lies in my power they shall be built.

"Be as active in your bodies as in your minds, and as lovely in your minds as in your bodies."

He concluded by saying with a humorous twinkle of his eye, "Some of the young ladies have testified their affection for me, and if the whole 338 wish to give me a similar token of affection, I am prepared to receive it."

His conclusion was greeted with much laughter and applause, after which the pupils marched out to the strains of music.

In conversation with the writer, Gov. Johnston afterwards stated that he was pleasingly surprised at the work accomplished by President Reynolds. He left shortly afterwards for Birmingham.

THE EVENING'S AMUSEMENT.

The school chapel was filled at 7.30 p. m. by an expectant throng. After all had joined in singing the national anthem, Miss Carrie Lum, who has a clear and sympathetic voice, sang "Snowflakes" very sweetly.

President Reynolds introduced Judge J. J. Banks as the lecturer of the evening, and stated that to the recently organized Nautilus club was due all credit for Judge Banks' visit.

Judge Banks lectured on Mexico, describing a trip which he had taken into that republic in 1895. His language was chaste and beautiful, verging upon poetry in some of his descriptions of scenery, and his account of a bull fight was so vivid that his auditors listened with bated breath. His semi-humorous, yet truthful story of a Mexican courtship witnessed by him was most interesting to the young ladies, and when he stated that the Mexican lover was not permitted a private interview with his inamorata until after marriage, some of the girls cried, "Oh, oh!" As a master of oratory Judge Banks proved himself the peer of any man in Alabama, and the long continued clapping with which his fair audience rewarded him must have pleased him exceedingly.

Miss Mamie Brown, who is one of the loveliest of Montevallo's lovely girls, looked in her pure white dress like a pearl as she sweetly sang, "Whisper and I shall hear."

The day of excitement and pleasure was concluded by a short speech from President Reynolds, in which he expressed his gratification at the enconiums bestowed upon the school by the trustees, and felicitated the pupils upon their excellent showing.

The young ladies, after shaking the hand of Judge Banks until he must have imagined himself Bryan, went to their several boarding-houses to enjoy pleasant dreams, leaving President Reynolds a proud and happy man.

SCHOOL NOTES.

Miss Kate Campbell leads all the other ladies of Montevallo in the Age-Herald's voting contest.

The young ladies desiring heavier soles on their foot gear in this cold weather should call on Pynor, the shoemaker, Montevallo News building.

A card bearing the admonitory legend, "I am late," stood on the pulpit of Methodist church last Sunday. Misses Kate Campbell and Wilma Saunders appreciated its significance.

Misses Bernice and Annie Dickson returned on Dec. 4th to their home in Montgomery. Their departure is much regretted by the many friends which they made while here, especially by their associates in the Polytechnic club.

The pupils in the dressmaking department earned and collected for work done in the month of November the sum of $130.65, more than all paid for tuition in that department. The amounts received by the several girls ranged from 50 cents to $20. Considerable work is now being received from various parts of the State, including wedding dresses and other outfits.

The young ladies of the Girls' Polytechnic Institute are invited to subscribe for a copy of the Montevallo News, either for themselves or their friends at home. Subscriptions will be received by H. C. & W. B. Reynolds, F. F. Crowe & Co., or at the Montevallo News office.

The girls have a new ditty which they sing at 5 p. m. The refrain is something like this:

"Are you coming home to eat?
Are you coming home to eat?
Are you coming home to supper,
There are biscuits, hash and meat;
Are you coming home to eat?
Are you coming home to eat?
To your ever welcome supper,
Are you coming home to eat?"

One would think that the postoffice had already been removed to the store of F. F. Crowe & Co., judging from the swarms of girls who visit it every evening. However, the sweet creatures are only attracted by the dainty Christmas presents which he exhibits, and which comprise the finest assortment of glassware, china ware and other nick-nacks ever brought to Montevallo. The girls may club together and buy one for the editor, if they please.

Girls, when you want to catch a train at Calera, go to Kroell's livery stable for a conveyance. Office at store. Special rates to school girls.

EMINENT PULPIT DIVINES.

Dr. Lewis, of Meriden, Conn., Discourses on "Burden Bearing."

A LESSON ON ORNITHOLOGY OF THE BIBLE

Drawn by Dr. Talmage—His Sermon an Extract from Christ's Sermon on the Mount—God Among the Fowls of the Air.

TEXT: "Bear ye one another's burdens."—Gal. vi., 2.

Every one is a burden bearer, having his load of want, suffering and responsibility.

Some appear so fortunate that we doubt whether they share in the sorrows of mankind. They have wealth, friends, health, wisdom and virtue. What can their burden be? They have at least a responsibility commensurate with their blessings; and, perhaps, if we knew more of their lives, seemingly so blessed, we would find that they also have a burden, all the heavier because borne in secret.

Men often think that if they could change their circumstances, even slightly, they would escape trouble, but this is an illusion. The sick recover health, the poor become rich, the lowly gain the coveted positions of honor, and their common testimony is that having gained these advantages their burdens are no less heavier. In fact, the normal condition of man is that of a burden bearer. We "are born into trouble as the sparks fly upward."

How can this fact of burden bearing be reconciled with our belief in a heavenly Father? Some contend that all suffering is due to sin; that if man had not sinned he would have had no burden. Jesus, however, repudiates this thought. For when the Jews asked Him, Who did sin, this man or his parents, that he was born blind? He answered, Neither. Much suffering comes indeed as the punishment of sin, but some suffering has its source in the exercise of our holiest affections, as that of a mother bearing the burden of an unfortunate or wayward child.

In seeking further for a solution to this problem we find that the really great men of the world bear its heaviest burdens, so that, it is said, "a man's greatness may be measured by his sufferings." Burden bearing enables a man to do two things—to test his strength and by using to increase it. And what splendid characters have thus been developed! Widows in poverty giving their all! Martyrs of the sick room showing marvelous patience! Heroes of the faith made such by their struggles with unbelief! Did not God intend such results? Then that is the reason why He sometimes lays on men such heavy burdens.

This leads up to the explanation of burden bearing suggested in the text—"Bear ye one another's burdens." The picture of the world's sorrow is very dark, but it has in it a bit of blue sky, through which faith looks up and beholds the eternal goodness.

Burdens are put upon men that they may help one another bear them. Without suffering how could we realize our dependence upon God or feel the need of human sympathy and love? No opportunity would be given to help a fellow man in trouble or to sigh in pity over misery beyond our relief.

Grant, then, that the chief reason why men have burdens is that they may help one another, how great is the duty laid upon us. In the fulfillment of that duty two ways are suggested. Those that are able may take the burden from weaker shoulders and bear it themselves, St. Paul says, "We that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak." Or strength may be given to those upon whom the burden is laid to bear it themselves. The latter is the more effective aid. A word of instruction, an act of kindness or an expression of sympathy is sometimes all that is needed.

A teacher once refused to take the advice of the committee and expel a bad boy from school. The boy, knowing of his teacher's confidence, began to do better, and continued with such perseverance that he afterward became eminent. He was thrice elected Governor of New York and once to the United States Senate. He was also under one President Secretary of War and under another Secretary of State. A word of encouragement proved to be the turning point in the life of William L. Marcy. How many may have failed because of the lack of such a word?

There is an Eastern legend that runs thus: In a forest near a great city a golden ball was let down out of heaven every day at noontime, and whoever should touch this ball, it was said, would acquire certain wonderful virtues. So many tried to reach it. But it was always lifted just above them. One day there was in the crowd waiting for the descent of the ball an old man and a little boy. And the old man said to the others: "If to-day none of us can reach the ball, let us lift up this child so that he may touch it and receive the blessing." Acting on this counsel, when the tallest of them could not reach the ball, they stood together and lifted up the boy till, with his tiny hand, he touched the golden ball and, lo! not the boy only, but every person forming the living pyramid felt the thrill and received the magic gift.

So it is, my friends, in life. When men stand together, shoulder to shoulder, bearing one another's burdens, then God bestows upon them His best blessings.

W. S. PERKINS.

Pastor St. Paul's Church, Universalist, Meriden, Conn.

GOD AMONG THE BIRDS.

Rev. Dr. Talmage on Ornithology of the Bible.

TEXT: "Behold the fowls of the air."—Matthew vi., 26.

My text is an extract from the Sermon on the Mount, and perhaps it was at a moment when a flock of birds flew past that Christ waved His hand toward them and said: "Behold the fowls of the air." That is, study their habits. Examine their colors. Notice their speed. See the hand of God in their construction. They are almost human, for they have their loves and hates, affinities and antipathies, understand joy and grief, have conjugal and maternal instincts, wage wars, and entertain jealousies, have a language of their own and powers of association.

Thank God for birds, and skies full of them. It is useless to expect to understand the Bible unless we study natural history. They were at the creation placed all around on the rocks and in the trees and on the ground to serenade Adam's arrival. They took their places on Friday, as the first man was made on Saturday. Whatever else he had or did not have, he should have music. The first sound that struck the human ear was a bird's voice.

As a bird first heralded the human race into the world, now a bird will help the human race back to the world that had shipped a sea that had overwhelmed everything. Noah stands on Sunday morning at the window of the ark, in his hand a cooing dove, so gentle, so innocent, so affectionate, and he said: "Now, my little dove, fly away over these waters, explore, and come back and tell us whether it is safe to land. It was a bird that told them when to take possession of the resuscitated planet. So the human race were saved by a bird's wing; for, attempting to land too soon, they would have perished.

Isaiah compares the desolations of banished Israel to an owl and bittern and cormorant among a city's ruins. Would the prophet illustrate the fate of fraud, he points to a failure at incubation, and says: "As the partridge sitteth on eggs and hatcheth them not, so he that getteth riches and not by right shall leave them in the midst of his days and at his end shall be a fool." The quickest way to amass a fortune is by iniquity, but the trouble is about keeping it. Every hour of every day some such partridge is driven off the nest. Panics are only a flutter of partridges. It is too tedious work to become rich in the old-fashioned way, and if a man can by the falsehood make as much as by ten years of hard labor, why not tell it, and if one counterfeit check will bring the dollars as easily as a genuine issue, why not make it?

But yonder in this Bible sky flies a bird that is speckled. The prophet describing the church, cries out: "Mine heritage is unto me as a speckled bird, the birds round about are against her." So it was then; so it is now. Holiness picked at. Consecration picked at. Benevolence picked at. Usefulness picked at. A speckled bird is a peculiar bird, and that arouses the antipathy of all the beaks of the forest. The church of God is a peculiar institution, and that is enough to evoke attack of the world, for it is a speckled bird to be picked at. The inconsistencies of Christians are a banquet on which multitudes get fat. They ascribe everything you do to wrong motives. Put a dollar in the poor box, and they will say that he dropped it there only that he might hear it ring. Invite them to Christ, and they will call you a fanatic. Let there be contention among Christians, and they will say: "Hurrah! the church is in decadence." Christ intended that His church should always remain a speckled bird.

Disaster, failure in business, disappointment, bereavement, is God's way of shaking us out of our comfortable nest in order that we may learn to fly. You who are complaining that you have no faith or courage or Christian zeal have had it too easy. You never will learn to fly in that comfortable nest. Like an eagle, Christ has carried us on His back. At times we have been shaken off, and when we were about to fall He came under us again and brought us out of the gloomy valley to the sunny mountain. Never an eagle brooded with such love and care over her young as God's wings have been over us.

Across what oceans of trouble we have gone in safety upon the Almighty wings. From what mountains of sin we have been carried and at times have been borne up far above the gunshot of the world and the arrow of the devil. When our time on earth is closed, on these great wings of God we shall speed with infinite quickness from earth's mountains to heaven's hills, and as from the eagle's circuit under the sun, men on the ground seem small and insignificant as lizards on a rock, so all earthly things shall dwindle into a speck and the raging seas of death so far beneath will seem smooth and glassy as a Swiss lake. Oh, the goodness of God in showing the birds how to build their nest! What carpenters, what masons, what weavers, what spinners the birds are! Out of what small resources they make what an exquisite home, curved, pillared, wreathed. Out of mosses, out of sticks, out of lichens, out of horse hair, out of spiders' web, out of threads swept from the door by the housewife, out of the wool of the sheep in the pasture field. Upholstered by leaves actually sewed together by its own sharp bill. Cushioned with feathers from its own breast. Mortared together with the gum of trees and the saliva of its own tiny bill. Such symmetry, such geometry of structure.

Surely these nests were built by some plan. They did not just happen so. Who draughted the plan for the bird's nest? God. And do you not think that if He plans such a house for a chaffinch, for an oriole, for a bobolink, for a sparrow, He will see to it that you always have a home? "Ye are of more value than many sparrows." Whatever else surrounds you, you can have what the Bible calls "the feathers of the Almighty." Just think of a nest like that, the warmth of it, the softness of it, the safety of it—"the feathers of the Almighty." No flamingo outflashing the tropical sunset ever had such brilliancy of pinion; no robin redbreast ever had plumage dashed with such crimson and purple and orange and gold—"the feathers of the Almighty." Do you not feel the touch of them now on forehead and cheek and spirit, and was there ever such tenderness of brooding—"the feathers of the Almighty."

So also in this ornithology of the Bible God keeps impressing us with the anatomy of a bird's wing. Over fifty times does the old Book allude to the wing—"wings of a dove," "wings of the morning," "wings of the wind," "sun of righteousness, with healing in his wings," "wings of the Almighty," "all fowl of every wing." What does it all mean? It suggests uplifting. It tells you of flight upward. It means to remind you that you, yourself, have wings. David cried out, "Oh, that I had wings like a dove that I might fly away and be at rest." Thank God that you have better wings than any dove of longest and swiftest flight. Caged now in bars of flesh are those wings, but the day comes when they will be liberated. Get ready for ascension. Take the words of that old hymn, and to the tune unto which that hymn is carried sing:

Rise my soul and stretch thy wing,
Thy better portion trace.

Up out of these lowlands into the heavens of higher experience and wider prospect. But how shall we rise? Only as God's Holy Spirit gives us strength. But that is coming now. Not as a condor from a Chimborazo peak, swooping upon the affrighted valley, but as a dove like that which put its soft brown wings over the wet locks of Christ at the baptism in the Jordan. Dove of gentleness! Dove of peace!

Come, Holy Spirit, heavenly dove,
With all thy quickening powers,
Come shed abroad a Saviour's love
And that shall kindle ours.

Cremation.

Among the ancient Greeks both cremation of the dead and burial in the earth were practiced, though it is uncertain which was the more common. The ashes of the dead were sacredly preserved in urns. Among the Jews burial prevailed, as it has since among Christian nations.

FOR THE YOUNG FOLKS.

FINGERS START TO SCHOOL.

Here, little finger, you start this rhyme,
And don't be so poky and slow;
You, gold finger, begin on time,
And don't let one lesson go;
You middle finger, be good and kind,
Tho' you are so stout and tall;
You, forefinger, your teacher mind,
And don't think of playing ball;
You, little thumb, don't bob about,
But listen and be still;
And you, little hand, whate'er you do,
Do it with a will.

BATHING AN ELEPHANT.

F. Fitz Roy Dixon tells of "A Baby Elephant" that was captured by friends of his in Ceylon, in an article that he contributes to St. Nicholas. Mr. Dixon says:

Her daily bath afforded her great enjoyment. A broad, shallow stream, with a sandy bottom, flowed through the estate, and in a large pool Rengan used to scrub her down every day. Of course he went into the water also, and she would lie down and roll, sometimes with all four legs in the air, but always keeping the tip of her trunk out of the water so that she might have air to breathe. When she had done enough of this sort of nonsense, according to Rengan's idea, he used to make her come out and lie down on a sand-bar, and then he would scrub her down—a process of which she seemed highly to approve—after which she would be once more washed down, and then she would trot off beside her keeper, both clean and glistening, and remain a short while in her stable, whilst he went off for his dinner. He used to bring her back a handful of boiled rice, usually rolled up in a banana leaf, which she received with great satisfaction.

ISLAND THAT IS A BIG MAGNET.

One of the most dangerous places in all the seas is near the coast of Denmark, where there is a little island that goes by the name Bornholm. The seas do not run unusually high about it, nor are currents strong, but when the mariner approaches it the needle of his compass begins to act in the strangest and most unaccountable manner. Instead of pointing north, it switches around and points to Bornholm, so that if it happens to be dark and stormy the pilot may guide his ship straight on the rocks, thinking that he is making due north. This strange condition exists for the reason that Bornholm consists almost entirely of magnetite or magnetic iron, and it draws the compass needle like a powerful horseshoe magnet.

This influence is felt even at a distance of miles, and on the island being sighted by mariners on the Baltic sea they at once discontinue steering their course by the needle, and turn, instead, to the well-known lighthouses to direct their craft. Between Bornholm and the main land there is also a bank of rock under water which is very dangerous to navigation, and because of its being constantly submerged vessels have been frequently wrecked at that point. The peculiar fact in this case is that the magnetic influence of this ore bank is so powerful that a magnetic needle suspended freely in a boat over the bank will point down, and, if not disturbed, will remain in a perfectly perpendicular line.

HOW A BAD ELEPHANT IS WHIPPED.

Did you ever see an elephant whipped? I don't suppose you would ever forget it if you did. They frequently do it in India, because elephants are very obstreperous at times.

Recently an elephant, Abdul, was convicted by court-martial for killing his keeper, and sentenced to fifty lashes and two years' imprisonment.

Two elephants led Abdul to an open space, and in the presence of the whole battery the punishment began. The culprit trumpeted in fear, and made an unearthly noise.

There were fourteen elephants on one side, and the officers and men of the battery on the other three. In the centre of this hollow square stood Lalla (No. 1), the flogger, and the prisoner. The latter was chained by the four legs to as many heavy iron pegs, and could not move.

Fastened to Lalla's trunk was an immense cable chain. When all was ready the major gave the word, and down came the chain with a resounding whack. Abdul roared for all he was worth. Fifty times was the operation repeated, and then Abdul was taken to a compound, where he was to remain a prisoner for two years.

HOW THE SIX WENT HAYING.

Papa and mamma had gone to Florida, and that is how the six happened to be at grandpa's. There were Amy and Hugh; then came Paul and Polly, the twins: next sweet little Daisy, the darling of grandma's heart; and last, but by no means the least, Baby Joe, who was five, and greatly objected to being called baby.

Baby Joe had a round, freckled face, fiery red hair, and the faculty of always being in mischief when he wasn't eating. He hadn't been on the farm a day before he had fallen into the pig-pen, cut his fingers on a scythe, narrowly escaped being run over by the milk-wagon, tumbled off the haymow, and performed various other remarkable and dangerous exploits which filled grandma's gentle soul with horror.

"Good morning!" said grandpa, one bright day in November, as the six came down to breakfast, with Baby Joe bringing up the rear. "I wonder if I could find any children who would like to go haying with me to-day? Do you think you could find me some, Daisy?"

"Why, grandpa," said the little maid, wonderingly, "do people go haying in November?"

"Yes, indeed," replied grandpa, with a twinkle in his eye. "But what I want to know is, can I find any children to go?"

"Oh, we'll go!" cried five of the children, Baby Joe being too deeply engaged in his buckwheat-cakes and syrup to know what the conversation was about.

At last they were ready, warmly dressed by careful grandma, for there was quite a sharp wind blowing. They hurried outdoors, and there stood grandpa by the big hayrick, with Kerry and Kate, the fat, gray horses, harnessed to it. "Jump in!" he cried; and in they scrambled, laughing and shouting, and tumbling over each other in their eagerness. Just then grandma came out with a huge basket, which they stowed away in one corner, under a big fur robe, away from Baby Joe's prying eyes.

"Aren't you going to take the mowing machine?" said Hugh. "You can't cut hay without it, can you?"

"Oh, yes!" laughed grandpa. "We're going to rake hay to-day." As he said this he stowed four large rakes away in the hayrick, and left Hugh pondering over the mystery.

What a merry ride that was! To be sure, they had a few mishaps, for Baby Joe fell out of the team, and his loss was not discovered until a few moments afterward, when Amy, his especial guardian, missed him. They drove back a little way, and there lay Joe in the middle of the road, kicking and screaming lustily, but quite unhurt. He was picked up, and soon forgot his troubles in eating a large red apple which grandpa produced from his pocket.

Once when they were all standing up in the cart, it gave a sudden lurch, and they all fell in a heap; and poor Daisy bumped her head so hard that she was sure it must have cracked, but each one of the children assured her that it was just as good as ever, and she was comforted with another apple, which Joe insisted was the twin brother of his.

"Here we are!" shouted grandpa, as they entered the oak woods. "Jump out, all of you, and go to work raking hay. We can't have any idle children here."

They climbed out, and looked eagerly around.

"We don't see any hay," said Hugh. "There is nothing here but oak leaves."

Grandpa laughed heartily, and said, "These oak leaves are the hay I mean, children. I cover up my banks of celery with them to keep it from freezing, and after keeping them all winter, they will make an excellent fertilizer. So fall to work, and we'll see how soon that hayrick will be full."

The six did fall to work, and they worked with a will. They raked the leaves into piles; then the little ones put them into big baskets, which grandpa emptied into the hayrick. Baby Joe worked as hard as anybody, filling up his fat little arms with leaves, and stuffing them into the baskets.

After they had worked what seemed to them a very short time, grandpa called, "No more room, little haymakers! Look at the hayrick!" And sure enough, it was heaped high with red-brown leaves. The big fur robe was spread over the load, and the children were lifted up, one by one, and had great fun stamping and pressing down the leaves.

Then off they started, and the big basket was produced, and found to be full of apples and doughnuts. They munched merrily all the way home, and when they jumped down at the farmhouse gate, grandma came out to meet them, and said, laughing, "Well, children, was the haying party a success?"

And they cried, "O grandma, we never had half so much fun getting in real hay!"

A California Mine.

In a single mine in California, only a month ago, the owners took $40,000 in one day out of a pocket which they had discovered. It is not impossible that the total output of this mine in twelve months will exceed $1,000,000. A few months ago the property was unknown to the general public. In another county of California a mill run of only seventy tons of ore gave a yield of more than $10,000. In Mexico rich strikes are still being made. A company working near the City of Mexico is taking out $100,000 a month. Another mine in the same State is taking out $35,000 a month. The State of Sonora alone yielded more than $3,000,000 in gold last year. These mining districts may be reached by a journey of a week or two, and the chances for success to experienced men are as good as they are in the Klondike to-day.

That certain beetles are by no means frightened by lead foil has long been recognized, but it is rather discouraging to add one more to the number of these culprits. Ed. Stich of Nauheim, reports that a box somewhat worm-eaten was lined with lead. After awhile holes one-eighth of an inch in diameter, and distinctly spiral, were noticed, and traced to the beetle Tetropium luridum, Linn., which was not yet on the list of lead eaters, or rather lead destroyers. A cousin of this insect has been known to be destructive to lead chambers. There are, unfortunately, many insects and animals devoid of that sense for the sacred rights of property which we expect of everybody but ourselves.

The most important feature of the present Anglo-Egyptian expedition against the Mahdi is the successful sinking of wells in the desert between Wady-Halfa and Abu-Hamed. The presence of water at such a distance from the Nile has never been suspected either by Europeans or natives, and bids fair to revolutionize not only the desert tribes, but the entire condition of desert life. Indeed, the problem of converting the great African deserts into fertile territory seems to be at length in a fair way toward solution not by means of letting in the sea, as proposed by Count de Lesseps, but by the sinking of wells. Water is evidently to be found everywhere in the African deserts, provided one digs deep enough.

Saw His Heart Beat.

Last November, James Hall, a young man at Shelbyville, Ind., while hunting, accidentally discharged his shotgun while the barrels were resting in an oblique position across the left breast. The result of the accident was that the flesh and the ribs covering the chest cavity were torn away, exposing to full view the pericardium revealing the motion of the heart. The physicans who were first called said Hall would die in a few hours. Another physician from this city was called and saved his life. To cover the hole where the ribs and flesh were shot away a silver plate was fastened to the ends of the exposed ribs. Skin-grafting did the rest. Hall at that time was sixteen years old and possessed of a wonderful physique. His case is the second one on record where a man saw his own heart beat and lived to tell the story. The leading medical publications of this country and Europe secured detailed accounts of the case and the treatment.

Hall had always been a pretty good kind of a boy, but there were better ones. He faced death with courage. During his long sickness his disposition seemed to undergo a change, and now he has signified his intention of becoming a minister. His parents are poor, but they have managed to secure some money, and he is now ready to start to college.—Indianapolis News.

The Ink Bacillus.

An interesting discovery was recently made at Leipzig, namely, the ink bacillus, as it has been named. It has often happened that dangerous blood poisoning has been caused by wounding one's self with an inky steel pen. In Professor Marpman's bacteriological institute they have succeeded in finding the micro-organism in ink which excites the blood. It has been ascertained that many inks, particularly school inks, contain bacteria. Out of fifty-seven different kinds most of them made with gall—the majority contained bacteria. School inks colored with an aniline dye, even though the bottle had only just been opened, contained the micro-organism already mentioned, and the number of bacilli was the greater the longer the ink had been exposed to the air. From such an aniline ink, which had been in an open inkstand for three months, a specific bacillus was isolated and mice were inoculated with it. After four days they died of blood poisoning. The fact that gall-apple inks get covered with mold is a very old fact indeed—now the cause, bacillus is known.

Mammoth Gun Casting.

The largest gun casting ever made in this country was cast at the ordnance department of the Bethlehem Iron Company Thursday morning. The casting is for the tube of a sixteen-inch gun for the United States Government. It is nineteen feet six inches long, octagonal in shape and seventy-four inches in diameter.

More than 100 gross tons of metal were used in its manufacture. Three furnaces, two of forty tons' capacity each and one of twenty tons, were used to prepare the metal in. The casting, which is the first and largest of its kind ever made, was a success in every way. The jackets for the big gun will be cast later.—Washington Star.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

According to the latest German colonial budget, every dollar's worth of colonial trade costs Germany 75 cents, and every colonial settler costs the empire $1,000 a year. At that rate a great colonial empire will be a costly thing.

Germany and Spain are now connected by a submarine cable 1,250 miles long, the ends of which are at Emden and Vigo. It is the first link in a series of lines to be extended to Brazil and to the United States by way of the Azores.

A learned scientist says that the whole human body is full of microbes, and that a person is healthy as long as his microbes are in good condition. The question now is, What can a fellow take that will always be good for his microbes?

A county fair in Maine was slimly attended for the reason that it didn't advertise. The results would have been different if the management had used a column in each county paper for the three weeks preceding the fair to herald its attractions.

Picture dealers say there has been in recent years an increased demand for pictures of a patriotic character. There was, for example, an increased demand for pictures of Washington. The revival of patriotic feeling thus indicated he attributed largely to the growth and influence of patriotic societies.

An English paper tells of a clergyman who had two curates, with the older of whom he was at swords' points. On being appointed to another living, he decided to take with him the younger curate, whom he liked, and when he came to preach his farewell sermon he chose as his text, "Abide ye here with the ass, and I and the lad will go yonder and worship."

Newspapers may soon be used in the Kansas City public schools as text-books. At the regular meeting of the local school board, J. M. Greenwood, superintendent of schools, instructed the principals to keep up an interest in current events and to encourage the reading of good newspapers. "I will introduce a system whereby newspapers will be used as text-books a little later," said Mr. Greenwood to a reporter. "I am getting the teachers prepared for it now."

The National Congress of German Journalists and Writers has just met in convention at Leipsic, and has formulated a protest against the methods of punishing editors which existing statutes prescribe. They are put on a par with thieves and murderers, and kept in chains in dungeons, and are fed on the same food as common criminals. It is no wonder that they petition the Reichstag to abate the rigor of these ordinances, though what will come of their petition remains to be seen.

In order that wide-spread measures may be taken to prevent the recurrence of the terrible disaster at the charity bazaar in Paris, it is proposed to hold an international congress of experts in that city, together with an exhibition of fire-extinguishing apparatus, etc., the scientific discussions being accompanied by practical illustrations. Makers of fire-engines are invited to send exhibits, and architects, engineers, inventors and others are asked to forward plans or designs for safeguarding theatres, concert-rooms and other buildings.

Has it ever occurred to you, inquires The Pathfinder, to what a large extent the various members of the human body have suggested the nomenclature of the mechanical arts? A bicycle alone has a neck, head, backbone, etc. Other machines of various kinds have arms, legs, fingers, hands, wrists, elbows, eyes, ears, noses, cheeks, mouths, teeth, tongues, lips, ribs, eyes, feet, etc. There is nothing more natural or logical than to apply the name of a familiar feature of the human body to a mechanical part closely simulating it in form or function.

A French sculptor, Pietre Roche, has invented an ingenious way of producing snow statues that will not melt. He noticed that in ice-making machines the pipes containing the liquified gases were covered with snow, and applied the same principles to copper statues made hollow and filled with freezing fluid. The moisture from the atmosphere forms on the metal in a few moments as a coating of snow, and is prevented from thawing by the freezing mixture. Many exquisite effects can be obtained in this way, and for the decoration of ball-rooms on a midsummer night the snow statuary must be ideal.

A sensation has been created by the discovery that both the Austrian and Italian governments are busy day and night constructing the most costly and elaborate fortifications at the points where the empire and the kingdom meet in the Southern Tyrol and in the neighborhood of Pontebba. This, it would appear, means that neither at Vienna nor at Rome is there much confidence on the part of the authorities in the extension of the existing Triple Alliance, since allies do not, as a rule, consider it necessary to adopt such means of defending their dominions against one another. There are no fortifications of any kind along the frontier of Germany and Austria. Why should there be any on the Austro-Italian boundary line?

It is quite astonishing how many games were originally invented and are to-day practised by people we are accustomed to think of as savages. The Canadian game of lacrosse originated among the North American Indians. Wallace tells us how in Borneo one wet day he thought to amuse his Dyak boys by showing them cat's cradle, but he found that they not only knew it, but knew more intricate figures than he. The Maoris of New Zealand actually have a sort of pictorial history in cat's cradle figures of twisted fiber. The Sandwich Islanders play a kind of draughts. The South Sea peoples nearly all are adepts at kite flying. Polo comes from Persia and is played magnificently by wild hill tribes from northern India.

In his recent address before the English church congress the Archbishop of Canterbury gave some advice to workingmen, speaking of himself as a workingman. He had been left fatherless, he said, at the age of thirteen, and had been urged to earn his own living since he was seventeen. He had known what it was to do without a fire because he could not afford one, and to wear patched clothes and boots. He learned to plough as straight a furrow as any man in the parish, and he could thrash as well as any man. If, he added, the workingman would practice self-restraint, would never waste his wages in drink, but find happiness in the love of home and family, he would feel little of the burdens of life or of the inequality, which was inevitable.

A German statistician has recently compiled figures as to the total number of newspapers printed during a year, which he estimates at 12,000,000,000 copies. To gather an adequate idea of this enormous quantity, it might be stated that all these papers spread out would more than cover all the continents and islands of the earth. The weight of the paper would amount to 781,240 tons. If this entire edition were to be printed by one single press, the largest and most rapid one now in use, the total edition would take 333 years to print. Stacked up vertically, this quantity would form a column 260,000 feet in height. Suppose that every reader devotes but five minutes per day to the reading of his newspaper, the time used by the total population of the earth would amount to 100,000 years.

The tiny but venerable and free republic of San Marino, in northern Italy, has come out of a diplomatic contest with big Italy victoriously. The question related to a new treaty in which Italy badly wanted to insert clauses providing for the extradition of socialists, anarchists and others, whose crimes, for want of a better name, may be classed as political. The presidents and senators strongly objected, on the ground that for something like 900 years San Marino had been free to all well-behaved comers. The Italian government pointed out that, as San Marino was only twenty-four square miles large, and surrounded by Italian territory, it might and almost certainly would, become an asylum for all kinds of desperadoes, who would abuse the republic's hospitality by plotting against the neighboring friendly state. The presidents and senators replied that San Marino would know how to deal with such ingrates.

British Empire, Asiatic.

A fact which we perhaps too often forget, remarks the London Graphic, is that numerically the British Empire is an Asiatic Empire. Of the 380,000,000 people in the whole empire India contributes 290,000,000. Nor does the Anglo-Saxon race or any white race figure as largely as we are apt to fancy in our colonial population. Canada and Australia are, indeed, white man's lands, but in South Africa the white man is in a distinct minority, while in West Africa and East Africa there are teeming poulations of blacks whose numbers can only be roughly guessed in millions. If these be deducted, it will be found that outside the United Kingdom there are only some 10,000,000 persons of European race in the British Empire, so that, putting the United Kingdom at 40,000,000 persons, we have altogether in the empire a population of 50,000,000 white and some 330,000,000 Asiatics and Africans.

Anecdote of Dana.

Once, when the late Editor Dana was on a visit to Atlanta he made the rounds of the "Constitution" office. In one of the editorial rooms he had to wade through a sea of discarded exchanges. Some apology was made for the littered condition of the room.

"I like to see it," he said, looking down on the scattered exchanges, "for it looks like business, and it means that work has been done. Keep it up, boys, keep it up!"—Atlanta Constitution.

A Maine man bought a new, latest improved magazine rifle and went out hunting. He encountered seven wild cats, emptied the magazine at them without effect, and threw the gun away and dispersed the felines with rocks.

Georgia Poetry.

A Georgia farmer has a son who writes verse, but is too modest to submit it for publication. One day, when the farmer was going to town, he took a bundle of poems along with him and handed them to an editor.

"They're pretty fair," said the editor. "His rhyme is all right, but there's something wrong with his feet."

"Well," said the farmer, "I won't deny it; he has got corns."

Washington Post: When a bank is wrecked hundreds of innocent persons are affected, many of them ruined. Suicides often follow, the savings of years are lost, the inheritance of widows and children is dissipated and the villain who is responsible for these disasters gets a few years in the penitentiary and is then pardoned and put into position to prey on the public again. The pleadings of influential citizens, or of a loving and persistent wife or daughter, will effect a pardon and the criminal walks the streets a free man. Such men are far more dangerous to a community than a known robber, and deserves less consideration.

Omaha Bee: The price of live stock has advanced ¾ of a cent a pound within the last few months. The retail price of beef has been raised from 2 to 6 cents a pound. If anybody can explain why this discrepancy in price exists the people of Omaha would like to hear from him.

ALABAMA'S BRAVE WOMEN.

S. J. Leslie

Jenifer, Ala., says: I have used Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine 20 years, and know it will cure Liver Disease, Nervousness, Bowel and Stomach Troubles. I like it better than "Black Draught" or "Zeilin's" medicine.

Parenthood.

Children bind husband and wife more closely than the wedding ceremony itself. One-half of married misery is due to the growing physical weakness of women, which makes child-bearing a dreaded burden and prevents those close relations between husband and wife, without which happiness cannot exist. How important then is it that the woman be brought to as perfect a condition of health, of which she is capable, so that she can give to her offspring out of her abundance of life and spirits. Dr. Simmons Squaw Vine Wine will do this; it will purify her blood, tone up her nervous system and give her courage and assurance of safety to go through the ordeal of childbirth.

W. A. Collier

Ashland, Ala., writes: Have used Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine 10 years for Colds, Diarrhœa, Summer Complaint with children. It gives better satisfaction than "Thedford's Black Draught," or "St. Joseph's Regulator," or anything we can get.

Dimness of Vision.

In cases of weak and imperfect vision, the causes of disease should, if possible, be correctly ascertained, so that they may be as far as possible obviated and guarded against. Where the trouble is functional and arises from some constitutional derangement or debility, such as torpid liver or inactive kidneys, producing a morbid condition in the organism, constitutional treatment with Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine will produce the happiest results. When caused by prolonged nursing, excessive sexual indulgences, abuse of stimulants, the excessive use of the eyes on too bright or too minute objects, too much sleep or other circumstances which produce determination of blood to the head, Dr. Simmons Squaw Vine Wine quickly cures.

The SIXTH MISSING WORD CONTEST

The Atlanta Constitution Offers
One Tenth
Of the Subscriptions
Received from those entering the Contest to name properly the missing word in the following sentence:

"Once given the passion for _____, that one of the precious metals will be most in demand which is cheapest." ∴ ∴ ∴

And, in Addition
TO THE 10 PER CENT, WE WILL GIVE
$100 Cash Extra
For the first Six Correct Guesses, as follows: $50 for the First Correct Guess and $10 Each for the Next Five, in their order, provided the same are received in our office on or before December 1st.

THE PERIOD COVERED
By This Contest shows about 16,000 expirations for The Weekly Constitution, and, of course, we want them all to renew and to enter the Contest.

THIS MEANS $1,600
For the Missing Word Fund, and every additional subscriber entering the contest will swell the amount the more.

This period also compares with our First Missing Word Contest last year, in which Mr. M. L. Brittain secured the prize—$1,033.50. As that was our First Contest, there were more than 5,000 subscribers received during the time, who did not enter for prize. It will not be so this time, for the plan is widely advertised and we have paid out within the past twelve months NEARLY $5,000 CASH upon the Five Missing Word Contests. The series has been of extraordinary interest, and the idea seems to grow in the public's favor.

The book containing the sentence is a standard publication and has been sealed up and placed with Mr. W. A. Hemphill, President and Business Manager of The Constitution, who will hold it safely until January 1, 1898.

The sentence speaks for itself and submits a very plain proposition for you to solve.

The Contest Began November 1, 1897.
The Contest Ends January 1, 1898.

This contest lasts two months and the amount to be divided will probably be in the neighborhood of $2,000. There may be one correct answer, there may be a dozen, there may be more, but remember it costs nothing to supply a word, and you may get it correctly. Whether you do or not, you get

The Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers for One Year.

Keep That in View and Send Your Guess With Your Dollar for a Year's Subscription

Ten per cent of the Guessers' Subscriptions goes to the Fund to be divided. In other words, if this Subscription Fund amounts to $20,000 for the two months, the Fund to go to the successful guesser would be $2,000. Following are the conditions of contest:

WE PROPOSE TO PUT 10 PER CENT of the amount we receive for subscriptions, wherein the party subscribing enters the Missing Word Contest, into a fund for distribution among those who name correctly the missing word. For instance: If only one contestant gets the word right, he or she, as the case may be, will have all the money. If more than one strike it, the sum will be equally divided, each correct answer receiving its proportionate share of the fund.

THE CONDITION PRECEDENT FOR SENDING A GUESS at the Missing Word is that each and every guess must be accompanied by a year's subscription to THE WEEKLY CONSTITUTION; the guess must be sent in the identical envelope that brings the money that pays for the subscription; forgetting it, or leaving it out by accident or otherwise, or not knowing of the guess at the time you subscribed, or any other reason will not entitle one to send a guess afterwards. The guess must come with the subscription or not at all. Should a party send more than one guess, he or she will be entitled to a share of the fund for each correct guess sent; there will be no capital prize—every one will get a first prize. Persons may guess as many times as they send subscriptions.

THE CONTEST BEGAN NOV. 1ST—We began then to keep accurate account of the subscriptions received with guesses and on December 1st we will publish how much is to the credit of the subscribers guessing, and during December we will publish each week how the fund has grown.

THE CONTEST CLOSES JAN. 1ST—At which time we will pay out to the successful party or parties the full prize amount that has accrued in the contest.

In Making Your Answer You need not write the sentence out in full, just state simply the Missing Word for January 1st is "....."

The above is the plan of The Constitution Contest, which all subscribers to that paper and ours, subscribing under the clubbing offer announced elsewhere, may enter. Address orders to

MONTEVALLO NEWS.

VOL II MONTEVALLO, ALA., THURSDAY, DECEMBER 16, '97. NO 51.

A SAD BEREAVEMENT.

MR. AND MRS. D. C. SAVAGE LOSE THEIR YOUNG SON, HOMER.

After three weeks sickness and suffering, Homer Calhoun Savage, the 14 year old son of Mr. D. C. and Mrs. Ida Savage, died last Tuesday morning at 6 o'clock, just as the sun—the life-giver—rose to gladden all save the bereaved relatives and friends of the young lad. The physicians in attendance diagnosed his ailment as typhoid-malarial fever, and labored incessantly to save his life, but without avail.

The deceased boy was born at Cross Plains, now Piedmont, in Calhoun county, Ala., on February 20th, 1883. In mind he was mature for his years. Although companionable with other boys, yet his chief pleasure seemed to consist in being with his father and helping him in his business. When not thus engaged, he preferred remaining at home with his mother to scampering about the streets like most boys. He had no bad habits, eschewed doubtful company, and was never known to use the slang expressions which are too rife. Withal he was an unassuming, perfect little gentleman who made friends of all who knew him.

As he was a constant Sunday-school attendant and a devout Christian, the grief of his relatives is tempered with the assurance that he is now with the Saviour.

Funeral services conducted by Rev. M. P. Reynolds were held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Savage at 12:30 p. m. yesterday, after which the remains of the deceased boy were placed in a specially-erected brick vault in the Montevallo cemetery. Numerous friends of the family followed the hearse to God's acre and sang a hymn before dispersing.

If you want anything, Kroell has it.

A FEAST FOR THE EYE.

Mr. F. W. Rogan is evidently determined to have a lion's share of the Christmas trade, for he has laid in a large and varied assortment of toys, dolls, fireworks, fancy holiday goods for presents, china and glassware, fancy candies and fruits, which is worthy of any city.

A SUCCESSFUL PERFORMANCE.

The amateur tragedians and comedians of Aldrich acquitted themselves extremely well in the play, "The Turn of the Tide," at Aldrich last Tuesday night. Despite the inclemency of the night, many of Montevallo's leading citizens and fairest ladies drove over to enjoy the play. Mr. G. B. Monroe, who played the part of Pepper, a colored "individual," carried off the honors of the evening. Miss Bessie Hoskins sang well, although somewhat nervous, and Miss Addie Lee, of Montevallo, charmed the audience with instrumental music. Messrs. C. F. Robbins and A. F. Hutchings danced a hornpipe like true salts.

The following ladies and gentlemen took part in the play: Prof. W. C. Carpenter, Messrs. C. F. Robbins, A. F. Hutchins, Joseph Hoskins, Chas. Monroe, O. W. Tinney, and G. B. Monroe: Misses Melissa Fancher, and Bessie Hoskins, and Mesdames Lillian Pratt and A. F. Hutchings.

Latham & Co. have purchased a large quantity of clothing for men, youths and boys, which they are selling below cost.

F. F. Crowe & Co. have the largest and best assortment of fireworks, dolls and other toys, candies and fruit in Montevallo.

A POPULIST OPINION.

W. J. Bryan's recent speech in St. Louis, Mo., under the auspices of the Jefferson Club, is found, on being published, to be a solid mass of Populist belief, and would, had it been delivered two years ago, have created a furor in Democratic ranks; yet there five thousand people sat or stood, presumably Democrats, and applauded to the echo all that was said against injunctions, trusts, national banks, the retirement of greenbacks, the degeneracy of the Federal judiciary and the demonetization of silver. Silver was not dwelt upon at any greater length than were the other points. Such demonstrations of the masses being brought to the acceptance of Populist principles without any shock and even without their knowledge of the fact is highly significant, politically.—The Randolph Toiler.

John Phillips and wife passed through Montevallo on Monday on their way from Scottsville to Dog wood, taking with them five teams and some negroes to work on the construction of the new branch road at that point.

Dr. G. W. Shackelford, dentist will visit Montevallo Monday, December 27th, to remain only three days. All who need dental work can find him at the St. George hotel. Dr. Shackelford's work speaks for itself, and to the people of Montevallo he needs no introduction.

Mrs. Mary Bird, Harrisburg, Pa., says. "My child is worth millions to me: yet I would have lost her by croup had I not invested twentyfive cents in a bottle of One Minute Cough Cure. "It cures coughs, and all throat and lung troubles. F. F. Crowe & Co.

If you want a desirable building lot or a cheap home, call on or write to the Shelby County Bank.

Mrs. Lillian Pratt, of Aldrich, has been in poor health of late, but despite that bravely played her part in the drama at Aldrich last Tuesday night.

The hand of D. J. Moreland, of Brierfield, from the palm of which an aneurism was cut a couple of weeks ago, is now nearly well.

For choice Christmas presents, firewerks, dolls and other toys, candies and fruits, go to F. F. Crowe & Co.

DOGWOOD DOTS.

Rev. J. D. Martin delivered quite an interesting and influential sermon to a large congregation at the Baptist church Sunday.

Dr. H. W. Harrison is very ill with pneumonia. His friends hope for him a speedy recovery.

Frank Cunningham went somewhere Sunday to see the girls, but no one is able to say where he went.

Gus McBride, of Ebenezer, was in town Sunday.

W. P. Ryan attended the "Turn of the Tide" show at Aldrich last Tuesday night.

W. E. Harrison passed through town last Sunday.

Pat Harrison has returned home after a lengthy visit to Selma and Montgomery.

W. A. Lucas, of Dogwood, sustained a painful injury last Tuesday, the nail being torn off the thumb of his right hand, which will incapacitate him for work for several days. A mule was the active cause, and Mr. Lucas will swap him next Saturday.

M. L. Wooten and family will start for Lott, Texas, Thursday, the 16th inst. All who know them regret very much to see them leave Shelby county, but trust that they may thrive and prosper in their new home. X. Y. Z.

BISMARCK BOOMING.

The Southern railroad has completed its new and handsomely painted depot at Bismarck, and the citizens of the little town are pulling down their vests and are going to try to make the town worthy of the depot.

Rumors are afloat that a grand sociable will be held in Bismarck during Christmas week. If this materialises, Montevallo friends will be invited in due time.

WEDDINGS.

Miss Bessie V. Savage, the sweet daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Savage, was married yesterday evening to John W. Foshee, of Maplesville. Rev. M. P. Reynolds tied the knot. The newly wedded pair left last night for Maplesville.

On Wednesday, December 8th, Dr. J. I. Logan, of Blocton, and Miss Lavella Fuller, of Centreville, were married in the Presbyterian church at Centreville. The happy pair will make their home in Blocton.

A fashionable wedding in the Hebrew circles of Blocton occurred last Tuesday night, when Miss Rosalie Israel, the lovely and talented daughter of W. Israel, was united in the pleasant bonds of matrimony to Mr. Joe Sachs, one of Blocton's rising merchants. The ceremony was performed in Pratt's Hall, and a recherche supper was subsequently enjoyed by the friends of the happy bride and bridegroom at the home of the former's father.

PLOWMAN VS. ALDRICH.

CAPT. H. C. REYNOLDS' BILL FOR LAND GRANT RE-INTRODUCED.

Special to the NEWS.

Washington, Dec. 14.—Hon. Cecil Brown of Talladega, who will act as counsel to Representative Plowman in the contested election case of Aldrich vs. Plowman, is in town, and District Attorney Vaughan has left his office in charge of an assistant and is expected here today to represent his friend, Aldrich, before the election committee next Friday. Both Aldrich and Plowman express confidence that the committee and the house will decide in their favor, but the majority of opinions among members of both parties seem to be that Plowman will be allowed to retain his seat. Mr. Aldrich denies that he has been removed as dispenser of patronage for the Fourth district, but would not say that Col. Youngblood had not advised his removal.

H. C. Reynolds of Montevallo, president of the Girls' Industrial school, is here to push his grant for 25,000 acres of public lands for the benefit of his school. The bill, which failed at the last congress, was introduced into the senate yesterday by Senator Morgan, and into the house by Mr. Plowman today.

CAPT. REYNOLDS' LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 13, 1897.
Editor "Montevallo News."

Dear Sir: I went to the public schools here and saw the same style of cooking as ours taught by Miss Wright, a friend of Miss Evans. I then went into the sewing and cutting department (no dressmaking connected with it at all). I found we are so far ahead of them that there is no comparison. In fact, I see how much superior our school is, and how we deserve great things from our folks. Yes, I am more and more satisfied with our school.

General Morgan is the most enthusiastic man over it I ever saw, and wanted to introduce a bill giving the school all of the public lands in the State. I only had it introduced, however, for 25,000 acres. Gen. Morgan will get it through the Senate without any trouble; the only danger I fear is in the House, but I have had good assurances even there that it will pass. Congress will adjourn this week, I think, for the holidays and I will be home Saturday.

THE REAL ANARCHISTS.

The United States has no greater enemies, no more pronounced traitors than the men who create trusts and manage them. They have no more regard for a statute than a heathen has for the New Testament. They have no more humanity than a savage. They care nothing for starving humanity so long as the trusts yield them a revenue. If a revolution does come, it will be the masses against the classes. If such a calamity should overtake the United States the classes will be responsible for it and not the masses. The trusts and corporations, not satisfied with dictating legislation in the states, have almost absolute control of the national legislature at Washington.—Matt Mynor.

The typographical staff of the News has been strengthened this week by the accession of Mr. John Shaw, a thoroughly experienced compositor who is an artist in job work.

WHEAT CROP IN INDIA.

A VERY PLAIN STATEMENT ABOUT PRICES.

Any Simpleton Should Be Able to See at a Glance that a Decline in Silver Means a Decline in Wheat—Crop Shortage Explained.

(By A. J. Warner.)

I.

In 1891, at a convention of the American Bimetallic League, held at Washington, Moreton Frewin, the distinguished English bimetallist, called attention to the close relations between silver and wheat in India and its effect on the price of American wheat.

He showed that for a long time an ounce of silver in India, converted into rupees, had been the equivalent of a bushel of wheat, including transportation to European markets, and especially had this been the case since the opening of the Suez canal.

He showed that, under conditions then existing, as the gold price of bullion silver went down in the American market the gold price of wheat would go down in India, and consequently in the European markets, necessarily carrying down with it the price of wheat in this country. This was then strictly true and easily explained.

If an ounce of silver would pay for a bushel of wheat in India and lay it down in Liverpool, it is plain that if the ounce of silver could be bought in America for 60 cents in gold, then 60 cents in gold would pay for the bushel of wheat in India, including its transportation to Europe, which would mean 40 to 50 cent wheat in this country as long as India had wheat to export.

Nothing could be plainer than that. Bimetallists, therefore, called the attention of the American farmer to this fact and showed him the consequences of Indian competition under such conditions.

But it must be remembered that two things were necessary to produce this result.

First, the purchaser of wheat in India must be able to convert bullion silver at will into rupees with which to pay for wheat. This was the condition then, and continued so till June, 1893.

Second, India must have wheat to export. This India had for many years in succession, and will doubtless have again. But for two years past her crop of wheat, on account of drought, has been short.

TANNER BECOMES A DEMOCRAT.

Gov. Tanner, of Illinois, is getting to be a pretty good Democrat. Thusly he calls down Chicago's gold standard newspaper trust, in a speech delivered before the Commercial club:

"Does the press of Chicago truthfully represent the public opinion of Chicago? That is the question to which I ask leave to direct your thoughts for a few moments this evening.

"I do not believe that it does, and on this subject I ask leave to say a few words, the utterance of which appears to me to be a painful public duty which circumstances have forced upon me, and which I should be a coward to shirk, whatever may be the reception given them.

"The organization of the Chicago press is essentially that of a trust, as the word 'trust' is commonly understood. The proprietors of the leading daily newspapers of this city, with the exception of the Inter Ocean, are members of a corporation which meets once a week; for what purpose? It may have other ends to subserve in this weekly meeting, but its chief object is to determine the policy of the papers which belong to the combination, what treatment they will jointly and severally accord to all public measures and to all public men. Its deliberations are in the nature of those of the star chamber, whose name in English history is the symbol of tyranny and of infamy. The man who fails to do its bidding is slated for slaughter.

"In what particular does a newspaper trust differ in its aims, principles, or methods from any other trust? And yet these pretended opponents of trusts and monopolies have organized themselves into the most gigantic monopoly, the most dangerous trust, of the present age. Of all known trusts, this is the most venal and corrupt. The newspaper trust of the city of Chicago has been and is for sale, for an adequate pecuniary consideration, upon every question that has come before the Chicago common council or the legislature of Illinois.

"There is not a promoter in Chicago who does not know that in the incipiency of every scheme for the enriching of individuals at the expense of the public at large his first step must be to see the newspaper trust, and that if he fails to make terms with it he must expect its opposition; his proposition will be assailed by it from start to finish.

"If these statements are untrue, I am amenable to the criminal law of libel, and liable also to the civil courts for damages. What I have said, I have said deliberately, after full reflection, and with the possible consequences before my eyes.

"I invite prosecution. I challenge the newspaper trust to meet me in the courts."

We love Tanner much for the enemies he has made. His speech is the greatest hit ever made by him.

Stories of poor farmers who got rich on dollar wheat will cut a big figure in the campaign literature of this fall and next year, but, like many of the tales from the arctic gold fields, they will not bear investigation.

There are three hundred and seventeen Democratic clubs in Iowa.

The congressional campaigns of 1898 will begin January 1.

Is your ward well organized?

Next year we will cross the Red Sea and take congress. In 1900 the walls of Jericho will fall and the hosts of Democracy will take control.

After an exhaustive test of dinner plates all over the country, the armorplate board has now returned to Washington, and we may soon expect to hear a report on the assay value of the various brands of champagne.

To the extent that men grow apart, the tyrant and the anarchist are called into existence. In that country where one man has every opportunity to rise, while another, and probably a better man, has only opportunity to fall, such crimes as those perpetrated by Canovas and Golli are to be expected.

Prosperity will be secure and universal when none are so rich as to be able to buy others, and none are so poor as to be compelled to sell themselves

Dick Bland favors paper money. This reminds us that all kinds of money are redeemable in the products of labor.

Extensive robberies have been discovered in the United States treasury. It will require six months of time and the expenditure of $25,000 to count the 100,000,000 bright silver dollars. The robbers probably have not secured one-tenth of the amount it will take to count what are left. But the count must always be understood to be absolutely correct.

Organize for the congressional campaigns.

When one has waked up to the idea that the world needs to be made better and goes to work to help do it, he discovers a joy that no selfish pleasure can begin to equal.

When wages fall—as they do whenever the purchasing power is reduced, whether the money paid is less, the same, or even more—then production is discouraged for want of purchasers. Not only the employes but the employers and merchants have got to suffer it before long. Yet the tendency of the commercial system is to a continual reduction of purchasing power, at any rate in comparison with production—and still there are thousands of business folk who think that society is quite good enough for them.

George H. Shibley, author of "The Money Question," will stand for congress in the first Illinois. He is the sort of a man that we want to see in congress. He will carry the First, too.

St. Louis Globe-Democrat: "Uncle Sam pays $80,000 a year for the transportation of silver coin to points where it is needed. This government has done a great deal for silver, but it was powerless to stay the decline."

Please be more specific. Do you refer to the decline in silver bullion or silver coin?

Whatever failings may be imputed to Senator Hanna it cannot be charged that he lacks that audacity which is vulgarly but expressively known as "gall." To preach prosperity to a throng of steel workers, coal miners and railroad men who have been out of work and starving for six months requires a considerable exercise of nerve. Yet Mr. Hanna accomplished the feat at Bellaire and got out of town without being mobbed. When it is added that he vigorously denounced the immigration laws to an audience almost wholly composed of foreigners it will be seen that he is not lacking in assurance, though most people will be disposed to doubt his political sagacity.

EMINENT DIVINES' SERMONS

DR. TALMAGE ON "GOD AMONG THE ORCHARDS."

"The Golden Rule" is the Title of the Third of the New York Herald's Competitive Sermons—Preached by Rev. Charles S. Vedder, of Charleston, S. C.

TEXT: "Let us consider one another."—Hebrews x., 24.

Here is the Golden Rule, expressed in the terms of familiar speech and practical action—the way in which the command to do unto others as we would that others should do unto us may be made effectually operative. Here is the sursum corda of all discontent with the inequality of human conditions; the proclamation of peace in all strife of human opinions; the solution of the problem of capital and labor; the condition of harmony in all human relations. The two noble brothers of the Hebrew tradition, secretly sharing the sheaves of their barley harvest with each other to make up what each conceived that the other lacked of the elements of happiness, exemplified it. Sir Philip Sydney did no more when, wounded to the death, he gave the draught of water hardly obtained for his own consuming thirst to a stricken private soldier, saying, "Thy necessity is greater than mine."

The words of the text were spoken by one of the great teachers of the world to those who had associated themselves for worship and work, and whom he would fain incite to the highest and purest and kindliest life. "Let us consider one another." We would better receive the full meaning of the appeal should we use the similar, familiar and expressive word "considerate"—"Let us be considerate of one another."

Among the potential agencies of the world are those which are directly addressed in the text and those akin to them in spirit and purpose—organizations which seek to promote human welfare, whether they be called churches, charities or by whatever name else. In all of these there are possibilities of difference and division which will defeat or retard their usefulness and value. If we would know how these possibilities may be met and overcome we need but conceive of one of these instrumentalities for good in which each member is "considerate" of every other.

Then we should see the strong bearing with the infirmities of the weak; the weak not stumbled with the larger liberty of the strong; the rich sympathizing with the manifold trials of the poor; the poor considerate of the crowding cares and calls of the rich and zealous that both may be poorer in spirit and richer in the graces of character. We should see the old mindful of the enthusiasm of their own youth and, remembering its errors, gently guiding and tempering—not frowning upon and rebuking—the ardor of the younger; the young would be seen sitting at the feet of the old to learn and rising from them to do, not rejecting the counsels of the hoary head as fossil theories of a buried generation, but acknowledging that "days should speak and the multitude of years teach wisdom." If with increase of age infirmity had come, its very decrepitude would be honored as the wound of an earlier warfare. Parents would be then not forgetful that they were once children; children that duty to parents is duty to God and that they one day may need a parent's immunities. We should see the wise gentle to the ignorance of the ignorant and patient to instruct it; the unlearned, if need be, tolerant of the irritability of incessant thought and exacting study and eager to share the fruit of such toil, and all esteeming it more blessed to give than to receive forbearance and extenuation.

Had any "fallen," all would think how adapted was the temptation to the weakness it conquered, and how improbable, if thus beset, that any would have remained steadfast. Repentance before God would give the offence to oblivion in the sight of men, save to kindle a deeper sympathy for the frailty that had yielded. There would be the constant summoning of that charity which "seeketh not her own, thinketh no evil, hopeth all things, endureth all things."

If reproof seemed duty, the fact would not be overlooked that

Some hearts there are so perilously fashioned
God's touch alone hath tenderness enough
To waken, and not break, the thrilling strings.

"Let us be considerate of one another!" How benignant a law this for social intercourse! How happy would be the community in which it reigned! We learn very early in this life that the secret of peaceful and pleasant living is a generous recognition of the differences between us and others and a full allowance of the right to differ. In different ages and climes different definitions have obtained as to what constitutes "refinement." There is one element in which all ages and climes agree! A true good breeding is that which is considerate of the feelings of others, of whatever class or condition.

Why is it that sometimes even the sacred circle of home is darkened with the cloud of painful differences, but that some within it lack thoughtfulness of the feelings and even the failings of others? Rigid in their own ways, they are intolerant of the different ways of others. Why is it that in the same circles of society variances come, which grow to settled alienations, but that in some thoughtless moment a word, look or act has wounded the sensibilities of another, or even slighted his prejudices, and when regret came some retaliatory word forbade acknowledgment?

Employer and employed! Are they always to be at odds? Yes, until each "considers" the other and not himself alone.

What is there which would banish from the intercourse and rivalries of business the personal antagonism which is often engendered, like tearing down the ghastly legend from the marts of trade, "Every man for himself," and writing there instead the kindly motto, "Let us be considerate of one another?"

Still, still in mutual sufferance lies
The secret of true living;
Love scarce is love that never knows
The sweetness of forgiving!

GOD AMONG ORCHARDS.

Rev. Dr. Talmage on the Pomology of the Bible.

TEXT: "The fruit tree yielding fruit after its kind."—Genesis i., 2.

Beginning with the Garden of Eden as the first spontaneous, magnificent orchard, and the expulsion from it of the first pair because they tasted of the forbidden fruit of the tree of knowledge, Dr. Talmage continued:

This story of Eden is rejected by some as an improbability, if not an impossibility, but nothing on earth is easier for me to believe than the truth of this Edenic story, for I have seen the same thing in this year of our Lord 1897. I could call them by name if it were politic and righteous to do so, the men who have sacrificed a paradise on earth and a paradise in heaven for one sin. Their house went. Their library went. Their good name went. Their field of usefulness went. Their health went. Their immortal soul went. My friends! there is just one sin that will turn you out of paradise if you do not quit it. You know what it is and God knows, and you had better drop the hand and arm lifted toward that bending bough before you pluck your own ruin. When Adam stood on tiptoe and took in his right hand that one round peach, or apricot, or apple, Satan reached up and pulled down the round, beautiful world of our present residence. Overworked artist, overwrought merchant, ambitious politician, avaricious speculator, better take that warning from Adam's orchard and stop before you put out for that one thing more.

But I turn from Adam's orchard to Solomon's orchard. With his own hand he writes: "I made me gardens and orchards." Not depending on the natural fall of rain, he irrigated those orchards. Pieces of the aqueduct that watered those gardens I have seen, and the reservoirs are as perfect as when thousands of years ago, the mason's trowel smoothed the mortar over their gray surface. No orchard of olden or modern time, probably, ever had its thirst so well slaked. The largest of these reservoirs is 582 feet long, 207 feet wide, and fifty feet deep. These reservoirs Solomon refers to when he says: "I made me pools of water, to water therewith the wood that bringeth forth trees." Solomon used to ride out to that orchard before breakfast. It gave him an appetite and something to think about all the day. Josephus, the historian, represents him as going out "early in the morning from Jerusalem, to the famed rocks of Etam, a fertile region, delighted with paradises and running springs. Thither the King, in robes of white rode in his chariot, escorted by a troop of mounted archers chosen for their youth and stature, and clad in Tyrian purple, whose long hair, powdered with gold dust, sparkled in the sun." After Solomon had taken his morning ride in these luxuriant orchards, he would sit down and write those wonderful things in the Bible, drawing his illustrations from the fruits he had that very morning plucked or ridden under.

What mean Solomon's orchards and Solomon's gardens? for they seem to mingle the two into one, flowers underfoot, and pomegranates overhead. To me they suggest that religion is a luxury. They mean that our religion is the luscious, the aromatic, the pungent, the aborescent, the efflorescent, the foliaged, the umbrageous. They mean what Edward Payson meant when he declared: "If my happiness continues to increase, I cannot support it much longer." It means what Bapa Padmanji, a Hindoo convert, meant when he said: "I long for my bed, not that I may sleep—I lie awake often and long—but to hold communion with my God."

You think religion is a good thing for a funeral. Oh, yes. But Solomon's orchard means more. Religion is a good thing now, when you are in health and prosperity and the appetite is good for citrons, and apples, and apricots, and pomegranates. Religion for the funeral. Oh, yes; but religion for the wedding breakfast: religion for the brightest spring morning and autumn's most gorgeous sunset. Religion for the day when the stocks are up just as much as when stocks are down. Religion when inspiration is easy, as well as for the last gasp; when the temperature is normal, as well as when it reaches 104. It may be a bold thing to say, but I risk it, that if all the people, without respect to belief or character, at death passed into everlasting happiness, religion for this world is such a luxury that no man or woman could afford to do without it. The dear old book opened with Adam's orchard and closes with St. John's orchard. St. John went into the orchard through a stone gate, the black basalt of the Isle of Patmos, to which he had been exiled. That orchard which he saw was and is in heaven. One person will err in speaking of heaven as all material, and another person describes heaven as all figurative and spiritual, and both are wrong. Heaven is both material and spiritual, as we are both material and spiritual. While much of the Bible account of heaven is to be taken figuratively and spiritually, it is plain to me that heaven has also a material existence.

How much was literal and how much was figurative, I cannot say, but St. John saw two rows of trees on each side of a river, and it differed from other orchards in the fact that the trees bore twelve manner of fruits. The learned translaters of our common Bible say it means twelve different kinds of fruits in one year. Albert Barnes says in means twelve crops of the same kind of fruit in one year. Not able to decide which is the more accurate translation, I adopt both. If it mean twelve different kinds of fruit, it declares variety in heavenly joy. If it means twelve crops of the same kind of fruit, it declares abundance in heavenly joy, and they are both true. Variety? Oh, yes! Not an eternity with nothing but music—that Oratorio would be too protracted. Not an eternity of procession on white horses—that would be too long in the stirrups. Not an eternity of watching the river—that would be too much of the picturesque. Not an eternity of plucking fruits from the tree of life—that would be too much of the heavenly orchard. But all manner of varieties, and I will tell you of at least twelve of those varieties: Joy of divine worship; joy over the victories of the Lamb who was slain; joy over the repentant sinners; joy of recounting our own rescue; joy of embracing old friends; joy at recognition of patriarchs, apostles, evangelists and martyrs; joy of ringing harmonies; joy of reknitting broken friendship; joy at the explanation of Providential mysteries; joy at walking the boulevards of gold; joy at looking at walls green with emerald, and blue with sapphire, and crimson with jasper, and aflash with amethyst, entered through swinging gates, their posts, the hinges and their panels of richest pearl; joy that there is to be no subsidence, no reaction, no terminus to the felicity.

While there is enough of the pomp of the city about heaven for those who like the city best, I thank God there is enough in the Bible about country scenery in heaven to please those of us who were born in the country and never got over it. Now, you may have the streets of gold in heaven, give me the orchards, with twelve manner of fruits, and yielding their fruit every month; and the leaves of the trees are for "the healing of the nations; and there shall be no more curse, but the throne of God and the Lamb shall be in it; and His servants shall serve Him; and they shall see His face, and His name shall be in their foreheads; and there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun, for the Lord God giveth them light; and they shall reign for ever and ever." But just think of a place so brilliant that the noonday sun shall be removed from the mantle of the sky because it is too feeble a taper! Yet most of all am I impressed with the fact that I am not yet fit for that place, nor you either. By the reconstructing and sanctifying grace of Christ we need to be made all over. And let us be getting our passports ready if we want to get into that country. An earthly passport is a personal matter, telling our height, our girth, the color of our hair, our features, our complexion, and our age. I cannot get into a foreign port on your passport, nor can you get in on mine. Each one of us for himself needs a divine signature, written by the wounded hand of the Son of God, to get into the heavenly orchard, under the laden branches of which, in God's good time, we may meet the Adam of the first orchard, and the Solomon of the second orchard, and the St. John of the last orchard, to sit down under the tree of which the church in the Book of Canticles speaks when it says: "As the apple tree among the trees of the wood, so is my Beloved among the sons. I sat down under His shadow with great delight and His fruit was sweet to my taste;" and there it may be found that to-day we learned the danger of hankering after one thing more, and that religion is a luxury, and that there is a divine antidote for all poisons, and that we had created in us an appetite for heaven, and that it was a wholesome and saving thing for us to have discoursed on the pomology of the Bible, or God among the orchards.

STOP THE WASTAGE.

An Expert Tells How Agricultural Resources May Be Increased.

The wonderful loss to farmers brought about by the neglect to properly utilize the resources and to employ knowledge that is considered indispensable in other kinds of business is one of the causes of depression in agriculture. This is more particularly the case in the South than elsewhere, although much has been done within the past few years to check this loss. The Southern people are just beginning to appreciate the advantages of employing their other resources than those of cotton production. In the past the South has been too largely dependent upon the colored man and the mule. The result has been, and will continue to be, so long as they practice a one-crop system, that they will be subject to periods of discouraging depression. In other words, where the farmer put all of his eggs in one basket and meets with some accident he is confronted by the loss of his entire source of support until nature has time to produce another crop. Should it fail a second and third time the poor farmer is left in a desperate way. In the South the wonderful resources for feeding the North upon early vegetables have not been utilized as they can be. There has been and will continue to be a large wastage of products upon the farm, most particularly in the failure to properly utilize cotton seed and its products.

Where favorable terms with the cotton seed oil mills can be made it is well enough to sell the excess of cotton seed and either exchange it or buy cotton seed meal. The intelligent farmer, with the aid of the experiment station or the officers of the agricultural college of his State, can readily figure out whether it is more profitable to sell and buy or to keep and feed or use as a fertilizer. If the farmer keeps his cotton seed he should at once provide for feeding it to stock. Cheap sheds can be constructed to properly protect the cattle from the cold rains which are so trying on stock in the winter, and the manure carefully preserved in a shed will give the farmer a double profit. In fact, I might say a treble profit. For in this way, by preserving his manure in the form of a compost heap and mixing with it from time to time some potash and a moderate supply of phosphate, he would save the profit charged by dealers in fertilizers and secure to himself the profit of the cotton seed as a fertilizer and as a feed stuff. Besides this he would be able to utilize the hay which is produced in great quantities upon the Southern farms and only needs to be harvested and fed in order to make it profitable.

The use of kainit in a compost heap cannot be too highly recommended, as it preserves to the farmer his valuable nitrogen and serves as a preventive of waste upon the farm. The addition of the acid phosphate makes a complete manure that is highly satisfactory for all kinds of crops and on almost all kinds of soil. We advise every farmer to do some close figuring and see if he can afford to sell his cotton seed at ten dollars a ton or exchange it for 725 pounds of cotton seed meal. It will be one of the most profitable rainy days' work he ever did if he will calculate all of profits and losses and carefully study how he could save several dollars per ton by feeding stock and preparing his fertilizers at home. He may find that he is selling his birthright for a mess of pottage when he parts with his cotton seed at prevailing rates. He may find that he can save largely by producing more fertilizers upon the farm and by buying simply the potash salts and the acid phosphate necessary to properly utilize his present wastes.

Stop the wastes upon the farm. Utilize its products in an economic manner. Prevent loss to live stock and fertilizers by exposure to the weather and cold drenching rains. Avoid injudicious sales of valuable farm products and the purchase of fertilizers that should be saved upon the farm. Where fertilizers are bought let them be supplemented to those produced upon the farm, and purchase those ingredients necessary to perfect the fertilizer products of the farm. Avoid wastage of labor by cultivating unprofitable lands and see that all cultivated land is well fertilized.

MADE FLOUR FOR TROOPS.

Old Mill in Cumberland Gap Which Did Service in the Civil War.

There is standing at Cumberland Gap, just across the State line from Middlesboro, Ky., an historic old mill, which during the civil war ground the breadstuff for thousands of Confederate and Federal soldiers.

The mill is located at the foot of the famous Pinnacle mountain on the south side. It has an overshot wheel of the old-fashioned kind about the same size and almost a duplicate of the noted waterwheel which attracts so much attention near the entrance to the Tennessee centennial. The mill was built by John Locke, who came from North Carolina about 1806. The stones which formed the foundation of the structure were hauled from the old north state at a cost of $150. Locke operated it successfully for many years, and after he had accumulated a small fortune he built a flour mill just above it. He also erected a carding factory and an upright sash sawmill. All the machinery was run by the famous cave spring of the Pinnacle mountain, which gushes out of King Solomon's cave 300 feet above the level of the valley.

It comes from the mountain side a veritable torrent, foaming, hissing, seething, carrying huge bowlders before it and cutting a channel through the everlasting rocks in its mad rush to the valley below. This torrent, according to the estimate of mechanical engineers, would furnish 100 horse power, and although old man Locke harnessed only a part of the turbulent stream to his wheels he secured sufficient power to operate the machinery for many years. At his death a few years prior to the war John C. Newly bought the plant and he owned it when the war broke out. He furnished the Confederacy with thousands of bushels of meal and hundreds of barrels of flour ground by these old mills, and when the Federal army took possession of the Gap the same burrs made breadstuff for Uncle Sam's men. When the Confederates began storming the Gap prior to the Federal forces evacuating Gen. George Morgan ordered the mills to be fired, as he did not wish them to remain in operation and give succor to the Confederacy. Accordingly a squad of men was detailed to do the work. They had just set fire to the flouring mill when the Confederate batteries from the adjacent mountains opened fire on the Federal works. The squad lost no time in getting under cover, and as the wind blew the flames away from the corn mill it was saved. It has not been in operation for several years and may never grind again.

Arkansas Miners Said To Be Entrenched in Their Shafts.

The report is received from Jenny Lind, Sebastian county, Ark., that the miners at Bonanza have acknowledged their participation in the lynching of Constable Murray.

It is said they have sent word to Sebastian officers that if they wanted to arrest any of their number to come down into the shafts of the mines and get all they wanted. They are well supplied with dynamite, and it is known that their purpose is to blow up the mine if an effort is made to apprehend them.

The mine is surrounded by a strong posse, the sheriff being in command. He says he will force them to capitulate, even if he has to fire the mine. There are about 300 miners said to have had a hand in the lynching, and blood-shed is expected to follow the apprehension of the culprits.

REBELS CAPTURE A TOWN.

Several Spanish Guerillas Have Joined the Insurgents.

It has been officially announced from Spanish headquarters in Havana that a "group of rebels" had entered Caimanera, near Guantanamo "favored by the treason of an officer." Caimanera, in the port of Guantanamo, is situated fifteen miles by rail from the latter place. Caimanera is on the bay of Guantanamo, otherwise Cumberland harbor.

The insurgent force, the official report adds, consisted of forty guerillas, volunteers and natives of Cuba. They are alleged to have plundered a store and to have carried off the sum of $30,000, that was on a wharf, and which had recently arrived at Caimanera from Havana. It is also said that the insurgents killed the police inspectors and two gendarmes on duty and seriously wounded a Spanish paymaster named Jose Vigil. More Spanish guerrillas, the official announcement concludes, have joined the insurgents.

In the skirmishing of the last ten days the insurgents have lost 113 killed and 35 taken prisoners. Eight chiefs and officers and 53 armed privates have surrendered to the Spanish. The Spanish column in the same period has lost five officers and twenty-two soldiers killed, with eleven officers and 110 soldiers wounded.

Fully 95 per cent of the bottle glass manufacturers of the country are in the combination. The result will be fully a 10 per cent advance in the price on flint bottles.

Kicked to Death by a Mule.

John L. Lessel, of Pelahatchie, Miss., was recently kicked to death by a mule. It seems that he passed carelessly too near the heels of the animal with the above unfortunate result.

Chinese Otters.

The Chinese have completely domesticated the otter. In that country every fisherman has his staff of fishing otters and cormorants. These otters are trained to hunt in company, to attack, pursue, and seize the fish. Travelers who have fished in China state that they have seen good well-trained otters currently sold for $400 each.

TEXAS HEROES SPEAK PLAINLY.

T. C. Bell.

San Antonio, Tex., writes: In 1862 I had Chronic Dysentery and Periodical Constipation. Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine cured me then and I have raised my Daughter, Miss Julia Bell, whose picture I send, on it. Some Dealers try to force "Zeilin's Regulator" on me, but I always return it.

Profuse Menstruation.

Flooding is always an annoying and sometimes a very dangerous disorder. When the menstrual discharge is natural, it is so gradual that by mixing with the vaginal secretions it is prevented from coagulating, while in this disease, clots are often formed. Where there is a tendency to costiveness, laxative doses of Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine should be taken, and to give tone and strength to the pelvic organs Dr. Simmons Squaw Vine Wine should be used continuously for weeks, to effect a permanent cure.

Garland Wilson.

Dublin, Tex., writes: Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine has saved many lives in this malarial country. It prevents Bilious Malarial Intermittent Fever and Congestion. It thoroughly cleanses my system without any pain, while the "Zeilin's Regulator" and "Black Draught" I used caused great uneasiness in bowels and griped. I think it as far ahead of them as noonday is ahead of midnight.

Painful Menstruation

Is caused by disordered nervous system, vitiated blood, uterine derangements, displacement of womb, excessive menstruation, and often completely incapacitates suffering women for anything except suffering untold agony. For relief of pain apply cloths wet with hot water to back and hips. For permanent cure take one tablespoonful Dr. Simmons Squaw Vine Wine before each meal for three days before and during the monthly period, and each night during the period take a dose of Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine, and cure is certain.

Keep Your Eyes Open. Some men for money we learn are trying to deceive the public with a preparation called "Black Draught," telling the people "it's just the same" as M. A. S. L. M. The statement is false. There is none genuine without the Name, Picture and Autograph of Dr. M. A. Simmons.

Incorporation is in order.

Incorporation means increased population.

With inexhaustible supplies of coal and pure water, Montevallo is an ideal location for a cotton factory.

The man who starts a steam laundry and bath house in Montevallo will have a Klondike which time cannot exhaust.

Any mention of the Chicago platform has upon some people an effect similar to that which the flaunting of a red flag has upon a bull.

The Montevallo News wishes a good correspondent at every post-office in the country tributary to Montevallo. Don't all write at once!

By all means let us have a postal savings bank system; it will encourage economy and render the government independent of Wall street.

The wages of all operatives in the mills at Fall River, Mass., have been reduced. How glad they must be that they voted for McKinley!

If the magazine writers continue to vie with one another in penning laudatory articles about Abraham Lincoln, one of them will soon announce that he was not of mortal birth.

Nearly all ministers use the collective term "men" when verbally castigating sinners, but ladies need not think that they are not also referred to, for man embraces woman.

Senator Morgan, in a long interview, favors annexation of the Hawaiian islands to the United States. He has been there, and his opinion should carry great weight.

If the readers of this paper notice any improvement in it, it is to be hoped that they will show their appreciation by turning a year's subscription into the paper's exchequer.

In a late geological report, Dr. Eugene A. Smith refers to a deposit of baryta about two miles from Calera. Baryta is a heavy, white mineral, very similar in appearance to white quartz.—Shelby Sentinel.

So the armor plate commission has thrown cold water upon the proposition to build government armor plate works. Carnegie was not a member of the commission, but he appears to have influenced its report to congress.

Bill Arp, in his letter which appeared in last week's issue of this paper, advocated early marriages for girls; mainly, it appears, because his wife was but sweet sixteen when they wed and he is very well pleased with her. It is, however, the general rule that girls who marry at an early age become prematurely old, and that alone should deter the girls from paying any heed to Bill Arp's advice.

RETRIBUTIVE JUSTICE.

YANKEE GOLDBUGS GET SOME AND HAVE MORE TO COME.

In the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries the pharisaical, hypocritical humbugs of New England, (who professed the Christian religion, but worshipped Mammon,) laid the foundation of New England's present wealth while professing to be inspired with a holy zeal for the salvation of souls by bringing negroes from Africa to these shores. It being a devout belief of every puritanical New Englander that work is a curse imposed upon mankind, those murderers of poor women for alleged witchcraft hoped to make the negroes cultivate their rocky hills while they sat about their firesides, discussed foreordination and predestination and watched their flat chested women-folk bake dyspepsia breeding pies.

Transplanted from the torrid clime of equatorial Africa to the inhospitable, frostbitten shores of New England, the negroes died of consumption like flies in autumn, greatly to the chagrin of the "unco guid." However, they found a market for them in the South and continued to encourage the massacre of nine negroes that they might have one to carry to a Southern port until the spread of true Christianity aroused a feeling of international indignation which put an end to their inhuman traffic.

Then their eyes were opened to the "iniquity of slavery," for their blood-stained revenue was cut off and they could not even lend their ill-gotten gains on usurious terms to the planters of the South, for this section of the United States had the world's monopoly of the growth of cotton, and was waxing rich. The New Englanders have three distinguishing characteristics: religious intolerance, avarice and envy. Actuated by all three, they commenced the abolitionist agitation which resulted in the civil war, sacrificed hundreds of thousands of human lives, left the South depopulated and nearly ruined, caused Egypt and India to become cotton-growing countries, begat a horde of lying, congress-begging pensioners, and saddled the country with the enormous debt which the Shylocks of the world use as the fulcrum on which they rest the legislative lever which is raising the value of money and lowering the price of human labor.

Such of their descendants as were manly or truly christian have fled from intolerant, gold-worshipping New England in disgust, and have become reputable citizens of the West or South; but those who remain inherit the spirit of their sires and are howling dolefully because the people of the South are wrestling from them what they consider their prescriptive right, the manufacture of raw cotton into cotton goods.

Let them howl! The more they howl the better the people of the South will be pleased. Before long all the spindles and looms of New England will be idle and covered with dust, or removed to their God-ordained habitat, the Southland.

"Though the wheels of God grind slowly,
Yet they grind exceeding small;
Though no man sees the grinding,
With exactness grinds he all."

Despite the set-back its commerce received by reason of the recent yellow fever scare, Mobile is yet confident that she is destined to be the great Southern gateway of commerce. All the people of Alabama will admire the splendid, indomitable pluck of the people of Mobile.

If next Saturday be a fine day, there will according to all reports be a large number in attendance at the horse-swapping convention and turkey shoot. The News trusts that all visitors will leave their whiskey flasks at home, for they will enjoy the day better if sober.

Several reports have reached this office that some young men, or rather hobbledehoys, with more prurient curiosity than manly sense, are in the habit of sneaking around town after nightfall and peering over the fences of the girls' boarding houses with a view to catching a glimpse of the young ladies in their rooms. The girls are happily as unconscious of this miserable espionage as was Lady Godiva when Peeping Tom essayed a like offense and was stricken blind as a punishment, but if the practice is not discontinued some of the two-legged calves are liable to be hurt.

Editor Merrick, of Washington, has scored another victory. Coxey, of Ohio, says the 16 to 1 issue is dead. We believe this is the opinion of every man who has ever rented himself out to Hanna.—Atlanta Constitution.

The Constitution is badly mistaken if it thinks that Mr. Coxey has sold out to anyone. The editor of this paper is personally acquainted with the ex leader of the commonweal army, and knows that—whether his views be or be not too extreme—he is immaculately honest.

The pseudo Democratic organs which chant the praises of the gold standard and berate the party to which they pretend to belong because it adheres to the platform adopted in the last national convention should throw off the lion's skins which conceal their asinine hides and shamefacedly admit that they belong body and soul to the greedy mugwumps who mean the gold standard, J. Pierpont Morgan and Grover Cleveland when they speak of The Holy Trinity.

Our country friends should bring their wives and children with them when they come to the horse-swapping convention and turkey shoot next Saturday, and thus give them a pleasant day and a chance to buy their Cnristmas goods.

UNAFRAID.

BY WILLIAM ERNEST HENLEY.

Out of the night that covers me,
Black as the pit from pole to pole,
I thank whatever gods may be
For my unconquerable soul.

In the fell clutch of circumstance
I have not winced nor cried aloud.
Under the bludgeonings of chance
My head is bloody, but unbowed.

Beyond this place of wrath and tears
Looms but the Horror of the shade;
And yet the menace of the years
Finds and shall find me unafraid.

It matters not how strait the gate,
How charged with punishments the scroll.
I am the master of my fate:
I am the captain of my soul.

BEFORE AND AFTER.

The girls are tired of 'ologies,
Of mathematics sick,
And they say that fancy sewing
Just gives their necks a a crick,
Attendance at the cooking class
Almost makes each one cry,
It makes them think of holidays,
Roast turkey and mince pie.

They soon will scatter to their homes,
Their hearts so gay and light,
With their Christmas presents bearing
A wondrous appetite,
And after kissing all their friends
They'll have no cause to sigh;
On Christmas Day they'll have their fill
Of turkey and mince pie.

Returning, they will be most sad;
Not about friends they leave,
And not for fear of coming tasks
Will those sweet maidens grieve;
But 'neath their hearts they'll have a pain,
'Twill make them wish to die,
The pain that's born of far too much
Roast turkey and mince pie.

GIRLS' POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE.

A Very Pleasant Evening.

The Dormitory Girls Invite Those of the Town to a Masquerade Frolic.

Songs and Recitations

And a General Grand March to Wind Up With Pleased the Guests and Sent Them Home Happy.

Saturday being a holiday, it is customary for the young ladies who reside in the dormitory building to devise some means of self-entertainment for each Saturday evening.

Last Saturday they sent out invitations for a masquerade frolic, and at 6 p. m. over two hundred young ladies, one-third of them in white dominoes and painted masks, were gathered in the recreation room.

Innocent fun reigned supreme, and the girls waltzed with one another with as much apparent enjoyment as if their partners had been mustached representatives of the other sex.

Although the terpsichorean art is not taught at the school, yet most of the pupils are graceful exponents of it and fitted to hold their own at the next Governor's ball.

Songs and recitations diversified the dancing.

Miss Mamie Brown sang "Rock-a-bye" very maternally.

Miss Virginia Prowell recited a a piece concerning a school boy who kissed a little girl, and her auditors evidently sympathised with the boy.

Miss Anna Stacy Pitman recited "Cusha, cusha," with its sad refrain.

Miss Anna May Burton, the school's nightingale, sang "Just Last Light."

Miss Susie Gray recited with considerable ability.

Miss Carrie Lum, whose voice is as clear and vibrant as that of a lark, sang "The Prince with Golden Hair."

All gained much well deserved applause. Misses Sallie Fuller and Emma Randolph, amongst others, were pressed to contribute to the informal program, but the former contented herself with adding to the gayety of the occasion by peals of irrepressible silvery laughter (she always laughs except when Mrs Babb has her eye on her), while the latter thought she did enough by looking handsome.

The festivities were concluded with a grand march, most involute in its figures, in which all took part, then guests and hostesses hied themselves to their rooms to study their Sunday-school lesson.

SCHOOL NOTES.

In the Age Herald voting contest, Miss E. M. Haley is the leading Montevallo lady up to date.

Will Milner, Birmingham's hustling cattle dealer, visited his two cousins at the school last Saturday.

Little Miss Alta Smith, one of the pupils, has cut off her eyelashes so that they might not interfere with her studies.

Some Biblical writer said that "a woman's hair is her glory," and the girls endorse him by secluding themselves on Saturdays and fixing their coiffures.

Winsome Miss Bessie Moore, of Birmingham, who only recently came to the school, is as happy as a clam and says she thinks school life awfully jolly.

An especial invitation is extended to the young ladies of the Institute to inspect the beautiful plush and celluloid Christmas presents just received by Morgan Bros.

The anti-flirting school regulation was unnecessary last Monday, for the girls were engrossed with the dual task of holding their skirts out of the mud and carrying umbrellas.

Secretary S. B. Gibson paid a flying visit to his wife and infant daughter in Birmingham last Sunday, leaving Saturday evening and returning Monday morning. Both Mrs. and Miss Gibson are doing well.

Dr. E. A. Wilson, Birmingham's favorite dentist, was in the city this week attending to his large and increasing practice here, and had the pleasure of working upon some very pretty mouths.

The new well in the rear of the dormitory, which was 87 feet in depth, has caved in. On the return of Capt. Reynolds from Washington it is probable that he will make arrangements to pump water from the spring.

Rev. M. B. Reynolds has to acknowledge that Miss Nellie Peacock is his superior in a foot-race. Last Friday the two sprinted from the dormitory to the music house. The young lady fell once, yet beat the reverend gentleman to the goal.

That Eve's desire for forbidden fruit is inherited by her descendants is exemplified when the girls, who are forbidden to cross the foot bridge leading to South Montevallo, go to the further end of it, touch the prohibited soil with their shoes and return radiant and happy.

F. F. Crowe & Co. have a new and good-looking clerk, Cass Fancher, but it is not on his account that all the girls visit there when let out of school. They are attracted by his beautiful assortment of Christmas presents, comprising objects of art in china and glass, also perfumery and numerous other suitable gifts.

Last Monday morning dawning in a flood of rain, about two dozen young ladies suddenly discovered that they were so sick that the school would have to dispense with their appearance. Among them were four Annies, besides Mamies, Marys, Almas, Ednas, and others. When the sun emerged from behind the clouds in the afternoon, their ailments vanished as quickly as a bad negro when he espies a policeman, and they went shopping with their usual zest.

Miss. Beazell, corresponding secretary of the Young Woman's Christian Association, South, visited the school yesterday and organized an association in the school with 46 charter members. These elected the following officers: Miss Della Ramsey, president; Miss Carrie Watkins, vice president; Miss Fannie Burke, recording secretary; Miss Anastasia Pitman, corresponding secretary; Miss Mattie Clark, treasurer.

Miss Beazell has visited 42 schools in the South, a number of them Industrial, yet said that she had seen none superior to the Girls' Polytechnic School. She visited all the literary and industrial departments, and expressed her delight with the methods of the teachers and the womanly character of the girls.

[She could not have heard them blowing tin trumpets.—Ed.]

DORMITORY NOTES.

Despite the gloom and storm outside, on Friday night, December 10, the Dormitory was made pleasant and the girls kept from being homesick by the soft, sweet music of the "new serenaders," who were as follows:

Miss M. Brown, Guitar.
" N. Meyer, Mandolin.
" P. Barnett, Tenor.
" H. Barnett, Alto.
" B. Stapleton, Alto.
" M. Brown, Soprano.
" W. M. Crawford, Soprano.
" M. Alford, Soprano.

The songs they sang were all very sweet, but the most appropriate was "There's no place like the Dormitory," to the tune of Home, Sweet

The tree which stood in front of the St. George Hotel was cut down yesterday, but Mr. Kroell intends to plant others in due season.

The presents which male relatives and friends will most appreciate are those sold by J. W. Martin. His prices are made to suit girls' pockets.

All visiting town should see F. F. Crowe & Co,'s stock of Xmas presents, fireworks, dolls and other toys, candies and fruits, before making purchases.

It can be had at Kroell's.

M. C. Banks has bought a fine lot in South Montevallo, between those of E. Finley and S. A. McCauley. Upon it he intends to build a handsome residence.

Mrs. Stark, Pleasant Ridge, O., says, "After two doctors gave up my boy to die, I saved him from croup by using One Minute Cough Cure." It is the quickest and most certain remedy for coughs, colds and all throat and lung troubles. F. F. Crowe & Co.

J. H. Savage, of Anniston, was in the city last Saturday, visiting his brother, D. C. Savage. He went on to Brierfield, where he had legal business.

J. H. Brown, who bosses an engine on the Southern railroad, and lives in Birmingham, spent last Sunday in Montevallo with his friends J. G. Bryan and E. M. Daniel.

J. A. Perkins, of Antiquity, O., was for thirty years needlessly tortured by physicians for the cure of eczema. He was quickly cured by using DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve, the famous healing salve for piles and skin diseases. F. F. Crowe & Co.

DORMITORY NOTES.

(Concluded from page five.)

Home, also the merry voice of Miss P. Barnett in "I am going to get married, mama," and "When I was single." In return for the sweet music our newly fledged serenaders were pleasantly surprised with many nice treats, after which all the girls slept serenely until the roll call bell sounded next in the vacant hall Saturday morning.

If it is not X'mas yet, it sounds like it at the Dormitory (or the horns do anyway.)

One of our much loved girls, Miss Maggie Harris, was called home by the sad intelligence of the illness of her grand mother. She is much missed and all hope for her speedy return.

Dr. Frank McLean, of Montgomery, has been up on a visit to his daughters, Lizzie and Annie. His visit was very much enjoyed by all at the Dormitory.

Rev. M. P. Reynolds took supper with the Dormitory daisies Sunday night.

Monday night, immediately after supper, Mr. Will Reynolds brought us an especially ordered string band that we might take an half hour's exercise before studying, which was very much appreciated indeed.

When in our dining room we feel very distinguished, as we have Sam Jones and Christopher Columbus for waiters. Both are of ebon hue.

I suppose our "Saturday night ball" has been heard from, as the editor was a "looker-on."

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

MONTEVALLO, - ALABAMA.

Weyler has left Cuba, but the memory of his monstrous cruelty will never disappear from that unhappy island, exclaims the New York Mail and Express. He goes back to Spain red-handed with the blood of his helpless victims, with his honor besmirched, his name reeking with infamy and his reputation as a soldier forever lost. His departure is like the vanishing of a hideous pestilence.

"Dum-dum" is the curious name of a new bullet of which the British Government has been making a test. Experiments would seem to justify the title; for this small-arm missile produces a wound which is more fatal and terrible than the old bullet of slower velocity. A bullet that makes a larger exit than entrance, even after wreaking havoc within, would certainly strike a soldier dumb-dumb. In America has recently been invented, however, a secret solution by which leaden bullets may be coated so as to render them superior to steel-cased bullets. At a distance of thirty yards some of these coated balls pierced an ax blade and others bored through a flat-iron.

According to the New York Tribune, Mr. Lorrillard, the rich New Yorker who has been living in England some years, "seems to be talking at random. His assertion that Englishmen will not invest money in America even at twenty per cent. income is wild, and his prediction of a currency panic here is still wilder. Is he aware of the fact that gold in the Bank of England would be below the danger line to-day but for our leniency, and that foreigners will probably owe us on trade balance at the expiration of the year $500,000,000? Is he not aware that we sell to Europe what she must have, and buy from her nothing that we must have? Political economy is not taught on English race tracks."

Says Harper's Weekly: "While the English language is spreading over the face of the globe wherever liberty is possible, it is sad to mark the apparent incapacity of the noble German tongue to conquer new territory or even to maintain itself within its own legal limits. In Bohemia it is rapidly disappearing. In Hungary it has been exterminated within the last fifty years. The eastern provinces of Prussia have been in German hands more than 100 years, yet the people there are as little Prussian to-day as when Kosciusko laid down his life for personal liberty. The Danish provinces were conquered more than thirty years ago, yet the new generation speaks Danish and hates the very name of Prussia. In Alsace-Lorraine, men who were babies in 1870 have now served their time in the German army, and are nominally German subjects; yet the German language finds there a resistance insurmountable, even with the aid of a vast army of spies, gendarmes, officials and 60,000 troops. A large Massachusetts manufacturer passed through the province this summer, and had occasion to visit a machine shop at Muhlhausen, employing some 8000 workmen. As an American the manager treated him with frankness, and gave him an opportunity to convince himself that the workmen were French at heart in spite of the years that are past. The Baltic provinces of Russia were German in 1891, but since then Russification has set in with a thoroughness comparable only to the South African rinderpest, and before long German linguistic expansion on that frontier will be as effectually checked as it is in Bohemia, in Posen, in Alsace-Lorraine and on the borders of Denmark. Nor is the German language faring better in the German colonies, for the simple reason that German emigrants prefer almost any colonial flag to their own. The official press of Germany clamors for more warships, in order to protect alleged German colonists in far-away tropical swamps. Territorially, Germany has almost 1,000,000 square miles of colony, but land without population is like a harbor with no commerce."

St. Petersburg papers contend that the growth of German power in the far East, especially in Turkey, is a menace to Russia and France.

THE SOUTH'S ADVANTAGES

For Cotton Manufacture Pointed Out by a New Englander.

RELATIVE CHEAPNESS OF SOUTHERN LABOR

Is the Key to the Serious Situation—The Southern Mills Have Every Natural Advantage, and Are Not Hampered by Legislation.

The action taken by men prominently connected with cotton manufacturing in the East, at a meeting held in Boston, Mass., the past week, shows how surely the South is taking the lead in the manufacture.

Although Boston is the center of the cotton mill business of New England, the men prominently connected with the trade would have little to say concerning the action of the Fall River manufacturers in voting to reduce the wages of 27,000 operatives, beginning January 1. The treasurer of one of the Fall River mills, who was willing to discuss the matter, said he regarded this cut as the beginning of a serious time, not only for the Fall River print mills, but for all the cotton mills in New England.

The key to the whole situation, he said, is the relative cheapness of Southern labor, which could not be better shown than by the fact that it costs a mill in Georgia or North Carolina 3½ cents to produce a pound of material and in New England 6 cents.

With this fact in mind it is evident that the cut of 10 per cent is not going to help matters much, and the only thing that will do any good at present will be a radical cut of, say 20 or 25 per cent. This would inevitably bring on a strike; but, with a cut of 10 or 11 per cent, he says, there would be little likelihood of a strike, as the operatives are well acquainted with the conditions and know that a reduction of some kind is necessary. Even this would still leave a difference of about 25 per cent in the cost of labor in favor of the Southern mill, too great a difference to struggle against successfully.

In the first place, says this treasurer, the southern mills have every natural advantage; they have cheaper cotton and less burdensome taxation. Some of the big mills in Fall River, for instance, had a yearly payment of $10,000, $15,000 and even $20,000 in taxes to make, whereas in Georgia and North Carolina the mills are in many instances exempted from taxation for ten or twelve years.

It is in labor, however, the great difference lies, according to the official quoted, for the labor in the south is as good as it is north, and taken as a whole, is about 33 per cent. cheaper. The southern laborers have had about ten years training in mills started by experienced cotton manufacturers, and attend as many machines and turn out just as good work as operatives in the best New England mills. Another great advantage the southern mills have is not being hampered by legislation. In Massachusetts the hours of laborers are limited to fifty-eight a week, while in the south they are unlimited.

The only hope for the New England mills, according to the speaker, is either in the improvement in the print cloth market, or in a general evening up of conditions between the north and south.

AN IMPORTANT BILL,

Looking to More Effective Quarantine, Offered in Congress.

Senator Caffery, of Louisiana, has introduced a bill for the revision of the quarantine laws, the distinctive feature of which is placing quarantine regulations exclusively in the hands of the national authorities.

The secretary of the treasury is asked to make regulations to prevent the introduction of infectious or contagious diseases into one State from another and such regulations to be enforced by the sanitary authorities of the States or of municipalities when these authorities will undertake to enforce them, but when they fail the President is given authority to execute and enforce them and to adopt "such legitimate measures as in his judgment shall be necessary to prevent the introduction or spread of such diseases."

Representative Hepburn, of Iowa, introduced a similar bill in the house.

CHATTANOOGA CONFEDERATES.

Belonging to Forest Camp, Resolve in Behalf of Cuba.

At the meeting of the chamber of commerce of Chattanooga, Colonel Tomlinson Fort, commander of the N. B. Forrest Camp, Confederate veterans, offered a resolution asking congress to take steps to at once compel Spain to declare the war in Cuba at an end, and in the event Spain refuses to do so, to declare the republic of Cuba a free and independent nation of the world. The presentation of the resolution was greeted with terrific applause.

CHAPTER I.

At the time of the startling occurrences which are to be herein recorded, the office of Jason Garrison, a broker of New York, was situated in a rather unpretending structure on Wall street.

The broker rented the entire building, but he sublet the second and third stories, occupying only the first story for business purposes.

The building was very old and its internal arrangement was rather obsolete, for to enter the broker's office you first passed into a hall which extended through the building, and thence through a side door. From the hall just inside the street door a flight of stairs led upward.

At the rear end of the passage a second flight, much more narrow than the first, also reached the second story, while at their foot a door opened upon an alley in the rear.

At this date it chanced that the third story over the broker's office was unoccupied, but the second story was tenanted as it had been for many years by John Oakburn, the old cashier, who had been employed by Jason Garrison since he first began business in Wall street years ago.

John Oakburn was a man sixty-odd years of age and a widower, but he was not childless. One daughter, Marion by name, remained to cheer and brighten his home with the sunlight of her presence, and the aged cashier's little family consisted only of himself, his daughter and Judith Kredge, a female domestic of uncertain age, who was the sister of the office janitor.

The second-floor flat was much too spacious for the needs of the cashier's family, and furnished apartments were consequently let to such of Mr. Garrison's clerks as desired them, provided always they were approved by the old cashier.

On the night of the 23d of March, 18—, but one of John Oakburn's furnished apartments was occupied. The room was directly over the main office, and its tenant was Stuart Harland, one of the broker's clerks.

The street door was a massive one, as was also the door of the office proper. At night both were always securely locked and bolted. The keys of the office as well as the street door were always in the possession of John Oakburn, who was implicitly trusted by the broker in every way.

For twenty years John Oakburn had been celebrated for his rigid integrity and unvarying, scrupulous honesty, and "on the street," where one desired to vouch in the most positive terms for the character of another, he would say, "He is as honest as old John Oakburn."

Perhaps no man more perfectly deserved the title which he had won, which was far more honorable than any patent of nobility—the title "an honest man."

On day at noon a few days previous to the night of which we are about to write, while John Oakburn was alone in the office, having been detained by some important account, an incident occurred which will serve to illustrate the man's character perfectly.

Mr. Pratt, of the firm of Pratt & Weeks, entered and approached the old cashier in a cunning way in order to sound him with a view to inducing him to become a director of one of those "soap bubble" stock companies which are originated every year, inflate themselves with the money of the unwary and collapse when such a consummation will result to the profit of the "promoters" without bringing themselves within the reach of the law's arms.

John Oakburn listened to the specious arguments of the smooth-tongued bandit of Wall street in passive silence, wholly unmoved by the temptation of sudden wealth held out to him as a glittering bait.

When Pratt concluded, John Oakburn turned his back upon him, saying in a scathing tone:

"No more of this. I value my honor, sir!"

"And yet you are a poor man," retorted Pratt with a covert sneer in his voice.

"In gold, yes; but not in principle."

"Your sentiments are quite romantic and poetical, but this is a practical age of money values."

"True; but were I to listen to you I should become as poor in character as I am in pocket."

"Our scheme would be a secret. No one would ever know it."

"I should know it. No, sir, your scheme is villainous. Seek your confederate elsewhere!"

Such was the man the story of whose fate we place before our readers.

It was the night of the 23d March, 18—.

Stuart Harland, the young clerk who occupied the apartment directly over the broker's office in John Oakburn's flat, had fallen asleep on his bed without removing his clothing.

Suddenly he leaped up, wide awake, and exclaimed:

"What! Have I overslept!" and glancing at an alarm clock set to ring at one o'clock, he added, "no, the clock has not struck; it is now only twenty minutes of one."

Stuart Harland rubbed his eyes and looked perplexed.

"What awakened me? Certainly it was some unusual sound. I have a confused recollection of hearing a loud voice," he thought, and seated upon the side of the bed he listened for a moment.

No sound broke the absolute quietude of the night within the dwelling.

From without the sighing wind wafted to his ears the unaccountable noises of the streets of the streets of a great city which are never hushed to silence the livelong night.

"Strange, this. Could I have been dreaming? Well, it matters not, I am awake in time; that is the important point," the young man reflected.

Then he began to place a few things in a light traveling-bag, and as he did so he quite unconsciously gave expression to the thoughts which were in his mind.

"I must not miss the 1 o'clock train or all is lost. The discovery will not be made until to-morrow. Perhaps there is yet time. Oh, what consummate scoundrels those men Pratt and Weeks are, and yet they are beyond the pale of the law. It cannot reach them," he said.

He was a handsome, noble-looking young man, this Stuart Harland, one upon whom nature had set the stamp of a true gentleman, and his fine, honest eyes, which met yours frankly, inspired you with confidence at the very first glance.

In the office they would tell you that Stuart Harland was inclined to be rather careless and inattentive to business, but they would add that he was the best fellow in the world, unless you happened to question Levi Kredge, the janitor.

It was no secret that Stuart Harland was engaged to his employer's daughter, Miss Edna, and if you were to ask how it came about that Jason Garrison had consented to the suit of a young man who was "only a clerk," and to whom the duties of a broker's office were not the most agreeable, and who had exhibited but little aptitude for the business, anyone at "Garrison's," as the office was designated on the street, would have said:

"The young man has great expectations. Therein is the secret. At the death of a certain aunt, a maiden lady of rather more than mature age, he will inherit a fortune."

This was quite true, though Stuart never counted in the least on dead men's shoes, and Edna Garrison loved him without a mercenery thought, no matter what may have been the secret sentiment of her father.

Having hastily thrust the few articles into his traveling bag which he desired to take with him, Stuart Harland quitted the apartment.

It was undoubtedly something which he regarded as most important which induced him to undertake a secret midnight journey, as we have gathered from his mutterings.

There was no light in the hall without Stuart's room at this hour, and the passage and the stairs leading down to the street door were enveloped in gloom.

"I do not wish to disturb any one. In fact, I desire that no one should know of my departure," said Stuart to himself as he silently descended the stairs in the darkness.

At the foot he paused suddenly, for he thought he heard a noise from the office, and it sounded to him like a half-stifled groan.

Stuart was startled.

At this hour he thought there could be no one in the office unless burglars had clandestinely entered, and with bated breath he listened in profound silence for an instant.

There was no repetition of the alarming sound, but a thrill trembled through his nerves as he thought:

"John Oakburn may have left the money he drew from the bank just before closing hours in the safe in the office."

With the laudable idea in mind of protecting his employer's property if it was endangered, Stuart took a step in the direction of the office door.

At that precise moment it was opened.

With the utmost celerity Stuart recoiled against the wall where the shadows were dense and black as a blade of light flashed through the gloom from the open door.

A young woman with a lamp in one hand and a paper and something with a polished surface from which the light was reflected clutched in the other, glided stealthily out of the office.

"Marion Oakburn," said Harland, mentally, for the young girl was John Oakburn's daughter, and he experienced a feeling of the greatest relief as he recognized her.

"Her father must have sent her for for some paper, I suppose, as unseasonable as is the hour, for the old man sometimes spends half the night at office work in his own apartment," thought Harland.

"Luckily she has not seen me, and if all goes well I shall have returned to my room by daybreak, and no one will be the wiser," he continued.

The beautiful features of the cashier's daughter were livid with a dreadful pallor. Her eyes were dilated with an expression of unutterable horror and she trembled from head to foot.

Silently she closed the door and proceeded to insert the great key which Stuart knew so well into the lock, but her hand trembled so that metal rattled against metal and the sound seemed startlingly loud in the midst of the profound silence.

The girl clung to the door as though about to fall to the floor, while her breath came in frightened gasps, but with what seemed like a desperate effort she turned the key in the lock, and then, casting a furtive glance about her, she fled.

Along the dark hall she flitted and gained the rear stairs, up which she darted as though she fancied she was pursued by invisible dangers.

"Ah," thought Harland, smiling, "she is timid; the darkness and the silence of the night frightened her, and yet I fancied she possessed more force of character. Indeed we clerks in the office have often said among ourselves that beautiful, sad-eyed Marion Oakburn was composed of the material of which heroines are made."

But now that there was no reason for further delay Harland unbolted and unlocked the street door and passed out. Then softly closing the door he locked it by means of a night key, and casting a glance up and down the street which seemed just at this time to be deserted, at least in this immediate neighborhood, he walked swiftly away.

The night was cool and Harland wore a spring overcoat which he buttoned closely, as a stiff night breeze swept up from the water and struck him chillingly.

He was aware that he had barely time to reach the Grand Central Depot in time to catch a certain train on which he wished to leave the city, and he delayed not on the way.

Meanwhile a quarter of an hour elapsed and all was silence and darkness in the house which Stuart Harland had just left. But presently the stillness was broken by the sound of an opening door, and Marion Oakburn emerged from her sleeping-room, gliding forth stealthily. In her hand she carried the lamp as before, but the paper and the metallic something from which the light had glistened when Harland saw her was no longer in her possession.

For a moment she stood motionless as a statue and listened, while we note how extremely beautiful she is.

Marion Oakburn possessed a form above the average height of women, which might have been the ideal of a Grecian sculptor, and her rare brunette loveliness was unsurpassed. Here was the dark and radiant beauty of Egypt's queen, but Cleopatra did not rival her, and Marion's eyes sparkled with the light of a pure heart and a noble nature.

But there was an expression of sadness upon her perfect features—a look of melancholy that was pitiful, and it led one to think that sorrow had entered her young life; that in the heart of the beautiful girl there was some blighting grief. And yet Marion was ever cheerful, as though sustained by sorrow's pale star—hope.

Marion Oakburn was twenty-four years of age, and therefore in the full bloom and perfect development of a glorious womanhood.

As she stood at the door of her bedchamber listening, she detected no breach of the silence, and so she glided along the passage to the back stairs noiselessly and gained the lower hall. There she passed directly to the office door, which she unlocked, and, removing the key, she proceeded to the street entrance.

There she discovered that the bolts were drawn, and that only the night-latch secured it.

Marion seemed startled at this, and she reeled back against the wall, where she stood for a moment trembling slightly, but with her brows contracted, as though in deep thought.

If she was mentally debating some question, she arrived at a conclusion almost instantly, for with a hand that no longer trembled she unlocked the street door.

Then leaving the entrance to the office unguarded by bolt or bar, Marion again retraced her steps to the rear stairs, which she ascended. Half way up she clutched the handrail in a convulsive way and paused for a moment to listen, for she fancied she heard footsteps in the hall above. She did not hear the sound again, and believing she was deceived by her imagination she continued up the stairs.

Could her eyes have penetrated the darkness as she paused upon the stairs she would have seen the dark, cruel face of Judith Kredge, the female domestic, peering down at her from the passage above.

When she reached the landing Marion saw no one, but she did not return to her own apartment. On the contrary she went to the door of the sleeping-room occupied by Judith Kredge.

Marion knocked, and a moment subsequently the woman who had just played the part of a spy, opened the door.

She was clad in a loose, dark wrapper, which she seemed to have hastily donned.

"What is it, Miss Marion? You are not ill, I hope?" she said, feigning surprise and solicitude.

"No; I am not ill, but I cannot sleep. Father has not come home. I have vainly listened for his footsteps on the stairs all night. What can keep him out so late. Oh, I fear some misfortune has befallen him."

"Perhaps he has returned and entered the office as he sometimes does, after business hours. Do you not remember he once fell asleep there and remained almost all night before he awoke? Shall we go down and see?"

"Yes, yes; why did I not think of that before, I wonder, Judith."

The woman's eyes gleamed intelligently, but she made no answer.

She accompanied Marion down the front stairs.

They reached the office door and opened it.

Marion entered first, lamp in hand, and Judith Kredge came also behind her.

They had scarcely crossed the threshold when they recoiled, and Marion uttered a cry of horror.

A terrible sight met their eyes.

"My father has been murdered!" gasped Marion in an awful voice.

CHAPTER II.

Marion and her companion, Judith Kredge, saw John Oakburn prone upon the floor beside a small writing table which had been overturned. He had fallen face downward and blood had trickled down the side of his neck and formed a little pool upon the white floor beside his head.

For a moment Marion seemed about to faint and she clung to Judith Kredge dumb with horror, while her blood seemed turning to ice in her veins, and she experienced a painful contraction of the heart.

Judith Kredge was more composed, but there was terror in the expression of the woman's hard, immobile features, and a tremor in her harsh, shrill voice, as she said:

"This is murder and robbery, too, I think. See, the safe is open."

As she spoke she pointed to a large safe in the side of the office, the door of which stood wide open.

With an effort which cost all the will power of which she was capable, Marion regained her strength and sprang to her father's side. With the lamp in her hand she knelt beside him and scanned his livid face.

If there had been a hope in her mind that the vital principle was not yet extinct, it was crushed as she gazed upon her beloved parent's features, for she saw that he was indeed dead.

"Poor father! Poor father!" wailed Marion in heart-broken tones, and bitter tears streamed down her cheeks and fell upon the livid face where the dread white shadow rested.

Judith Kredge stood watching the bereaved girl, and there was a strange exultant expression in her venomous eyes.

"They have killed my father to rob the safe," said Marion, presently, and the sound of her voice seemed to arouse Judith Kredge, for she cried:

"Yes; and we must not delay. The alarm must be given."

"Run to the door and call the police. You may be heard; and call Mr. Harland," said Marion.

"Yes, yes. To think that your father should be murdered here in his office and we could not help him," answered the woman. And, muttering to herself in an excited way, she ran to the street door and threw it open.

The next moment her shrill, harsh voice rang out upon the night.

"Help! Police! Murder!" she shrieked.

It was a cry which, heard at the dead of night, might well startle and thrill the stoutest heart.

Thrice Judith Kredge uttered this terrible cry, and then she saw a police officer hurrying down the street toward her. Waiting not for his arrival, she darted up the stairs to Stuart Harland's room, and knocked loudly on the door, at the same time screaming:

"Awake! Awake! Mr. Oakburn is killed—murdered!"

Of course she received no answer, and she tried the door, which opened readily, and entered the apartment in which it chanced Stuart Harland had left the gas burning faintly.

Judith Kredge gave utterance to a surprised exclamation as she saw that the room was untenanted, and with an expression of blank amazement on her features she flew to a closet in which she knew Stuart Harland kept his valise, and threw it open.

Suddenly a look of intelligence and cunning supplemented the expression of perplexity which her features had momentarily assumed, and she ran down stairs and gained the office again.

"Mr. Harland has gone, and taken his valise with him!" she cried.

Marion seemed thunderstruck.

She had risen, and, starting forward, exclaimed:

"Gone! Mr. Harland gone!"

"Yes, he has fled!"

"It cannot be!" gasped Marion.

"It is true."

"No, no. That he is not in his room does not imply that he has fled."

"But he retired as usual. My room is next to his, and I heard him moving about but a few minutes before you called me."

Marion sprang to Judith's side and clutched her arm.

"Do not tell that. I beg, I implore you do not tell a living soul that you heard Stuart Harland in his room a few moments before we discovered my father. If you do you will direct a dreadful suspicion to an innocent man," she said in intense, thrilling tones.

Before Judith Kredge could answer, the door opened and the policeman who had heard the cry entered the office.

"What's this! A man killed!" exclaimed the policeman, and while Marion hurriedly explained how she had discovered her father, he proceeded to examine the dead.

"Ah, shot through the back of his head! Burglar's work, no doubt," continued the officer, glancing at the open safe.

"I'll turn in the alarm and we shall have help here in no time," he added; and running to the street door he began to rap with his club to call an officer from the next beat.

In a moment or so the policeman he was calling arrived, and his co-laborer sent him to telephone the alarm to headquarters while he returned to the office.

In a few moments a sergeant of police and several officers of the precinct, with Mr. Paxton, of the detective service of the city, arrived.

Marion and Judith Kredge had remained in the office.

The detective and the police at once began to make the usual investigation.

First, the body of the victim of the crime was examined, and the nature of the wound which occasioned death was duly noted. The face of the dead was then covered, and the sergeant ordered that the body be not disturbed until the inquest.

After this the room was carefully examined, and every detail of its appearance minutely observed.

The contents of the large safe, the door of which was open, were strewn about as though some one had hurriedly searched it; but the lock had not been forced, although it was one of those intricate combinations devised to baffle burglars.

The key of the safe was in the lock, and as Marion stated that it was the one her father always carried, Mr. Paxton said:

"Probably the old gentleman had himself opened the safe when he was surprised by the assassin."

"I do not agree with you, sir," said the police sergeant stiffly. "It is my impression that this safe was opened by some one besides John Oakburn who knew the combination, and who took the keys from his victim after killing him."

"Possibly," assented Paxton.

The table which was overturned beside the dead man was righted, and pen, ink, paper, and a small clock which had fallen upon the floor, were replaced. The ink on the pen was scarcely dry, and it was noted that the clock had stopped at twenty minutes of one o'clock—the very time when Stuart Harland had awakened from a sound sleep.

"The murdered man clutched the table and overturned it as he fell, and then the clock stopped. I infer therefore that the shot which killed him was fired at twenty minutes of one o'clock," said Paxton.

"The ink yet on the pen may be accepted as proof that the victim of this crime was engaged in writing just before he was killed. Let us see if we can discover what he wrote?" continued the detective.

He then examined the papers on the table, but he could find none that had been recently written.

Paxton shook his head as if he was not fully satisfied.

The office was divided into two compartments, and having now concluded their investigation of the outer office, the police and the detective entered the interior room.

This apartment was the clerk's room, and it was provided with the usual desks and other necessary office fixtures. There was also a small safe in the interior office which was found to be locked.

Marion and Judith Kredge had followed the investigators into the interior office, and when the latter turned their attention to the small safe, Marion said:

"That is my father's private safe."

"I congratulate you, then, for its contents are probably secure," said the detective.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Seamless Boats.

There is a growing demand for the seamless boat, which seems to be able to stand any amount of rough work. This boat is pressed out of an ingot of steel and shaped by hydraulic power, and it fulfills all the requirements of an ordinary boat in a remarkably ingenious manner. It is claimed for these boats that they will last twice as long as wooden ones, that there is less danger of their capsizing, and that they are less liable to be affected by changes of climate. The method by which the seamless boat is constructed is a larger application of the method which has long been used in this country for manufacturing cooking utensils and other articles of small dimensions.

Lord Kelvin calculates that the number of molecules in a cubic inch of any gas is 100,000,000,000,000,000,000,000, and in each of these molecules there are several atoms moving among themselves at the rate of seventy miles a minute.

Naturalists are much interested in an announcement that H. L. Popham has discovered and brought back from Siberia an egg of the curlew sandpiper, authentic eggs of which hitherto have been unknown. The real nesting-place is now located in the tundra of the Yenissel.

Acetylene is now being experimented with in lighting omnibuses in Paris. A generator weighing twenty-nine pounds is carried under the front steps. Each load of carbide—about three-quarters of a pound—produces three cubic feet of gas, which furnishes a sixteen-candle power light for six hours, according to a statement in Machinery.

Since the so-called harnessing of the waste power of Niagara Falls and its conversion into electric force the little city of Niagara Falls has become noted as a centre, having more factories devoted to the manufacture of chemicals than any other place in the world. Its plant for the manufacture of chlorate of potash is the first of the kind in the country. The raw material—muriate of potash—comes from Strassfurt, in Germany.

Human perspiration has been proved to possess toxic qualities, and the poisonous qualities of the exudations are shown to be greatest after vigorous muscular exertion. Guinea pigs and rabbits were killed during the investigations of French scientists by inoculation of perspiration taken from the flannel shirt of a young man in perfect health who had sweat profusely while dancing. That taken from a glove worn by a young lady heated by the same exercise was equally deadly in M. Arloing's recent experiments.

Dallas News: A New England paper says that Texas negroes are happy only in watermelon season. New England is superb in her ignorance. Texas possums are ripe in October, and the crop excels that of all other States combined. With the streams full of catfish in springtime, the summer filled with watermelons, the autumn and winter with possums and all the seasons percolated with revivals and "baptizin's," the Texas negroes are happy all the time.

The New York Bible Society last year distributed 60,424 Bibles and Testaments in this city. Some idea of the cosmopolitan sides of the greater city may be gathered from the fact that the books distributed were in twenty-four different languages, not dialects, but basic languages.

BUSINESS MEN'S MEETING.

Since October the merchants of Montevallo have had to pay freight rates greatly in excess of those paid by Birmingham merchants. Means can be adopted which will put an end to this discrimination. To discuss this and other matters of vital importance to the business men of Montevallo, a meeting of all such is called for Monday, Dec. 27th, 1897, at 2 p. m., in the office of Mr. James M. Reynolds.

BY ORDER.

MAPLESVILLE.

James DuBose, who for the past four months has been attending lectures on dentistry at Atlanta, has returned home to spend the holidays with his parents and friends.

T. U. Crumpton gave a capital dinner to the M. & O. R. R. officials and clerks Sunday evening at two o'clock. Civil engineers and many others of the construction corps from all parts of the new road partook of Mr. Crumpton's hospitality. All enjoyed themselves immensely.

Miss Annie Jones has returned home from a visit to Birmingham Junction, much to the delight of her many friends.

The many friends of D. C. Savage and family sympathize with them in their bereavement in the loss of their son, Homer.

Ensley Cooper conducted prayer-meeting Sunday night.

D. C. Savage, of Montevallo, was in town Monday.

Burglars entered the residence of T. U. Crumpton Saturday night about 12.30 o'clock. They went through safes, cupboards, etc., and tried to open Mr. Crumpton's door, but found it secured on the inside. They then essayed to enter another room, but were frightened away by screams from one of the inmates of the house. The only thing they took was a large piece of cake. The burglars were evidently Republicans, because they did not take the silverware which was on the table. Probably they were Prohibitionists, for they did not take any wine, although there were several kinds of fine wines easy of access. It is thought that they were professionals and only wanted money. One carried a dark lantern.

One of our boys was sadly disappointed Sunday because by the late arrival of the Selma train he missed seeing his "girl".

J. Waller Graham spent a pleasant Sunday eveninig with Miss "Abney," his best girl.

John Foshee and his lovely bride arrived Friday evening from Montevallo. Mrs. Foshee was well known here as Miss Bessie Savage, and she is welcomed back to Maplesville.

Her friends are sorry to hear that Miss Lily Savage is on the sick list. They sincerely hope for her recovery.

Wishing all the readers of the Montevallo News a merry Christmas and happy New Year.

UNCLE TIGE.

CALERA.

OUR NEIGHBORS.

Sam Large, of Calera, is here on a visit to his mother.

Frank Cunningham, of Dogwood, visited his Montevallo friends on Monday.

John Hunter, Maylene's arbiter of fashion, graced Montevallo with his presence last Friday.

Dr. and Mrs. Hargrove, of Maylene, made Montevallo their Christmas shopping point last Friday.

Miss Ada Mulkey, one of Brierfield's belles, did her Christmas shopping in Montevallo last Friday.

Dr. R. C. Jones, Dogwood's coming medicus, bought his Christmas gifts in Montevallo last Monday.

The wife and mother of Henry Splawn spent Monday and considerable money in town buying goods for the holidays.

Dr. G. W. Shackelford, dentist, will visit Montevallo Monday, December 27th, to remain only three days. All who need dental work can find him at the St. George hotel. Dr. Shackelford's work speaks for itself, and to the people of Montevallo he needs no introduction.

Prof. J. F. Thomas spent a few hours in Montevallo on Monday. His attempt to establish a school at Bethlehem has failed because of want of children in some families and apathy on the part of the parents of others. He is open to teach school anywhere and should receive offers, as he is known as an educated, energetic pedagogue. His address is Jemison, Ala.

MERRY CHRISTMAS!

That is what all are now wishing for others, and for that reason are trying to increase their happiness by giving them tokens of affection and esteem.

USEFUL PRESENTS BEST

There is no disguising the fact that times are hard. Five cent cotton gives little, if any, profit to the people. Useful necessaries will be more appreciated as presents than useless nicknacks.

A hat, a coat or a suit of clothes,
Are always welcome, as every one knows,
Some piece of furniture, table or chair,
Would please your wife or daughter fair.
We have hundreds of things for which people sigh
In vain, for want of the money to buy.
Our low prices bring competitors to their knees,
We ask you to call. Yours, ready to please,

ALABAMA SCHOOLS

DEFICIENT IN NUMBER AND QUALITY AS COMPARED WITH THOSE OF OTHER STATES.

Today in Alabama there exists a state of affairs educational that should warn every citizen that there must be a change. When we boast of our greatness in the commercial world, then turn to the educational and see where we stand, it seems to belie our former statement.

Think of it, only three states exceed us in illiteracy. To advertise the fact that Alabama is an everlasting hill of wealth is no telling inducement to capitalists and immigrants when we can say so little of our educational facilities. It is a strange thing that our business men should, with all their shrewdness, neglect this vital issue.

Alabama may point with pride to her almost fabulous resources, yet unless we do something to improve our common school facilities it will not avail us much. What man, what people desire to locate in a state where the facilities for educating their children are poor, though business be good. It is one of the first questions asked, "Have you good schools?"

People of Alabama, of every avocation of life, think of this question and let every one do his or her part to remedy it. The total limit of taxation by our constitution is $1.25 per hundred dollars. This is county and state. It may be said that we have high taxation. We have the lowest tax rate of any state in the union.

Philadelphia paid last year $64 09 per capita pupil; Alabama $1 28 per capita pupil. Philadelphia alone expending $3,500,000 or over five times the amount of our entire state. Does this look like a high rate? Comparisons are invidious. The average amount raised per tax payer for Alabama is $2.14. New York city alone exceeds that $2 54. Mississippi, strictly an agricultural state, built a school house for nearly every day of the year, in 1896. Alabama, none.

Alabama gives her pupils the least average number of school days of any state, save one. She gives the lowest amount per pupil, $1.28, save South Carolina, $1.19. Alabama has the lowest per cent. of enrollment of any state except Louisiana. Alabama's per cent. of pupils enrolled, 55.83. Louisiana shows an increase from 1889-90 to 1893-94, while Alabama shows a decrease.

Thus it is in everything concerning our common schools. There is only one item in which Alabama stands any comparison with our more progressive states. It is in normal schools. Alabama certainly needs better educational facilities. The greatest need is more revenue. But with a better system of supervision than our laws at present give us a great improvement could be made. To make any radical changes in our public school system will require a new constitution, but much improvement can be made with more systematic supervision than we now have. There is no definite policy mapped out between state superintendent and county superintendent.

While most of our towns and cities have good schools many of the smaller towns are needing them. The country districts frequently have too many schools to the detriment of good schools.

Incompetent teachers are employed in many cases because of cheapness. The school term is too short in many districts. One thing sure and certain above all else—our people need to become interested in having these reforms brought about. To this task every person who feels an interest in the future welfare of our state must give his or her support. To this task there is one great factor which can render invaluable service to the cause of education, to our state, and to our future citizenship. It is the press of Alabama. EDWARD L. PATTON.

MONTEVALLO, ALABAMA.

The city of Berlin has closed its annual accounts with a surplus of over $2,000,000. This money has been saved by the different departments, most of which spent far less than had been granted to them.

At the last meeting of the Orientalist Congress in Paris, Rhys Davis opposed the notion that the pessimism of the Hindus was a result of their depressing climate. He found, on the contrary, that the climate was conducive to vigorous mental efforts.

E. S. White, of Bernidji, a pioneer trapper and hunter of Minnesota, stakes his reputation on the prediction of a cold winter. He says the wild animals, deer particularly, have especially thick coats, and that the muskrats are building their nests high and with thick walls—signs which, he say, have never failed within his experience.

What nonsense to talk of a collision between Spain and the United States, observes the New York Sun. It could not come to a shot. The infatuated Spanish people might be willing to fight; that is easy to believe of a population utterly ignorant and inspired by insular traditions. But Spain's creditors are not ignorant, and Spain is a notoriously insolvent debtor. In the face of a visible rupture with the United States her bank doors could not keep open six hours. The thing called Spain is a house of cards; only the touch of a finger is needed to bring it down in collapse. One thing that does challenge our admiration is the way her politicians are playing their "busted flush."

The special committee sent to Germany by the corporation of Manchester, in order to discover the cause of England's industrial decadence, found extraordinary development of technical education abroad. Alderman Crossfield, a member of the Committee, said: "The English workers are half savages, when compared with the intelligent artisans of Germany." Councilor Pythian, a member of the British Amalgamated Society of Engineers, remarked: "The engines and dynamos made in Germany put to shame most of the work in the English shops." These are but types of the impressions coloring the whole report of the Manchester Committee, the tenor of which is amply confirmed by the multiplying signs of the illusory character of the British pretensions to industrial supremacy.

Americanism can be carried too far, and almost everybody will admit, opines the New York Times, that Mr. J. B. Ford, the Cincinnati man now under arrest in London, showed exaggerated patriotism when he said that he preferred to be hanged in the United States rather than to live any longer in England. Really, it's not so bad as that, and anyway Mr. Ford will not be hanged when he gets here, for he has done nothing worse than rob a coffin company. That is a serious, almost a grave, crime, but it is not a capital offense. If it were, perhaps he would be tempted to resist extradition. An American prison may be more enjoyable than a London lodging house, but it is mere prejudice that asserts the superiority of our gallows to even the most stuffy of British hall bedrooms. It is always best to be just and to speak within bounds.

Ex-President Cleveland's definition of a self-made man differs from the ordinary acceptation of that term, but it is one, thinks the Boston Herald, that "will stand the test of intelligent scrutiny. The self-made man, as defined by the ex-President, is he who has made the most of himself, not necessarily by his own unaided efforts, but with whatever assistance he could secure. Whether this definition is strictly correct or not, it is an interesting one, and it rather adds to than detracts from the merit that attaches to self-help."

ANNIE AND WILLIE'S PRAYER.

'Twas the eve before Christmas; "Good-night" had been said,
And Annie and Willie had crept into bed;
There were tears on their pillows and tears in their eyes,
And each little bosom was heavy with sighs,
For to-night their stern father's command had been given
That they must retire precisely at seven
Instead of eight; for they troubled him more
With questions unheard of than ever before.
He told them he thought this delusion a sin,
No such a thing as "Santa Claus" ever had been,
And he hoped, after this, he should never more hear
How he scrambled down chimneys with presents each year.
And this is the reason why two little heads
So restlessly tossed on their soft, downy beds.

Eight, nine, and the clock on the steeple tolled ten—
Not a word had been spoken by either till then;
When Willie's sad face from the blanket did peep,
And whispered, "Dear Annie, is you fast asleep?"
"Why, no; brother Willie," a sweet voice replies.
"I've tried in vain, but I can't shut my eyes;
For somehow it makes me so sorry because
Dear papa had said there is no Santa Claus;
Now we know there is, and it can't be denied,
For he came every year before mamma died;
But then I've been thinking that she used to pray,
And God would hear everything mamma would say,
And perhaps she asked him to send Santa Claus here
With the sacks full of presents he brought every year."
"Well, why tan't we p'ay dest as mamma did then,
And asked Him to send him with presents aden?"
"I've been thinking so, too," and without a word more
Four bare little feet bounded out on the floor,
And four little knees the soft carpet pressed,
And two tiny hands were clasped close to each breast.

"Now, Willie, you know we must firmly believe
That the presents we ask for we're sure to receive.
You must wait just as still till I say amen,
And by that you will know that your turn has come then—
Dear Jesus, look down on my brother and me,
And grant us the favor we're asking of Thee:
I want a nice book full of pictures, a ring,
A writing desk, too, that shuts with a spring.
Bless papa, dear Jesus, and cause him to see
That Santa Claus loves us as much even as he;
Don't let him get fretful and angry again
At dear brother Willie and Annie, amen!"
"Please, Desus, 'et Santa Taus tome down to-night,
And bring us some presents before it is 'ight.
I want he should dive me a bright little box,
Full of ac'obats, some other nice blocks,
And a bag full of tandy, a book and a toy
Amen, and then, Desus, I'll be a dood boy."
Their prayers being ended, they raised up their heads,
And with hearts light and cheerful again sought their beds;
They were soon lost in slumber—both peaceful and deep,
And with fairies in dreamland were roaming in sleep.

Eight, nine and the little French clock had struck ten
Ere the father had thought of his children again;
He seems now to hear Annie's half-smothered sighs,
And to see the big tears standing in Willie's blue eyes.
"I was harsh with my darlings," he mentally said,
"And should not have sent them so early to bed;
But when I was troubled—my feelings found vent,
For bank stock to-day has gone down ten per cent.
But of course they'd forgot their troubles ere this,
But then I denied them the thrice asked for kiss;
But just to make sure I'll steal up to the door,
For I never spoke harsh to my darlings before."

So saying he softly ascended the stairs,
And arriving at their door heard both of their prayers.
His Annie's "bless papa" draws forth the big tears
And Willie's grave promise falls sweet on his ears.
"Strange, strange, I've forgotten," said he with a sigh,
"How I longed when a child to have Christmas draw nigh.
I'll atone for my harshness," he inwardly said,
"By answering their prayer, ere I sleep in my bed."

Then he turned to the stairs and softly went down,
Threw off velvet slippers and silk dressing gown,
Donned hat, coat and boots, and was out in the street—
A millionaire facing the cold winter sleet;
He first went to a wonderful "Santa Claus" store
(He knew it, for he'd passed it the day before.)
And there he found crowds on the same errand as he,
Making purchase of presents, with glad heart and free,
Nor stopped he until he had bought everything
From a box full of candy to a tiny gold ring.
Indeed, he kept adding so much to his store
That the various presents outnumbered a score!
Then homeward he turned with his holiday load,
And with Aunt Mary's aid in the nursery 'twas stowed.
Miss Dolly was seated beneath a pine tree,
By the side of a table spread out for a tea;
A writing desk then in the centre was laid,
And on it a ring for which Annie had prayed;
Four acrobats painted in yellow and red
Stood with a block house on a beautiful sled;
There were balls, dogs and horses, books pleasing to see
And birds of all colors were perched in the tree;
While Santa Claus, laughing, stood up in the top,
As if getting ready for more presents to drop;
And as the fond father the picture surveyed
He thought for his trouble he had amply been paid;
And he said to himself as he brushed off a tear,
"I'm happier to-night than I have been for a year,
I've enjoyed more true pleasure than ever before.
What care I if bank stock falls ten per cent. more?
Hereafter I'll make it a rule, I believe,
To have Santa Claus visit us each Christmas Eve."

So thinking he gently extinguished the light,
And tripped downstairs to retire for the night.
As soon as the beams of the bright morning sun
Put the darkness to flight and the stars one by one,
Four little blue eyes out of sleep opened wide,
And at the same moment the presents espied.
Then out of their beds they sprang with a bound,
The very gifts prayed for were all of them found;
They laughed and they cried in their innocent glee,
And shouted for papa to come quick and see
What presents old Santa Claus had brought in the night
(Just the things they had wanted) and left before light.

"And now," said Annie, in a voice soft and low,
"You'll believe there's a Santa Claus, papa, I know;"
While dear little Willie climbed up on his knee,
Determined no secret between them should be;
And told, in soft whispers, how Annie had said,
That their dear, blessed mamma, so long ago dead,
Used to kneel down and pray by the side of her chair,
And that God, up in heaven, had answered her prayer!
"Then we dot up and prayed dust as well as we tould,
And Dod answered our prayers; now wasn't He dood?"
"I should say that He was if He sent you all theso,
And knew just what presents my children would please
(Well, well, let him think so, the dear little elf,
'Twould be cruel to tell him I did it myself.")

Blind father! who caused your stern heart to relent?
And the hasty word spoken so soon to repent?
'Twas the Being who bade you steal softly up stairs,
And made you His agent to answer their prayers.

LEGEND OF THE MISTLETOE.

BY FLAVEL SCOTT MINES.

IGHT merrily blazed the yule log in the square open fire place, and the dark oak panels of the little room caught and threw back again in softer color the red light of the flames. The room was filled with the rosy glow, and black shadows danced in time to the flickering firelight on the floor and walls. At times the fierce wind outside blew down the chimney a shower of snow which fell with a sizzle upon the crackling log, but the flames only burned the brighter as though determined to outdo the Christmas storm, and the noise of the gale was lost in the merry splutter and crack of the fire.

Before the log sat a youth and maiden, and for a little time they sat in silence reading their future in the red coals; and though neither told the other of their dream each felt that their futures were the same. Suddenly the young man turned toward the girl. "I bought a bit of mistletoe to-day," he said; "do you know the origin of its use? Shall I tell you the story?"

She looked at him dreamily. "Yes," she answered, her lips scarcely moving.

"And will you promise not to interrupt?"

"Y-es," was the low reply.

He laid the green spray with its crimson berries upon her brown curls, and bending near her began:

"Baldur, the son of Odin, the old Norse god, was called the Good because of his kind and loving nature, and wherever he went among the gods or men he was received with the kiss of peace." The young man hesitated a moment, then he caught sight of the green spray that crowned the fair face of the girl and he was emboldened. "Like this," he whispered. He waited a moment and then seeing the brown eyes turned inquiringly toward him he continued, "But Baldur in his dreams was warned that his life was in peril, so he called the gods together and giving them the kiss of peace—the gods were numbered by the score," he explained, "and you promised not to interrupt. He told them of his fears and they resolved to do all in their power to prevent the calamity. Frigga, the wife of Odin, made all things on earth swear not to injure him, but she overlooked the mistletoe, which she thought too puny. She did not know its power as I do. All right, I'll continue. After this Baldur used to supply all the fun for the gods, who would throw all sorts of things at him and improve their aim because they knew he could not be harmed. And Baldur used to return a kiss for each blow, and if he got hit six times he would give six—like this. But Loki, that unpleasant fellow whom no one used to ever kiss, (like this) learned that the mistletoe had taken no oath, so he got a little spray and sharpened it and then went to watch the fun. There was an old blind god called Hodur who couldn't hit Baldur because he couldn't see him, and Loki went up to him and whispered, 'Don't you want to hit Baldur and get a kiss?' (like this) and Hodur said 'Yep.' So Liki gave him the mistletoe and guided his throw and Baldur was pierced through and he fell dead and he couldn't kiss anybody any more, (like this) and everybody was stricken with sorrow. So after trying to get back his life they gave up the job and laid him on his ship, placed a spray of mistletoe over his head and all the Valkyrs, a lot of pretty girls who used to be messenger boys for the gods, came and kissed him, (like this—and this) and that is why on Christmas eve anybody can kiss anybody else (like this) if they only have a spray of mistletoe over their head."

"What has Christmas Eve got to do with it?" asked the maiden, reaching for the spray in her hair. As she said it she started. "Oh, Tom!" she cried, "these berries are red! How could you make such a mistake? All your time wasted and——"

The young man looked perplexed. How had he failed, he wondered? The results of mistletoe could not have been different. He was about to ask when the girl started to her feet and like a frightened spirit passed through the portieres. Was she displeased, and was this his dismissal? As he pondered thus a hand thrust aside the curtains and a face that was rosy as the glowing coals looked shyly through.

"Tom," she faltered, "you know that holly didn't count—holly never does. It wasn't fair, so——so——I've got a piece of real mistletoe. Now tell me all about Baldur."—Munsey.

The Yule Log.

When the yule log burns upon the hearth,
With carol, chime and Christmas cheer,
A fire should kindle in each soul
To gladden all the coming year:
A flame to brighten hearth and home,
And shine as well for other eyes,
Fed by good deeds which still glow on
When dim and cold the yule log lies.

No life so poor but it may know
A spark of this divinest fire.
No life so beautiful and rich
But still, flame-like, it may aspire.
Then kindle yule logs far and wide
To burn on every happy hearth,
Fit symbols of the faith and love
That purify and bless the earth.

SANTA CLAUS' MOST ENTHUSIASTIC ADMIRER.

Growth of American Christmas Customs.

America has welcomed and adopted the Christmas tree with cordial affection and treated it as if it were a product of her own inventive brain. Transplanted to the United States by the early Dutch settlers of New York and by the Germans who established themselves in Pennsylvania, it grew and flourished as it did in its native soil. Its advance was slow, but in 1830 the Christmas tree had become a fixed factor in the holiday celebrations, not only in families of direct German descent, but among that composite population called American. Small cedar trees were first used, and were called "Christmas bushes." They were decorated with rosy apples, paper flowers, a few small candles, gilded nuts and "Christmas cakes." This last confection seems to be entirely out of date. It took the form of small horses, dogs, cows, hearts and diamonds, and was a combination of flour and water paste and white and colored sugar frosting. Even by those who recall the Christmas cake with fondest recollection it is admitted to have been rather a delight to the eye than a joy to the palate or the digestion.

As years went on, and the young nation grew older and richer and the life of the people more luxurious and complex, the "Christmas bushes," with their paper flowers, and "Christmas cakes," developed into a tree, which is often an elaborate and expensive affair.

But it is not in civilized or Christian lands alone that this wonderful Christmas tree grows. Missionaries have planted it in China, in Japan, in India, Africa, in the islands of the sea, so that yellow, brown and black faces, as well as white, gaze up at it with delight.—New York Mail and Express.

Torturing the Tortoise.

The beautiful tortoise shell, from which combs and hatpins are made, is not, as is generally supposed, the shell proper from the turtle, but the scales which form its covering. The turtle whose shell is valued in commerce is the small variety known as the hawksbill, which is found on the coral islands of the Southern seas. During the night the turtles leave the water to deposit their eggs in the sand, and it is then that they are captured by the watchful turtle hunters. They are turned on their backs and left in this helpless condition until morning, when the work of loosening the scales begins. This is the repulsive part of the business. The turtles are not killed, as this would soon lead to their extermination.

They are fastened by pegs to the ground in their natural position and a fire of dry leaves lit upon their backs. The heat is not great enough to injure the shell, but merely to cause it to separate at the joints. A large blade, very similar to a chemist's spatula, is then inserted horizontally between the laminæ, which are gently pried from the back. Great care must be taken not to injure the shell by too much heat, and yet it is not forced off until it is fully prepared for separation by a sufficient amount of warmth.

The operation is the extreme of cruelty, and many turtles do not survive it.

A Misunderstanding.

"I notice Jenks doesn't speak to you. What's the matter?"

"I can't help it. I started to talk to him about Christmas decorations the other day, and he thought I referred to the black eyes he got in a broil with a mutual friend recently."

It is added that a certain marshal was asked to co-operate, but merely replied that he would consider the matter. House Will Not Carry Out Declaration in Regard to Cuba.

CAUCUS TO SHOW THE POLICY OF MINORITY

New Ministers and Consuls—Men Who Will Represent Uncle Sam in the Courts Abroad—Treasury Statement—Other Capitol Notes.

Leading democratic members of the house of representatives say no aggressive action is anticipated to carry out the declarations of the recent democratic house caucus on Cuba, finance and bankruptcy. The caucus will be allowed to stand as showing the policy of the minority. It is said, however, that it would be useless to force the Cuban question before the house, as the rules would not permit the minority to bring the question to a vote. The senate Cuban resolution, which was indorsed by the caucus, reposes in the committee on foreign affairs and there is no power under the rules to get it from that committee.

Representative Livingston, of Georgia, has suggested that a resolution be presented directing the foreign committee to report the Cuban resolution at once. But this procedure would be ineffective, as the resolution directing an immediate report would be referred to the committee on rules. It is not doubted that this body, representing the majority, would not act favorably on a motion of this character. All parliamentarians on the democratic side concede that it will be impossible for the minority to force an issue on Cuba. They are more hopeful of giving expression to the caucus action on finance. The majority will doubtless bring forward financial measures on the lines suggested by the president and Secretary Gage, and the democratic caucus policy will be given effect by the casting of the solid democratic vote, numbering 125, against the measure.

On the bankruptcy question, it is expected, that the minority will frame a bankruptcy bill calculated to meet the caucus declaration for a "wise and just" measure of this character. The bill when framed will be offered as a substitute to the one to be urged by the committee on judiciary after the holidays.

Treasury Statement.

Thursday's stafement of the condition of the treasury: Available cash balances, $228,181.551; gold reserve, $159,367,692.

Carolina Convict Problem.

While the legislatures of several of the Southern states have been wrestling with the convict question, the South Carolina board of directors of the penitentiary has just ordered the sale of 1,100 bales of cotton on hand. The expectation is that the penitentiary will have 2,500 bales to offer before the season closes. All of this cotton was made on the several state farms with convict labor. The farms will this year turn in at least $10,000 to the state treasury.

PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS.

The Senate—Wednesday.

Proceedings of the senate were enlivened today by an interesting debate upon the bill presented by the foreign relations committee providing for the prohibition of pelagic sealing by Americans. Mr. Davis, of the foreign affairs committee, called up the bill prohibiting fur sealing in the waters of the North Pacific and presented letters from Secretaries Sherman, of the state department, and Gage, of the treasury department on the subject, advocating the passage of the proposed measure. Mr. Davis said the bill was in the aid of furthering diplomatic negotiations and pointed out that there was now no law prohibiting pelagic sealing. Mr. Pettigrew entered a sharp protest to the passage of the bill because it deprives Americans of privileges extended to people of other countries, and offered an amendment to the effect that if Great Britain by the first of June next did not agree to a suspension of pelagic sealing this country would kill all seals, male and female, and thus settle the question once for all. Mr. Pettigrew then offered an amendment to the bill in line with his remarks, but it was defeated. The bill was then passed by a vote of 37 to 14.... By agreement the bill providing for the twelth census was taken up, but went over until after the holiday recess.... Mr. McBride, of Oregon, endeavored to secure the adoption of his resolution directing the secretary of war to supply relief to the suffering miners in the Klondike region and appropriating $250,000 for that purpose. The resolution was amended so that supplies might be transported by means of reindeer. Mr. McBride consented finally that the resolution should be recommitted to the military affairs committee with the understanding that it would be promptly reported.

The House.

The House spent the day in the consideration of the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill. Eighty-nine of the 112 pages of the bill were covered and only one amendment of importance was adopted. It reduced the clerical force at the pension office ninety-five, involving a reduction in salaries of $115,000.

The civil service question, as on yesterday, was the chief topic of discussion today. At the opening this morning a resolution for the holiday recess from Saturday, December 18, to January 5, offered by Mr. Dingley, from the committee on ways and means, was adopted. Mr. Livingston submitted some general remarks in opposition to the civil service law, which he denounced as a humbug and a fraud. He was followed by Messrs. Dearmond, Bingham and Wheeler, and at 5:05 the House adjourned.

The Senate—Thursday.

Mr. Allen's resolution calling on the president for information about the instructions given to the international monetary commission and the report made to him by the commission came up, to which Mr. Wolcott, chairman of the commission, replied that he would soon make a detailed statement of the commission. The resolution went over until January 15.... Mr. Pritchard, chairman of the committee on civil service, delivered a speech concerning the general features of the law.... Mr. Frye, of the commerce committee, favorably reported and the senate passed a bill directing the secretary of the treasury to purchase or construct a suitable vessel for revenue cutter service on the Yukon river, Alaska, to cost not to exceed $40,000.... Mr. Allison reported favorably the house joint resolution providing for a recess of congress from December 18, 1897, to January 5, 1898. The resolution was adopted.... Mr. Hawley reported the resolution of Mr. McBride, for the relief of American miners and other sufferers in the Yukon valley, Alaska. The committee struck out all but the enacting clause and amended the resolution by appropriating $250,000, which is to be used by the secretary of war for the purchase of subsistence and supplies, and for their transportation and distribution. The resolution was adopted.... A resolution was passed directing the secretary of the treasury to furnish the senate the names of the revenue cutters employed on the coast of Florida to prevent filibustering; how many such expeditions were thwarted; what vessels were captured; what armed expeditions were taken, and by what authority of law the secretary of the treasury acted in the matter. The bill went over to a future date. Adjourned.

The House.

The house today passed a bill appropriating $175,000 for the relief of the people of the Yukon river country, and also the bill passed by the senate yesterday to prohibit pelagic sealing by American citizens. In the course of the debate over the latter bill there was some exceedingly caustic criticisms of the course of our Behring sea negotiations, past and present. After further debate, the bill was passed, yeas 148, nays 78. At 5 o'clock the house adjourned.

The Senate—Friday.

A spirited debate was precipitated in the senate today by the submission by Mr. Platt, of Connecticut, of the report of the special joint committee of the senate and house of representatives, appointed to investigate the use of alcohol in the arts. It developed that a wide divergence of opinion exists among senators as to the practicability from the point of view of government revenue of reducing the present tax upon alcohol used in the arts. Mr. Hoar, of Massachusetts, who favors such a reduction, expressed the opinion that if congress would lay aside political considerations and deal with the liquor question courageously and honestly by the imposition of an additional tax of a dollar a barrel on liquor and beer the government revenue would take care of itself. Mr. Vest, of Missouri, strenuously opposed any additional tax on beer.... Under a special order eighteen private pension bills were passed.... At the suggestion of Mr. Hawley, chairman of the military affairs committee, the bill passed by the house for the relief of the miners in the Klondike was taken up at once. The senate bill was substituted for that of the house and a conference ordered, with Senators Hawley, Carter and Cockrell as conferees.... After the debate on alcohol used in the arts had run some time, Mr. Allison deprecated any attempt to raise the question at present.... At 4:25 p. m. the senate adjourned until tomorrow.

The House.

The house today completed the consideration of the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill, excepting the paragraph relating the civil service. By agreement, the debate on this latter paragraph will go over until after the holidays. The bill as reported abolishes the assay office at New Orleans. The house then went into committee of the whole and resumed the consideration of the legislative, executive and judicial bill. On Mr. Cannon's motion, the senate amendment to the bill for the relief of the miners on the Upper Yukon was disagreed to and its committees agreed to a conference. Messrs. Cannon, of Illinois; Northway, of Ohio, and Sayers, of Texas, were appointed conferees.... The debate drifted into a financial discussion. Mr. Cox, of Tennessee, submitted that Secretary Gage's testimony, given before the house banking committee, was a frank statement of the position of the government. He had voted his adherence to the gold standard as against bimetallism, and his whole bill was designed to uphold and perpetuate that standard. Adjourned.

The Senate—Saturday.

Today's open session of the senate was brief, the time being consumed in the introduction of bills and resolutions, several of the latter calling for information from various departments being passed.... A joint resolution was passed providing for the expenditure of $10,000 more than originally intended upon the government building at the Trans-Mississippi exposition at Omaha, Neb.; that $2,500 be appropriated for a building at the exposition for a display of the life-saving service and that the cost of the government display be reduced from $150,000 to $137,500, the entire cost of the government buildings at the exposition to $62,500.... Mr. Platt, of Connecticut, secured the adoption of a resolution, calling upon the secretary of the interior to report to the senate the present status in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations in the Indian Territory.... The senate, at 12:40 p. m., went into executive session. After the executive session the conference report upon the bill providing relief for the Klondike miners was received and adopted. The bill appropriates $100,000 to be expended under the direction of the secretary of war to relieve the suffering people in the Yukon valley and gold-bearing regions of Alaska, providing the consent of the Canadian government can be obtained to the transportation of such supplies through Canadian territory. At 2 p. m. the senate adjourned until Wednesday, January 5, 1898.

The House.

The conference report to the emergency relief measure for the Klondike country was presented and agreed to. It compromises the amount of the relief fund at $200,000; provides securing the consent of Canada to extending the relief to the Canadian side, and authorizes the use of the army to carry out the relief measures. It also provides that the supplies must be purchased instead of being donated.... A house bill was passed confirming certain cash entries of public lands.... At 12:30 Mr. Boutelle, of Illnois, offered resolutions of profound regret on the death of Mr. Cooke, of Illinois, and eulogies were begun. Those who paid tribute to the deceased member were Messrs. Boutelle, Foss, Henderson, Belknap, Boyce, Mann, Hopkins, Dinsmore, Graff, Moody, Prince and Peters.

At 2:10 the house adjourned to January 5.

To Please His Second Wife.

THE WEEKLY NEWS.

MONTEVALLO, ALA.

NEWTON & CARRUTHERS, Proprietors.
A. S. CARRUTHERS, Editor.

Entered at the postoffice at Montevallo, Ala., as second-class mail matter.

Subscription $1.00 per year, in advance.

Thursday, Dec. 23, 1897

Everyone should favor incorporation.

People with evil minds imagine that all others are as bad as they are.

It is almost certain that Montevallo will have water works in the near future.

Montevallo excels Birmingham in every particular as a site for a cotton factory.

The citizens of Montevallo should hold a meeting and take steps to incorporate the town.

Every minister of the gospel in Alabama should raise his voice against the cowardly practice of carrying firearms.

The News wishes all, rich and poor, white and black, a merry Christmas and a happy and prosperous New Year.

If the young men would spend their money for good newspapers and books instead of revolvers and whiskey they would become more civilized.

Why will farmers waste their hard-earned money on artificial fertilizers when they can make their own out of cotton seed (composted) and manure?

Greedy Cleveland is still using government steam launches for his fishing and whisky-swilling trips. The obese accident must imagine that he owns the United States.

When a live newspaper essays to expose a wrong, it wins in 99 cases out of 100, as the Age-Herald has done in its fight against the extortions of the Birmingham Gas company.

Surely the Kentucky belle who last year sent a bottle of 40-year-old rye whiskey to be used in christening the battleship "Kentucky" is not surprised at the news that Grover Cleveland drank it up.

Montevallo will have a bath-house about the first of January. Cleanliness is next to godliness and no man in need of a bath can keep in a truly christian frame of mind, so all should be thankful for the new bath house and make frequent use of it.

When Secretary of the Treasury Gage was explaining his financial bill last week to the house committee on banking and currency, the democratic members must have said: "It is the face of Lyman J. Gage, but the voice of Rothschild."

It is hard to understand why farmers so generally neglect to take out a fire insurance policy. Any merchant who neglected to do so would soon have to go out of business, because wholesale houses would not credit him. A farmer's house, barn, implements and live stock are his stock in rade, and he should insure them.

The Dr. Whitsitt controversy which is disturbing the Baptist churches of Alabama is another one of the unfortunate church wrangles about the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee which furnish amusement to the ungodly and pain genuine Christians.

Incorporation and persistent advertising to the world of Montevallo's advantages will make this a city of five thousand people in five years. The owners of real estate will be benefitted, the merchants will have increased trade, every professional man, mechanic and laborer will experience prosperity, and the farmers will have a home market. Every man must put his shoulder to the wheel, however. First, incorporation; second, organization; third, hustling and advertising; fourth, population and prosperity.

Some individual in this town, who is either a congenital idiot or a miserable whelp, put in circulation on Sunday a lying rumor that the editor of this paper was intoxicated on either Friday or Saturday night last week. Messrs. C. L. Meroney, F. F. Crowe, S. B. Gibson and Clifton Newton can answer for Friday night; S. B. Gibson, Will Nolen and Clifton Newton for Saturday night. The statemeut of the sneaking rascal was a deliberate lie, as the above named gentlemen can prove. We believe him to be one of the Peeping Toms scarified in last week's issue, which explains the animus of the falsehood.

The various murders perpetrated of late, which are to be ascribed solely to the barbarous habit of carrying lethal weapons such as knives and revolvers, must surely arouse men to a sense of the idiocy of that practice.

If men must quarrel and fight, surely they can do so without slashing and shooting one another like cowardly Dagoes. Most of those who "pack guns" do so from habit, but if they will reflect that the habit is a virtual confession that they lack the courage to rely upon their own strength to repel assaults, they will abandon it as cowardly, swap their revolvers for hoes and make some money by truck farming instead of making widows of the women whom they meet every Sunday in church.

Five cent cotton is with us to stay until a reform president fills the position now occupied by Mark Hanna's puppet; in fact, the policy of the present maladministration, as enunciated in McKinley's message to congress, will almost certainly reduce the price of cotton still further.

Confronted with this condition, the farmers in this section of the country must find some crop besides cotton to tide them over the coming years of gold bug hard times. Those in the Gulf counties of Texas, in southern Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia and Florida annually reap handsome sums by supplying the northern markets with early vegetables. There is no reason why the people of Shelby, Bibb and Chilton counties should not do likewise. One man near Amite City, La., last year netted $4,000 from his crop of early strawberries. Until they can raise their own vegetables, the people of the north have every year from January to April to buy Irish potatoes, cabbages, carrots, tomatoes, onions and scores of other vegetables grown in the south.

Farmers should stop talking about the war and quarrelling with as good reformers as themselves because they do not wear the same tag, and should get down to good, careful truck farming. It will pay them better and make them independent and happy.

IN BOHEMIA.

BY JOHN BOYLE O'RILEY.

I'd rather live in Bohemia than in any other land;
For only there are the values true,
And the laurels gathered in all men's view.
The prizes of traffic and state are won
By shrewdness of force or by deeds undone;
But fame is sweeter without the feud,
And the wise of Bohemia are never shrewd.
Here pilgrims stream with a faith sublime
From every class and clime and time,
Aspiring only to be enrolled
With the names that are writ in the book of gold;
And each one bears in mind or hand
A palm of the dear Bohemian land.
The scholar first, with his book—a youth
Aflame with the glory of harvested truth;
A girl with a picture, a man with a play,
A boy with a wolf he has modeled in clay;
A smith with a marvelous hilt and sword,
A player, a king, a plowman, a lord—
And the player is king when the door is past,
The plowman is crowned and the lord is last!

I'd rather fail in Bohemia than win in another land;
There are no titles inherited there,
No hoard or hope for the brainless heir;
No gilded dullard, native born,
To stare at his fellow with leaden scorn;
Bohemia has none but adopted sons;
Its limits where Fancy's bright stream runs;
Its honors, not garnered for thrift or trade,
But for beauty and truth men's souls have made.
To the empty heart in a jeweled breast
There is value, maybe, in a purchased crest;
But the thirsty of soul soon learn to know
The moistureless froth of the social show;
The vulgar sham of the pompous feast
Where the heaviest purse is the highest priest;
The organized charity, scrimped and iced,
In the name of a cautious, statistical Christ;
The smile restrained, the respectable cant,
When a friend in need is a friend in want;
Where the only aim is to keep afloat,
And a brother may drown with a cry in his throat,
Oh, I long for the glow of a kindly heart and the grasp of a friendly hand,
And I'd rather live in Bohemia than in any other land.

A GIFT DECLINED.

Wuz thinkin' o' something to give her
Looked over the store—every shelf,
But nuthin' seemed right in the day or the night,
So I says: "I'll jest give her myself!"

So I bought me a pen for to write,
An' I offered myself in a letter;
But her answer wuz this (twuzn't sealed with a kiss!)
"Dear John, can't you find nothin' better?"

HORSE-SWAPPING DAY.

Last Saturday thousands of people resident within a radius of twenty miles from Montevallo tumbled out of bed at daybreak with the intention to attend the advertised horse swapping convention and turkey shoot, but nine out of ten crawled back when they saw the weeping clouds overhead.

About four hundred came despite the steady, incessant drizzle. Some brought good horses and mules, some such things as this.

They did not enjoy the day, it was too wet. Some tried to counteract the rain by wetting their interiors with whiskey, but none became drunk. But few swaps were made. Next time the promoters will have to order a different brand of weather.

TOPSY TALKS.

Hello! I'm Topsy; not "Topsy-Turvey"—just Topsy. Dropped in other day on fast freight. Didn't drop off either—guess I fell off with the brakeman's assistance. Haven't been able to catch on since—trains run too fast: you know how fast these Three B trains run through here anyway. It's 'cause Lee's agent—try to keep up with him.

Guess I don't want to go anyhow. Too many pretty girls. Always did like pretty girls. Don't do a fellow like me much good though here. Capn's eyes too good, and Mrs. Babb—goodness me! That woman can see a hole in a doughnut a hundred yards off.

***

Girls won't flirt. May be too good. 'Spect, though, it's 'cause they're afraid of that little secretary—he might see them. Say! Tell me the girls are afraid of him as a mouse. Don't blame 'em. A yellow fever microbe would get out of the road if it saw those glasses coming. Says he can tell what a girl's doing a mile off. Reckon he's just making a telephone of his hat, though.

***

Capn's been up to Washington City. Must had a nice time. Looks like it. Got a new pair of shoes up there. Wouldn't 'sprise me if the Government don't give him 25,000 acres of public land. Senator Morgan he wanted to give him all the land in the state, but Cap'n—you know how modest he is—said 25,000 acres would do. Reckon Capn's going to put all the girls to chopping cotton next year.

***

Stopped in to see George Kroell the other day. He's a good fellow. Loves to hunt, but his feet are so big he don't like to carry them around. Too much exertion. He's got money to burn, but he don't burn much—it makes him sea-sick to smell the smoke.

***

Will Reynolds is a nice fellow. Don't talk much—thinks a whole heap though. He's rich! Got money to throw at the birds—knows which bird to throw it at, though. Got one trained—always brings it back to him. He's tall—most as tall as the new editor.

***

Little, he's cashier down at the bank—not a faro bank, but a sure 'nuff bank. Burgess'd like for Cap'n to stay away all the time. He gets to cash the checks for the girls then. Don't charge the girls any exchange, and wants to pay them interest on their money if it only stays in a week. He's a warm 'un, he is; going to Blocton Christmas.

***

My! Isn't that new ed tor a picture? Tell me they used to call him Bill Nye No. 2, in Washington. Never knew him in Washington, but then we didn't move in the same circle of society. I had a job with the city and flew so high that they had to put a ball and chain on me to keep me within bounds. But Nye's all right. He'll come in handy when the town gets electric lights. Won't have to spike the poles for anyone to climb—he can just reach up and fit the carbons in just as easy. The girls won't get a chance to put that ruffle on his coat—he's bought him a new one. Says he paid for it (?).

***

Gemima! don't the new postoffice loom up. Doc, he's a hustler anyway. He's got up-to-date ideas. Wish there were others. Major's going to run it for Frank, until he gets to be Mayor. Major's a good title, but there's more money in Mayor if it does have the same number of letters. Going to rent a box if I can borrow fifty cents from Fred Rogan. Don't get any mail, but got a good imagination and like to look at the key.

***

George Morgan's a handsome fellow. Always happy, and looks like an Astorbilt. Wouldn't do for a hired mourner at a Moorish funeral. All the pretty girls trade at his store. I don't blame 'em.

***

Charley Meroney's another one of those sky scrapers. Ought to wear a coon-skin cap. It's pretty chilly up in the clouds these days. He's going to be rich some day. Don't like to play skip penny with his money. Might sprain his wrist,

***

Haven't had a bath since I've been in Montevallo, excepting a spit bath. Don't like spit baths this time of the year; weather too cold. Wonder why somebody don't build water works, anyway. They'd make a Klondyke stroke of it if they did.

***

Sorry this town's not incorporated. If it was I'd get a nice free lodging without having to crawl up in Will Lyman's hay loft every night. No, guess I'm glad it isn't. I don't like to work much.

***

Didn't go to church Sunday. Like to hear Abernathy preach, but I felt too sinful. Went down to the creek and got up under the bridge out of the rain. Tried to smoke that cheroot Latham gave me. Reckon Latham thought he'd be a public benefactor and get me out of the way. Most succeeded. Would have drowned myself, but was afraid I might get wet and catch my death of cold.

***

The girls are going to celebrate Christmas. They are buying lots of powder and are going to bang their hair; that is, all who don't Klondyke it.

***

Say! I'm tired. You ought to be. See you later. I'm going down to the spring and drink. "TOPSY."

TOPSY'S PURLOININGS.

A woman is sometimes pressed for time, but usually for some other reason.

A girl appreciates the sympathy that makes a man feel for her in the dark.

No woman can lace herself as tight as a man can drink himself.

Church fairs, amateur theatricals, and home talent concerts are called entertainments, but goodness knows why

It is hoping against hope when a woman pulls down a folding bed and then looks under it for the proverbial man.

Never hit a man when he's down. It's safer to throw rocks at him when he's up a tree.

The Bible tells us that after God created man he rested: but since creating woman neither God nor man has been able to rest.

Some women swear like men, while others are so pious they won't even darn socks.

Sunday, December 19th, there were present 111 scholars, 14 teachers and 3 officers. The collection amounted to $2.08.

Baptist Sunday School, Will Lyman, superintendent; J. H. McMath, secretary.

GIRLS' POYTECHNIC INSTITUTE.

THE DRAMATIC CLUB

GIVES A GREAT ENTERTAINMENT. MISS JULIA GREY THE STAR OF THE EVENING.

Last Friday night the Dramatic club had its innings at the Dormitory, and rendered a program which would have pleased the most critical metropolitan audience.

Many girls from the boarding houses attended, also Mrs. Babb and Messrs. W. B. Reynolds and C. L. Meroney. Miss Nellie Parker visited her cousin, Miss Edna Nelson.

The set program was as follows:

1. Piano Solo—
   Miss Mary Jane Vassar
2. Piano and Violin—
   Misses Robinson and Crum
3. Dance—
   Miss Maude Rosser
4. Recitation—
   Bonnie Stapleton
5. Piano and Violin—
   Misses Robinson and Crum
6. Song and Dance—
   Miss Julia Grey
7. Piano and Violin—
   Misses Robinson and Crum
8. Song and Dance, "Down on the Ohio,"—Misses Julia Grey and Jeanette Roebuck
9. Duet—
   The Misses Vassar
10. Recitation—
    Miss Julia Grey

The Misses Vassar play the piano well, as does Miss Robinson, while Miss Maggie Crum is a mistress of the violin. One could listen to her playing Mexican music all night and not note the passage of the hours.

Miss Bonnie Stapleton recites with genuine dramatic force, and will become a superior elocutionist.

Miss Maud Rosser is an extremely agile, graceful dancer, who can pirouette in a manner which would make the antiquated corvphees of the companies sent to the Southern theatres by the Theatre Trust turn green with envy if they could but see her.

The star of the evening, however, was Miss Julia Grey, who is positively a genius, doubly endowed with poetry in her feet and music in her throat. She sang one song in soubrette style better than most of that sisterhood could have done it. She and Miss Jeanette Roebuck sang "Down on the Ohio" and danced so well that they were encored again and again. In her closing recitations she proved herself a natural actress. She has a great future.

The whole entertainment was most enjoyable, and reflected great credit upon the Dramatic club.

Toys, fruits and candies cheap at F. F. Crowe & Co's.

Tasteful X'mas presents cheap at F. F. Crowe & Co's.

Several new faces will be seen at the school after the holidays and over 350 will then answer at roll call.

Miss Fannie G. Stringer, of Salem, Ala., visited her niece, Miss Leo Sanders, the assistant teacher of dressmaking, on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Some of the girls in the dressmaking class have made themselves evening waists to be worn during the holidays, which are most artistic creations.

Miss Rosa May Burnett will spend the holiday season with her parents at Uniontown, and on her return will be accompanied by a new pupil, Miss Pearl Brown.

Each young lady in the school will receive a copy of this issue, and the editor requests each to take it home, show it to her relatives and ask them to subscribe.

Mrs. J. D. Smith, of Siddonsville, visited her daughter, Alta Smith, Tuesday and Wednesday, and on her return will take Miss Virginia Prowell with her as far as Dayton.

Misses Lucile Wilkinson, Etta Davis and Birdie Burns will spend their holidays in Prattville with their parents. They will bring Miss Pleasye Northington, a new pupil, with them on their return.

Mrs. Babb, Misses Fox, Stallworth and Cothran and Prof. Simmons will remain in Montevallo during the holidays. Other teachers will scatter as follows: Miss Evans and Mrs. Hudson, Columbiana; Miss Bush, Macon, Miss.; Miss Alston, Clayton; Miss Kennedy, Centreville; Mrs. Nelson and Miss Crumpton, Montgomery; Miss Lee, Furman and Birmingham, and Miss Dale, Camden.

Tuesday evening President Reynolds returned from Washington. He is hopeful of the passage of his bill granting 25,000 acres of public lands to the schools. He conversed with leading men on the subject and interested them. While away he visited the public schools of the District of Columbia, and the Georgia Normal and Industrial School at Milledgeville, Ga. He found it far inferior to this school in its location. CHAPTER II.—(Continued).

There was a window in the side wall of the interior room which Paxton examined, discovering that it was not secured, although it was provided with interior fastenings of an approved kind. He pushed up the sash and found that the heavy outside shutters with which it was guarded were not fastened—that the hooks had been broken. He saw, moreover, that the window opened upon a narrow passage between that and the next building

The police sergeant kept close to the detective as though he feared he would make some discovery which might escape his own unguided observation, and he noted all Paxton saw.

It was Mr. Paxton's method never to ask any questions until he had thoroughly examined the scene of a crime, and thus in the first instance his mind was unbiased by what might be told him.

Now having concluded his investigation for the present, he addressed several questions to Marion and Judith Kredge.

"Miss Oakburn, did you hear the report of a pistol or any unusual sound before you discovered your father?" he asked.

"No, sir, I heard nothing, although I have not slept to night," answered Marion.

"And did you hear nothing?" continued Paxton, turning to Judith Kredge.

"Nothing, sir," she replied.

"When you came to the office, I think you told the policeman that you found the door unlocked?" Paxton went on, now addressing Marion.

"Yes, sir, it was unlocked."

"And the street door?"

Marion turned to Judith.

"That was also unlocked and unbolted, as I found when I went to open it," the woman said.

"Was there any one besides you and this woman in your apartments to-night, Miss Oakburn?"

Marion hesitated for a moment, and then she said:

"Mr. Stuart Harland, a clerk employed by Mr. Garrison, occupied our front room directly over the office."

"But he is not there now, sir. I ran up to his room as soon as we discovered that Mr. Oakburn was murdered. I am sure I don't know what can have become of him, for he went to his room as usual quite late, and as I sleep in a room adjoining his I heard him moving about a few moments before Miss Marion rapped at my door and asked me to go down and look for her father. I noticed when I looked into his room that his traveling-bag was gone," said Judith Kredge.

Marion's face assumed an expression of absolute agony, and she gave Judith Kredge a glance full of aversion and fear.

Mr. Paxton and the police sergeant exchanged significant glances.

"Excuse me a moment," said the detective, and he slipped out of the office. He returned very quickly, for he had only run up to Stuart Harland's apartment and hastily searched it. He discovered nothing except that the bed had not been opened that night.

A short consultation between the detective and the police sergeant ensued, and the latter said:

"You are right, sir: Mr. Garrison should be sent for at once."

Acting upon this decision, he dispatched one of his men to the broker's residence with a hastily written note containing information of the tragedy which had been enacted at his office.

Marion, seemingly exhausted by grief and excitement, had seated herself beside her dead father, and with her face buried in her hands she remained silent and motionless, while Judith Kredge stood by a window and listened eagerly to a conversation which was carried on in low tones between the police sergeant and one of his men.

Judith Kredge did not possess a good face; rather it was one to awaken distrust in the mind of the observer. She had a low, retreating forehead, large coarse features, thin bloodless lips, and small yellow eyes set close together under beetling brows. Her age was about fifty. Her life had not been cast in pleasant places, and she had grown to hate those who were happy because she was not so. She was envious of all persons who were in the possession of the advantages of life of which fate had deprived her. In disposition she was vindictive and cruel. She was cunning, unscrupulous and daring to a certain degree, and avarice dominated every other passion in her heart.

Just at this moment there were strange thoughts in Judith Kredge's mind. She was plotting seemingly to turn certain secrets of this dreadful night of murder to her own profit.

Mr. Jason Garrison, the broker, arrived in less than thirty minutes, and he was pale and agitated.

Suspense and anxiety were written upon his features as he burst into the office, and as though oblivious to the presence of anyone rushed to John Oakburn's desk and began to examine a file of cheques which he took from a drawer. His hands trembled the while so that he could scarcely hold the papers, and he experienced the keen agony of a gamester to whom the turning of a card or the calling out of a number is almost a matter of life or death, as he ran over the file of cheques.

"He is searching for something of vital importance to his interest," said Paxton, sotto voce.

"Not here! There is one chance left!" exclaimed Jason Garrison, totally unconscious that he spoke, and turning to a small memorandum book he hurriedly looked over its pages.

The next moment the book fell from his nerveless grasp, and he sank forward as though prostrated by a nervous shock.

"I am a ruined man!" he exclaimed.

Paxton quickly sprang to his side.

"You have sustained a serious loss by this robbery, sir?" he asked.

Jason Garrison raised his pale, haggard face, and, bringing his clenched fist down upon the desk with force, cried, fiercely:

"I tell you, man, I am ruined. Hopelessly ruined!"

"Then there was a large sum of money in the safe?" asked Paxton.

"Yes, sir."

"I am a detective, and I am sure, my dear sir, that it will be to your interest to conceal nothing from me."

"I have nothing to conceal!" cried Garrison, in a way that in the detective's judgment belied his words. "I will explain, sir," he continued. "Yesterday afternoon I gave my unfortunate cashier, John Oakburn, a cheque for $78,000, and instructed him to cash it at the bank, and keep the money over night here in our safes, as we were to have an urgent demand for it early in the morning. The sergeant's note informed me that there was no money in the safe, and I find the cheque missing from the file of small cheques where I saw John Oakburn place it. More, in this book I found my cashier's memorandum, which dashed to the ground my one hope that the money was not lost."

Mr. Garrison picked up the book which he had dropped on the floor, and turning the leaves he read the following in John Oakburn's handwriting:

"Dec. 23, cashed cheque for $78,000 to-day."

"Seventy-eight thousand dollars. A large cheque. But here in the great money center of the country among you brokers, I suppose the amount is not surprising. However, it has been stolen by John Oakburn's murderer. Seventy-eight thousand dollars is quite a haul for a thief, but let us hope that we will recover the stolen money," said Paxton.

"We already have a clew to the assassin," the police sergeant said.

"Whom do you suspect?" asked the broker.

"Let me give you a synopsis of the case and you can draw your own deductions. The office door was found unlocked. Nothing to be noted in that, since it was probably so left by the cashier when he entered. The street door was also unlocked, and the bolts, which were on the inside, were drawn. The safe was opened by means of John Oakburn's key. A window in the rear office is unfastened. Now, it is clear to my mind that the assassin was an inmate of this house—one who knew the combination of the safe and that there was money in it. He surprised John Oakburn, shot him, took the key from his pocket, opened the safe, secured the money and then unbarred the street door and fled. But our assassin and robber was cunning. He thought he would leave a loophole of doubt in the theory which would be formed of the crime, and so he opened the window in the rear office, pried off the fastening of the shutters, and left them so as to give the impression that the assassin might have broken into the office by that route. Now, sir, who among your clerks knew the combination of your safe lock? Who among them knew that $78,000 was to be left in the safe over night?"

Thus spoke the police sergeant.

He had taken a position in the center of the room, and spoke and gesticulated in a pompous manner, like some political stump orator. It was clearly evident that he fancied he had the entire case under his thumb.

"Only one person except John Oakburn knew the combination of the safe and that the stolen money was to be kept in it over night, and that person is above suspicion, sir," answered Mr. Garrison.

"His name, if you please?"

"Stuart Harland," answered the broker, and then as the name passed his lips he started, for he suddenly remembered that the young clerk occupied an apartment in the building, so he quickly added: "But Mr. Harland rooms here and he should have been called."

"He was called, sir, but he failed to respond, because he had fled, and I may as well tell you plainly, sir, though I would spare your feelings, that I entertain a grave suspicion which I am sure is shared by Mr. Paxton."

"What do you mean?" demanded the broker.

"That circumstances seem to indicate that Stuart Harland is John Oakburn's murderer!" replied the police sergeant.

CHAPTER III.

At last the direct accusation which Marion Oakburn dreaded, and to prevent which she had besought Judith Kredge to preserve silence regarding the unexplained departure of Stuart Harland, was made.

The police sergeant was responsible for formulating the dreadful arraignment into words, but in the minds of the others present it could scarcely be doubted that the same suspicion had found a lodgment.

It is an age of distrust. No man's past is regarded as a bond for his future. Men whose reputations were spotless yesterday are buried in the mire to-day. The temptation of gold outweighs the honor and honesty of men who until the denouement comes are regarded as above suspicion.

But Jason Garrison would have staked his life upon the innocence and honor of the man to whom he meant to intrust the future happiness of his only child.

As the police sergeant pronounced the name of Stuart Harland the broker leaped to his feet.

"Never, sir! Never! Do not dare to couple Stuart Harland's name with a crime in my presence," he cried.

"Stuart Harland is as innocent as I am. I know it, I feel it. He is not capable of a dishonorable deed," said Marion, earnestly seeking to exculpate the suspected one.

"You see, sir, even the daughter of the victim of this tragedy is assured of the innocence of the man you accuse," said Garrison.

"And permit me to say that you are entirely wrong in thinking that I share your suspicion of Stuart Harland," said Paxton, the detective, smiling blandly.

"Indeed, under the circumstances, I am convinced of his innocence," he added.

The police sergeant seemed amazed.

"The circumstances are all against him; it cannot be any one else," he said, defiantly.

"Good, keep on thinking so and work on that line. The way will be clear to enable me to secure the real assassin," said Paxton pleasantly.

"We shall see. I have placed a shrewd man on Harland's track and he will be arrested before morning."

"I wish you joy of your capture, I am sure," retorted Paxton.

Jason Garrison turned his back upon the detective and the police sergeant with an expressive gesture, and strode to the side of the dead man.

Long and earnestly he gazed upon the face of the dead, and the man of the world was deeply moved as he thought that this poor man, who had served him with surprising fidelity for long years, had perhaps met his fate in defense of his property.

"Poor John, poor John!" he said. "He was one of the few men who are honest from principle alone. He was honored by all, and he leaves behind him a reputation of which any man might well be proud."

Then, turning to Marion, he added:

"Miss Oakburn, the memory of your father will be respected by all who knew him. He died as he had lived—faithful to his duty and an honest man."

The dead cashier's daughter was strangely agitated, but her face became transformed with a look of heroic resolve as she said:

"My father so lived that when he was dead men might speak of him as you have done. His soul would have revolted at any other destiny. His memory shall be revered."

There was something fierce and startling in the intensity of the girl's voice, and her manner was that of one in a strangely excited mental state.

But her hearers, with perhaps one exception, attributed her excitement and her strange manner to emotions occasioned by the discovery of her father's murder alone.

Paxton was the only one present not of this opinion, and he covertly watched the cashier's daughter with a sudden augmentation of interest. The detective possessed many serviceable qualifications for the vocation he had adopted, not the least valuable of which was the faculty of discerning the cause of human emotions, and he felt that Marion Oakburn was now actuated by some powerful feeling which the others did not suspect.

But even his acumen could not determine what the secret feeling was.

"If I am any judge of character, this young woman possesses rare strength of will and tenacity of purpose. When she declared that her father's memory should be revered she spoke as though there was a danger that it might be reviled — as though she felt called upon to protect his memory from odium. Ah, if you hold a secret, Marion Oakburn, you will know how to preserve it inviolate," reflected Paxton.

There was nothing more to be done now, and the police sergeant stated that his men would guard the office until morning, and that nothing should be disturbed until the inquest, which would be held the following day.

Mr. Garrison assured Marion of his friendship and that she might rely on him for any needed assistance.

At such a time as this, of sorrow and affliction, the most kind and sympathetic words seem hollow and meaningless, and Marion was in such a state of doubt and trouble that she scarcely heard the broker's kindly remarks.

The office was left in charge of two police officers, who were to watch beside the dead until the dawn, and Marion crept, cold and shivering, to her room, while Judith Kredge sought her own apartment.

But there was no sleep for the cashier's daughter that night. She sank wearily upon her couch, and there remained thinking a thousand troubled thoughts, experiencing a thousand doubts and the torture of one great dread.

Day was at hand, and the light of the lamp was turning pale, while the morning mists began to disappear, and the sunlight fell upon the window panes, when at last Marion started up.

She knelt as if in prayer, and while her back was turned to the door, it opened noiselessly and the evil face of Judith Kredge peered in upon her for a moment.

When Marion arose she said in self-communion:

"I will not turn back now; I do not wish to do so. Cheerfully will I make any sacrifice that may be demanded, and I am sustained by the thought that in all I have done, I have been actuated by a noble purpose.

"But circumstances have arisen of which I had no thought. Oh, what adverse fate directed Stuart Harland to leave the house this night of all others, in the way that he has done? I can only hope that he will explain his conduct so as to exonerate himself from all suspicion. But what if circumstantial evidence should prove powerful enough to endanger his life——"

Under traversed her frame from head to foot.

"I trust—I pray it may not come to such a crisis as that," she added, presently.

At that moment Marion heard a faint sound outside her chamber door, and, suspecting that some one was listening there, she glided to the door and suddenly threw it open.

She came face to face with Judith Kredge, who was crouching at the keyhole.

Marion's face flushed, and her dark eyes flashed, as she cried imperatively:

"So you are eavesdropping. What do you mean by such conduct? Begone, instantly! I shall not retain you in my service after the present week."

For a moment Judith Kredge shrank away with a guilty look on her repulsive features, but suddenly she turned upon Marion fiercely and clutched her arm.

"Look at me, girl!" she hissed. "Oh, yes, they killed your father. I know the truth. You are in my power; in my power, my proud beauty! Ha! Ha! Now discharge me if you dare!"

Judith Kredge flung Marion from her, and crossing the hall entered her own room.

Marion reeled back with a frightful expression on her face, and she muttered:

"What shall I do, what shall I do! This is worse than all the rest."

Meanwhile, when Jason Garrison left his office in company with the police sergeant and Detective Paxton at the conclusion of the investigation, at the scene of the crime, he repaired at once to his own home, where his daughter Edna, who had been informed of the murder when her father left the house, anxiously awaited his return.

Jason Garrison was a widower, and all his affection centered on his only child—his daughter Edna, who returned his love with a wealth of filial devotion.

The broker admitted himself to his residence by means of a latch-key, but in the hall he staggered like a drunken man as the thought came back to his mind with renewed force that he was ruined—that even his home, which sheltered his beloved child, he could not call his own.

Crushed and broken, he groped his way to the library, but Edna, listening at her door, heard his familiar steps and came down to meet him.

The eyes of love are prematurely sharp, and Edna saw at a glance that some great misfortune had befallen her father. He sank into a chair and Edna knelt beside him and sought to induce him to tell her all.

Reluctantly then he told the story of the murder and the robbery, but he did not mention the terrible suspecion which had fallen upon Stuart Harland, for he wished to spare his daughter the cruel intelligence as long as possible.

"And so I am ruined," said the broker bitterly in conclusion.

"Surely it is not so serious as that. Your creditors will grant you time?" Edna asked.

"No, no. You do not know them. My pressing creditors are Pratt and Weeks. They will be merciless. I had hoped the sale of my Colorado property would enable me to realize more than sufficient to tide over this financial crisis, for as I have told you gold has been discovered in many parts of Gilpin County, where my land is situated. I had counted on receiving the money for the property, eighty thousand dollars—the price almost agreed upon with a Denver firm—this very week. In a letter which came to hand on Thursday last, my agent informed me that he expected to close the sale and remit me a draft by the twenty-third, that is to-day. But this evening I received another communication from my agent stating that the proposed sale could not be consummated, for prospectors, who had secretly explored my claim, reported that there was no trace of gold on it. This disappointment means more than you can dream. I am in a situation of peril which I dare not confess, even to you, my child," said the broker.

Vainly Edna tried to induce her father to confide in her. He would say no more.

"I remember how that man Pratt looked at me with his bold, impudent eyes, when I looked at him. His glance made me shiver," she said.

"Coward that I was. He demanded an introduction, and while I knew he was not fit to make your acquaintance, fear made me weak enough to present him to you," answered the broker.

"And I am in this villain's power. Pratt and Weeks have deceived me; set traps for me and involved me in speculations which were swindles concocted with the cunning of arch-fiends to evade all legal consequences. These men find their victims among the oldest operators on the street, and my experience did not save me," he added.

"But the stolen money may be recovered. You have not told me. Does not suspicion rest on anybody?" asked Edna.

Her father hesitated.

"Speak, father. Why do you seem so agitated?" she said.

"I would spare you pain and anxiety. The worst for you, my child, is yet to come."

"I do not comprehend; what do you mean?"

In a few words he told of the suspicion which the police sergeant had declared against Stuart Harland.

Edna was justly indignant and she treated the accusation with scorn.

"Stuart will explain the cause of his midnight departure. When he is heard, a shadow of suspicion will not remain upon him," she said, with a loving woman's sublime faith.

"I should tell you also that Paxton, the detective, did not agree with the police sergeant. In the face of all the circumstances which caused the sergeant to suspect Stuart, he declared his belief in the young man's innocence. Paxton is a wonderful man, and I am sure he has formed some theory which he believes will overthrow the hypothesis of the police sergeant. In that thought I find a hope for Stuart's salvation, even though circumstances should further combine to tighten the coil of suspicion about him," the broker said.

Father and daughter were parted for the night, but like Marion Oakburn, Jason Garrison was sleepless. He paced his room until dawn and once he muttered:

"I have taken an awful risk and yet profited nothing. I was mad. The risk of discovery remains suspended over my head like a sword hung by a thread."

He struck his breast and paused abruptly in his rapid walk as he said, "Can Stuart have suspected me?"

At that moment the young man of whom he spoke was in the custody of detectives who had arrested him on a railway train.

Circumstances were combining and developments were transpiring which were destined to make the secret of John Oakburn's murder one of the most remarkable, mysterious, and interesting of modern detective cases.

The Lake George Flats.

When a vessel sinks in the channel through Lake George Flats, near Sault Ste. Marie, there is plenty of trouble. The value of the vessels delayed by a wreck there recently is estimated at $14,000,000, and that of their cargoes $4,000,000. At one time seventy lake steam vessels were anchored on the east side of the blockade and sixty on the west side, and a new channel had to be cut through the flats to allow them to continue their way. Four dredges worked day and night to make a channel 700 feet in length, 60 feet in width, and 20 feet in depth. It is said that the only way to prevent accidents like that which caused the wreck is to limit the speed of vessels in the channel. There was the same trouble in the St. Clair Flats until men were stationed at the ends of the channel to time the vessels.—New York Sun.

Same Thing.

When the late King Charles of Wurtemburg was yet crown prince, and he was ordered to become engaged to the Russian Grand Duchess Olga, he was shown a portrait of her. After regarding it intently, he exclaimed: "How daringly they have flattered her! The hair is too abundant, the eyes are too brilliant, and the complexion too dainty." The courtiers asked, in astonishment: "But does your royal highness know the grand duchess?" "I do not know her," was the reply, "but I know the court painters."

LETTERS MADE PUBLIC

Concerning the Seal Question Between the United States and Canada.

The correspondence which has passed between Sir Wilfred Laurier, the Canadian premier, and General Foster, the American negotiator, since the Washington conference, last month, has been made public. It consists of letters. In the first dated Ottawa, November 24, Sir Wilfred says he is willing to enter at once upon a review of the whole seal question, but declines, however, to suspend sealing meantime on the ground that the fleet would be dissipated entirely.

The other letter is addressed to Sir Wilfred, and dated Washington, December, 4. General Foster says Sir Wilfred's letter is a declination of his proposition and a renewal of the Canadian proposition at the conference and the president declines to revise his decision on that point.

Dollar and a Half Wheat.

At Chicago, Geo. B. French, the recognized agent of the Leiter interest in wheat, says in regard to the wheat situation: "I will say that I think that speculators are watching the local conditions and entirely ignoring the legitimate position. As soon as the deficiency of supplies and the urgency of the demand becomes more apparent, I will not be a bit surprised to see May wheat at $1.50."

More Wages Reduced.

The directors of the Amoskeag Manufacturing company, of Manchester, N. H., at a meeting held at the Boston office of the company Friday, voted to reduce the wages of its employes about 10 per cent on January 1. The Amoskeag plant is one of the largest engaged in the manufacture of cotton in the country, and employs between 8,000 and 9,000 people.

Signals Failed, Death Results.

A collision occurred on the Greenwood branch of the Missouri Pacific, ten miles from Fort Smith, Ark., in which Mrs. E. A. Hollenback, of Jenny Lind, was instantly killed, and four passengers injured. A coal train was following the passenger, and the latter was stopped to cool off a hot box. The torpedo signals failed to do their work, and the engine of the coal train telescoped the rear coach of the passenger.

ALABAMA GLEANINGS.

Pertinent Paragraphs of the Late News of the State.

Conference in Session.

The South Alabama Conference is now in session at Union Springs, Bishop Galloway presiding. There is a full attendance of ministers.

Assessment Rejected.

At a special term of the commissioners' court of Coosa county, the assessments of Tax Commissioner Walden against the ginners of the county on the toll cotton received was rejected.

School Census Settled.

The school census for Lowndes county, about which there has been so much comment as to the enormous figures as compared with former years, has been retaken, and found to be 13,736, instead of 20,654, as was sent in by the county superintendent of education of that county.

An Electric Light Plant.

At a meeting of the city council of Birmingham a resolution was adopted creating a special committee, composed of one aldermen from each ward, with the mayor as ex-officio chairman, to examine into the cost of an electric light plant, with a view to the city erecting one and operating it on its own account.

Murdered for His Money.

Gilmore Edwards, lamplighter in the Louisville & Nashville yards at Boyles, four miles north of Birmingham, was murdered and robbed by an unknown person. Edwards was making a tour through the yards when he was shot from the darkness. The robber failed to get $41 which Edwards had sewed up in his watch pocket.

A Good Showing.

John Case, the new tax collector of Mobile county, paid into the state treasury $20,000 collections since December 1, state taxes, which, added to former remittances of this year's collections, makes the sum of $32,000. Mr. E. B. Lott, his predecessor, paid into the treasury for the same period last year $8,497, a difference in favor of Case of $23,503.

Decree of Foreclosure.

In the United States court at Birmingham, Judge Boarman rendered a decree of foreclosure and sale in the case of the Central Trust company, of New York, vs. the United States Car company. The court appointed J. A. W. Smith special master, who is ordered to advertise the sale, if the amount of the indebtedness, $2,019,552.48, is not paid in ten days.

Found Beside Railroad Track.

Late Friday night C. R. Hicks, a railroad man, was found bruised and unconscious beside the railroad tracks, near Montgomery. When he had been resuscitated he related that he had endeavored to catch an outgoing south bound freight on the Louisville and Nashville railroad with $395 in cash in his pockets. His money was gone and he could not account for its loss or his injury.

Another Candidate.

Prof. Edward L. Patton has announced as a candidate for state superintendent of education from Elmore county, subject to the action of the democratic party. Professor Patton has for two years identified himself as specially interested in reforming our school system. He was among the first to call for a constitutional convention for the purpose of bettering the public school system. For two years his articles on educational topics have appeared in many of the state papers.

Former Sheriff Short in Account.

Examiner of Public Accounts Purifoy Thursday filed his report with the governor on his investigation of the sheriff's office of Lee county under the administration of W. B. Gibson, late sheriff of that county, which shows a shortage of almost $2,000, summed up as follows: Fees for removing prisoners, collected from defendants on conviction, $85.99. For solicitors' fees unaccounted for, $53. For feeding prisoners in jail, and to which he was not legally entitled $1,642. Total, $1,790.99.

Thieves Secured $900.

One of the boldest and most sensational robberies that every occurred in that section took place eight miles below Abbeville Thursday night. At about 1 o'clock a man called at the house of Westley Bodiford and claimed that his mule had run away and severely injured his companion, and asked for some one to assist him. Oscar Etheridge, a young man living with Mr. Bodiford, responded to the call and followed the man. When about three hundred yards below the house the first one dropped behind and another man sprang out of the bushes and told him to hold Etheridge up. One placed a pistol in Etheridge's face and the other tied his hands. They then led him back to the house, and, waking old man Bodiford, told him that they wanted the money in his safe. The safe was opened and the men secured $900.

Cotton Growers' Convention.

The governor has appointed the following named gentlemen delegates to the Southern Cotton Growers' Convention at Memphis next week:

Messrs. W. H. Lawson, M. J. Scott, Joel Barnett, Jess Adams, Montgomery; Major Thomas W. Oliver, Mitylene; T. P. Hudmon, Opelika; Colonel N. N. Clements, Tuskaloosa; J, R. McLendon, Naftel; J. C. Killebrew, Newton; C. A. B. Edwards, Cittenden Mills; John Minge, Faunsdale; W. P. Campbell, Florence; Isaac O. Mason, Columbiana; William M. Hammond, Gadsden; Captain C. C. Swope, Courtland; M. B. Hampton, Leighton; W. R. Prior, Quid Nunc; Dr. Henry McDonald, General Samuel H. Moore, Huntsville; Henry Warton, Athens; J. C. Hanes, Sheffield.

DR. CURRY'S REPORT.

Recognizes the Ability of One of Alabama's Educational Lights.

In his annual report to the trustees of the Peabody educational fund, Dr. J. L. M. Curry, the general agent, wrote under date of October 1, 1897, in part, as follows:

"The Florence Normal College has lost its vigorous and able president, James K. Powers, LL. D., who has been transferred to the State University. Under his administration the college has had a remarkable growth, and now numbers 310 pupils. In a letter to the governor, Dr. Mayo says: "'I can honestly say that, in all my experience in the south, I have seen no state normal which seems to me to have more completely grasped the true idea of that style of school, or more completely carried it out, than the one at Florence. I have never seen in any state as much good work done for so small a sum of money as I see here at the state normal.'"

The Florence Times, speaking of Dr. Powers, says: In his success at Florence there is promise, very great promise, of success at the University under Dr. J. K. Powers. The Normal College succeeded by doing what it was intended to do. It did not attempt to turn out Bachelors or Masters or Doctors. It trained teachers. To that end all of its energies and resources were devoted. Its teachers were selected with special reference to the work they were to do. They were specialists. Again, none of the funds were wasted. Every dollar was made to bring the best possible return, either in outfit or service. To do all this required great industry and patient attention to detail.

It is confidently expected that the same qualities will command like success at the University. It may require time, it will, to accomplish all that is desired. And when the ideals of the present are accomplished facts, there will doubtless be others in advance to aim for. This is the condition of all development. Just as a Normal was developed here to meet the conditions in Alabama, an University may be expected to adapt itself to meet the conditions incident to its environment.

ALABAMA'S PRIDE.

The Girls' Industrial School at Montevallo Doing a Great Work.

The Girls' Industrial School at Montevallo, under the guidance of Capt. H. C. Reynolds, is doing the greatest work of any school in the South. Pupils in the dress-making department are actually making money, besides carrying on their studies. Over 325 pupils are enrolled and there is still room for a few more. We learn fifty-eight dollars pays all expenses from the 1st of January. This is one of the few state institutions where the people get the direct benefit from appropriations. The rich, the poor, the high and the low, all patronize it and are satisfied. Captain Reynolds has just returned from Washington, where he has been for some time working in the interest of a land appropriation for the school.

China Gives Way to Germany.

A special dispatch from Shanghai asserts that China will acquiesce in Germany's retention of Kiao-Chou. Russia and France are irritated at Germany's precipitancy in thus prematurely disclosing her plans to England and Japan in a manner likely, says the dispatch, to defeat the objects in view.

Cause of Much Misery.

Of all microbes the animalcule of la grippe is the ugliest to look upon. Ma[gnified] to the size of the picture [below] shown, this microbe has the appearance of a new kind of bug—all legs and body. Suffering mortals who have been sneezing, sniffling and mopping watery eyes will be interested to see the cause of their trouble. This microbe is industrious, if not pretty, and he will continue to be much in evidence unless all present indications fail.

A GRIPPE MICROBE.

A New Jersey paper prints a picture of a young woman who was bitten nearly to death by mosquitoes. We cannot escape the impression that these mosquitoes sometimes display very poor taste.

Nature never intended woman should be tortured with pain, one thing that makes her whole life To fear or shrink from childbirth is a sin—not by the laws of society, but by the laws of hereditary—for the mother's fear reacts upon her offspring. Too Frequent Menstruation.

When the monthly flow occurs at the proper period and is otherwise normal, the patient suffers little or no pain; but if it occur too often, continue too long, or be too profuse, it induces debility, cold extremities, weak back, and general debility. In treating these troubles moderate exercise and free open air are essential; the digestive organs should be regulated with Dr. M. A. Simmons Liver Medicine, and the happiest results follow the use of Dr. Simmons Liver Medicine and Squaw Vine Wine in strengthening the system so that too frequent menstruation, or suppression from debility will be corrected.

Outrunning a Train.

By way of satirizing the running arrangements of slow railroads, absurd stories are somtimes told of dogs tied behind trains and keeping up with them; but a true story of this sort is undoubtedly a novelty. Such a story, seemingly well authenticated, comes from the department of the Lower Alps, in France:

The railway which runs from Manosque to Brillane crosses a hilly district, and is somewhat tortuous. Recently a lady who took the train at Manosque had been accompanied to the station by her dog. The dog was left outside, but the train had scarcely started when she saw that the faithful creature was in full pursuit, and trying to outrun the locomotive. He was soon distanced, of course, but when the train drew up at Volx, some time afterward, the lady was astonished to see the dog come panting up.

He had taken a short cut across the hills, and overhauled the train in this way. Nevertheless, the train started again without him, the dog still following. He repeated his tactics, and arrived at Brillanne, after a run of more than ten miles, a few seconds behind the train.

This time the dog's mistress endeavored to get him into her compartment. He had run out upon the second track, when a train coming in the opposite direction struck him, and killed him instantly.

The performance of the faithful creature had excited great admiration among the passengers, and there was much grief at the tragical end of his pursuit.

CULTURE OF GINSENG.

Ginseng has not been successfully grown under ordinary cultivation. It is of so wild a nature that when removed from the natural beds in the woods it refuses to grow, just as some wild animals refuse to eat in confinement, and starve. It may, however, be propagated by culture in woodland of the right kind, that is, with a moist soil, shaded by a northern exposure, and having a good depth of black vegetable soil. It grows from cuttings of the roots with ease, but so far the sowing of the seed has not been found successful. It may be, however, that by choosing the right soil and locality, the seed will grow.—New York Times.

THE COLT'S TEETH.

In the colt the incisor and the first three molars on each jaw are always temporary and replaced by permanent teeth sometime during the animal's life. The last three molars are always permanent and are never replaced. The teeth make their appearance as follows: The two middle incisors and the first three molars make their appearance before or some days after birth, the first laterals four or six weeks after birth, second laterals, or corner teeth, six or nine months after birth, the fourth molar (first permanent ones) is cut at from ten to twelve months of age.

At two and one-half years the middle incisors and the first and second molars are replaced. At the same time the fifth molar is cut. At three and one-half the first lateral incisors and the third molar are replaced. At four and one-half the corner teeth are replaced, and the sixth molar is cut. In case of a male the canine teeth are also replaced at four and one-half.—Farm, Field and Fireside.

PROFIT IN BREEDING SOWS.

After every large corn crop there is always a brisk demand for young pigs the following spring. Farmers who have witnessed many such times in their lives always calculate to save a goodly number of breeding sows to be mated early in December, and farrow the last of March or first of April. The period of gestation in a sow is about sixteen weeks, though it sometimes overruns that two or three days. Whether pork is cheap or dear, breeding sows will always be a source of profit when their pigs are sold while still small. The most rapid growth of the pig, and that which costs the least, is made before it is 100 pounds weight. Such pigs will also sell for more per pound than those that are larger. It is not uncommon when pigs are dear for purchasers to pay very nearly as much for the growing pig as it will sell for when fattened. The sow that is bearing pigs will also sell for much more than her value for pork. The large, coarse sows are best for breeding, but they should be mated with a small and fine boned boar. By thus breeding the pigs will be kept easily, and grow to a larger size than pigs that are pure bred on both sides. Boston Cultivator.

It is very poisonous, and loses its virtue in proportion to the amount of dirt present, hence the house, woodwork, etc., should be cleaned before applying the disinfectant, and the manure covered with lime. The report contains an interesting paper on three outbreaks of fowl cholera and a hog-cholera-like disease in pigeons.

The most important feature is the report on diphtheria in fowls. Dr. Moore holds that the so-called fowl roup, influenza, and sometimes cholera, are one and the same. Highway Robbery.

Dr. Homer S. Bruel, returning last Thursday evening from a visit to a patient in Chambers county, came upon a white man and a negro by the road near Camp Hill. The white man hailed the doctor and asked him to stop and see if he could do anything for the negro, who was lying down, and who the man said was nearly dead. Dr. Bruel dismounted and as he stooped over the negro to examine him the white man struck and knocked him down. He sprang up and resisted his assailant until disabled by a severe cut in the right arm followed by a shot in the left side near the heart. The robbers then took what money he had, about $25, and left him. He got upon his horse and rode to Camp Hill, where he received the best possible care. His recovery is regarded as doubtful. It was too dark at the time of the assault for him to recognize the robbers.
